Martin Luna's Family Circle Grows At St. Eugene Parish

By PAUL FREDETTE

Correspondent

Last August, the N.C. Office of Minority Health reported the number of Hispanic and Latino births in Buncombe County rose by 28 percent over four years (1990-94), and the number of Hispanic and Latino students rose 135 percent. In this same time frame, the number of migrant or seasonal farm workers in the area remained virtually unchanged. Yet many people in the greater Asheville area remain largely unaware of the growing "resident" Hispanic population around them. In most instances, the perception focuses exclusively on migrant farm workers.

This no longer surprises Martin Luna and his wife Christine, members of St. Eugene parish, who have been "catalytic," according to Father Frank Cancro, in their care of the growing Hispanic community here in recent years. They themselves were surprised to realize how many Hispanics were in the area at the time of their wedding in 1987.

Since moving to the U.S. in 1985, Luna, who was born in La Barca, Jalisco, Mexico, has become the "Padrino" of sorts to an increasing number of Hispanic parishioners at St. Eugene Church. Christine, a native of Miami who grew up in Asheville, shares a Columbian heritage from her mother and is also bilingual. Together they expend much of their time,

Cardinal Calls Terminal Cancer 'God's Special Gift'

By BILL BRITT

CHICAGO (CNS) — Less than 48 hours after learning he was dying of liver cancer, Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago called it "God's special gift to me."

"I have been told that it is terminal and my life expectancy is one year or less," he said at a press conference Aug. 30 at the archdiocesan Pastoral Center.

The news of the recurrence of Cardinal Bernardin's cancer — for which he underwent surgery in June 1995 — prompted expressions of sorrow by other religious leaders.

"I have been assured that I still have some quality time left," Cardinal Bernardin said at the press conference. He pledged to "keep a full schedule for as long as I can" and to "keep everyone informed of my health."

The day after the press conference, Cardinal Bernardin participated in a previously planned anointing service designed to build on his ministry to those suffering from cancer. The Aug. 31 service at St. Barbara Parish in Brookfield was the second of three such services; Cardinal Bernardin was the first person anointed.

The cardinal, who turned 68 in April, said blood tests done only three weeks earlier had indicated he was cancer-free. But the spread of pancreatic cancer to his liver was discovered during tests done Aug. 28 in preparation for back surgery in September.

Five tumors, each one to two inches in diameter, were found on the cardinal's liver. According to doctors, this stage of the disease is advanced and inoperable. The planned back surgery was canceled.

Flanked by his auxiliary bishops, Cardinal Bernardin told a crammed gallery of journalists and photographers that he would begin a different form of chemotherapy called Gemzar, or gemcitabine, immediately. "If successful," he said, "this therapy may increase my time somewhat but it will not effect a cure."

"We can look at death as an enemy or a friend," he said. "As a person of faith, I see death as a friend, as the transition from earthly life to life eternal."

Bishop Anthony M. Pilla of Cleveland, president of the U.S. bishops' twin conferences, said it was "with great sorrow that I have heard from Cardinal Bernardin about the recurrence of his cancer."

In an Aug. 30 statement issued in Washington, Bishop Pilla called the cardinal "a great human being and a great Christian."

He said Cardinal Bernardin "has endured this suffering with great faith, hope and love; and — true pastor that he is — he has used his time of sickness to reach out and comfort other victims of cancer."

"He will be constantly in our prayers," Bishop Pilla said.

In Los Angeles, Cardinal Roger M. Mahony said Aug. 30 that Cardinal Bernardin's "spiritual fortitude will be an inner strength to so many people across the country who, possibly even today themselves, received similar news from their doctors."

It is providential, he said in a statement, that Cardinal Bernardin, "so well known for his healing, mediating and reconciling efforts," recently announced "the Common Ground initiative to bring about greater unity within the Catholic community across the country."

Cardinal Mahony expressed confidence that "this latest initiative will serve as a clear testament to (Cardinal Bernardin's) lifelong work to bring about harmony and peace among all peoples, especially within the church."

Linda Pieczynski, president of the Chicago-based Call to Action, praised Cardinal Bernardin's "openness and grace in dealing with this very painful discovery."

"I hope people will take the time to reflect on how blessed we are to have him in Chicago as a great leader and to appreciate his deep love of the church and concern as a pastor for all people," she said in a statement Aug. 30.

Bernardin "a loyal friend of the Jewish community and an instrumental figure in the furthering of Catholic-Jewish relations."

"To use an old Yiddish term," he said in a statement Aug. 30, "he is truly a 'mensch,' an entirely decent human being. We look forward to working with the cardinal and supporting him in any possible way we can."

At his press conference, Cardinal Bernardin said the future of the Catholic Common Ground Project, a call for dialogue within the church, "is not dependent on me." He said the project, launched earlier in August, will go forward and he will continue to be a part of it for as long as he can.

All questions of a successor are premature, he said, adding that he had informed Rome of his condition. He would not comment on whether he would request a coadjutor, a bishop appointed as a special assistant who then would have automatic right of succession.

"I hoped throughout my ministry, my life, that I would leave a community that would be more gentle, more loving, more compassionate," he said.

As the disease progresses, the cardinal likely will lose his energy and appetite and eventually be bedridden. But he said he wants to stay active and productive.

"I would like to go to Rome again," he said. "And to my family's home in northern Italy."

In closing, he asked for unity, community and prayer.

He asked the priests and people of Chicago to "pray that I may continue to serve you and the broader church with understanding, compassion and fidelity."

He also asked members of the media — with whom he said he enjoyed "a good professional relationship" during his 14 years as archbishop of Chicago — to pray for him. "And, in return," he said, "I will pray for you and your loved ones."

Since I was diagnosed as having pancreatic cancer last June and, later, various spinal difficulties, I have kept everyone fully apprised of my health. In keeping with that policy I come to you again today to give you an update.

On Wednesday of this week, examinations conducted at Loyola Medical Center indicated that the cancer has returned, this time in the liver. I have been told that it is terminal and my life expectancy is one year or less. I will indeed begin a different form of chemotherapy entitled Gemzar (gemcitabine). If successful, this therapy may increase my time somewhat but it will not effect a cure.

In light of this latest diagnosis, the back surgery for the spinal stenosis has been canceled. Such surgery is usually done only when the prospects for life are more promising. Moreover, were the surgery to take place, it would delay the chemotherapy.

I have been assured that I still have some quality time left. My prayer is that I will use whatever time is left in a positive way, that is, a way that will be of benefit to the priests and people I have been called to serve, as well as to my own spiritual well-being.

Over the past year, I have counseled the cancer patients with whom I have been in touch (the prayer list now numbers over 600) to place themselves entirely in the hands of the Lord. I have personally always tried to do that; now I have done so with greater conviction and trust than ever before. While I know that, humanly speaking, I will have to deal with difficult moments, I can say in all sincerity that I am at peace. I consider this as God's special gift to me at this moment in my life.

There is another thought I have shared with my friends who have cancer and I would like to share it with you; indeed it follows from what I have just said. We can look at death as an enemy or a friend. If we see it as an enemy, death causes anxiety and fear. We tend to go into a state of denial. But if we see it as a friend, our attitude is truly different. As a person of faith, I see death as a friend, as the transition from earthly life to life eternal.

In the coming months I will continue to serve the archdiocese in the way I have in the past. I will keep a full schedule for as long as I can. Moreover, as appropriate, I will keep everyone informed of my health.

In conclusion, I wish to speak two brief words. First, to my priests and people whom I love so much. Pray that I may continue to serve you and the broader church with understanding, compassion and fidelity. Through our solidarity and mutual support and trust, may we give a credible witness to God's love for all of us.

My second word is to you, the members of the media. We have enjoyed a good professional relationship in the years I have been archbishop of Chicago — and this will continue. Now I ask that you stand with me personally. Whatever your religious affiliation may be, I ask that you say a prayer for me. And, in return, I will pray for you and your loved ones.

Cornelius and Cyprian

These two martyrs promoted a policy of mercy toward Christians who had fallen away during the persecution of Decius. Cyprian, a bishop and friend of Pope Cornelius, supported the pope's condemnation of Novatian. The pope died in exile in 253.

Cyprian was beheaded in 258 for his refusal to worship pagan gods. Their feast is Sept. 16.

Mother Teresa Eager To Leave Hospital

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa has been pressing doctors to release her from the hospital, but still needs time to regain her strength, her doctors said Sept. 3.

One of the doctors treating Mother Teresa, Dr. Sudipta Sen, said the Nobel laureate's release from the hospital "depends on how long we take to make her a little bit stronger."

Mother Teresa remained in intensive care after a two-week struggle with an irregular heartbeat and malaria, as well as a lung infection caused by a respirator that helped her to breathe during her hospitalization.

Sen said that the lung infection was "nothing to worry about" and was being treated with antibiotics. An X-ray taken Sept. 1 revealed no new lung infections.

Doctors were debating the use of electric shock treatment to stabilize Mother Teresa's heart rhythm. However, Sen said an irregular heartbeat would not prevent her from returning to the Calcutta headquarters of her order, the Missionaries of Charity.

"There are many heart patients who move around with irregular rhythm," he said.

"She is pressing us every day to release her," said Sen, director of Woodlands Nursing Home, where Mother Teresa has been hospitalized since Aug. 20. "It is virtually a tug of war every day, and every day we are telling her that we are going to release her tomorrow."

An altar and small statue of Jesus were provided for Mother Teresa inside the intensive care unit.

"She gets tremendous power from the prayers," Sen said.

Plans to move Mother Teresa out of the intensive care unit were postponed because of cardiac irregularity, her doctors said Aug. 30.

"Her heart is still fragile and cardiac irregularity is still persisting," Dr. Asim Kumar Bardham told Reuters, the British news agency.

"The chances of her being discharged within a week are very high," Sen said Aug. 30.

Archbishop Henry D'Souza of Calcutta visited Mother Teresa Aug. 29 and said: "She was sitting in a chair when I entered and seemed happy. She said, 'I want to go home, there is so much to do.' I'd say she's well enough."

Dr. Dinamani Banerjee, a third doctor treating Mother Teresa, said: "She is talking every five minutes. She is saying the same thing over and over again: 'I have a lot of work. Now there is no need for me to stay here.'"

Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York told Catholic New York, the archdiocesan newspaper, that he sent a fax message to associates of Mother Teresa in Calcutta saying that she "does not have my permission to die."

Mother Teresa was admitted to the hospital Aug. 20 with a fever. Doctors discovered she had malaria, and at one point her heartbeat was irregular for a few seconds before doctors corrected it. She also received antibiotics for the lung infection.

Mother Teresa, who founded the Missionaries of Charity, celebrated her 86th birthday in the hospital Aug. 26. On that day, she sat up in bed.

"It's almost like a resurrection," said Missionary of Charity Sister Andrea.

Meanwhile, Father Eduard le Joly, spiritual adviser to Mother Teresa's order for more than 30 years, said the possibility of a new superior general will be discussed when 160 of the order's nuns from around the world meet in Calcutta in early October.

Father le Joly said church law allows a superior general to be elected only once.

"Mother Teresa has been re-elected several times but each time the Holy See gave permission for her to continue. This time 'round, the Vatican may not give permission," he said.

Bishop To Lead Marian Pilgrimage In France

CHARLOTTE — A diocesan pilgrimage to Marian shrines of France will be led by Bishop William G. Curlin in April 1997.

Beginning in Paris, the 10-day trip winds south to Lourdes, concludes with a tour across the Pyrenees Mountains, stops in the tiny country of Andorra, and includes a visit to Our Lady of Montserrat in Spain. Travelers will conclude their journey in Barcelona.

The Marian shrines include those of the Immaculate Conception at Lourdes; and Liseux, where St. Therese of the Little Flower lived and entered the Carmelite Order; and Rue de Bac Chapel with the incorrupt body of St. Catherine Laboure.

Ample time is given to explore magnificent churches such as Sante Chapelle, often called one of the greatest architectural masterpieces in the Western world, the 12th century Gothic cathedral of Chartre, and the grand cathedral of Paris Notre Dame.

A major focus of the pilgrimage is the two-day visit to Lourdes, a special place of prayer, and one of Bishop Curlin's favorite holy sites. Every spring, the bishop travels with Knights of Malta, taking dozens of sick to the healing waters. On arrival in Lourdes, pilgrims will participate in the candlelight procession. Time is allocated for individual prayer and devotions.

The 10-day pilgrimage is $2,350. This price includes round-trip airfare (from Charlotte or Washington, D.C.), first class hotels (except in Lourdes where superior tourist class will be utilized), continental breakfast and dinner daily, all entrance fees, luggage handling and all transfers, personal guides aboard motorcoaches along with local guides where needed, and TGV train service from Paris to Lourdes. Plans call for a maximum of 100 pilgrims, who will depart April 7 and return April 17.

For more information on Marian Shrines with Bishop Curlin, call Joann Keane, (704) 331-1731.

Immaculate Conception Basilica in Lourdes was built on the rock above the grotto where Bernadette experienced apparitions of the Blessed Virgin. The basilica was completed in 1870, and is one of the pilgrimage sites for the Spring 1997 pilgrimage.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Says Divine Motherhood Consecrated Mary To Christ's Mission

Dear brothers and sisters,

The Church has always professed belief in the perpetual virginity of Mary. In the first centuries of Christianity, this was expressed by the term "ever virgin" used to describe Mary. The church has traditionally presented Mary as a virgin "before, during and after" giving birth. Confirming this doctrine, the Second Vatican Council states that "the birth of our Lord ... did not diminish his mother's virginal integrity but sanctified it" ("Lumen Gentium," 57). The Gospels themselves imply that Mary remained a virgin even after Jesus' birth: for there is no indication that her choice to remain a virgin, which had been clearly expressed at the time of the Annunciation, had changed. The fact that Jesus, dying on the cross, entrusted the beloved disciple to Mary as a son (cf. Jn 19:26) seems to indicate that Mary had no other children. Indeed, when the Gospel texts mention Jesus' "brothers and sisters," the reference is to cousins or other close relatives, according to the language and custom of Jesus' time.

The singular privilege of Mary's perpetual virginity is the result of the divine motherhood which totally consecrated her to Christ's mission of salvation.

I am pleased to greet the English-speaking visitors present today, especially those from England, Scotland, Ireland and the United States: May your pilgrimage to Rome renew you in faith and strengthen you in Christian fervor and zeal. Upon all of you I invoke abundant grace and peace in Jesus Christ the Lord.

Pope Praises Eastern Christianity's Generous Cultural Influence

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (CNS) — Humanity is indebted to Eastern Christianity for the influence it has had on art, architecture and literature, Pope John Paul II said.

From the church buildings that grace Eastern Europe's cities to the literary masterpieces of Feodor Dostoevski, the Orthodox faith is reflected in culture and witnesses to the beauty and truth of God, the pope said Sept. 1 during his midday Angelus address.

Pope John Paul said the same "great alliance of faith and culture" is evident at the Benedictine's Pannonhalma Abbey, which he was to visit during a Sept. 6-7 trip to Hungary.

The pope was to help celebrate the 1,000th anniversary of the abbey, which he called a "prestigious center of western monasticism on the border with the Eastern Christianity."

During the Angelus in the courtyard of his summer residence, the pope prayed that all Christians would discover how to "deeply incarnate" their faith in their cultures.

A dialogue about the influence of Orthodoxy on East European culture and of Catholicism on West European culture is another way in which members of the two churches can move toward their hoped-for unity, he said.

Pope To Highlight France's Catholic Legacy

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — France's Catholic legacy and the future of the faithful are to be among the main points during Pope John Paul II's upcoming trip to that country. The schedule for the Sept. 19-22 visit, as released by the Vatican Aug. 27, includes an address to young people, a meeting with young couples and their children and prayer before the relics of a French saint. One point in the schedule, a visit to the place where Frankish King Clovis was baptized, has been the source of controversy. Various groups are planning to boycott the pope's visit, and some Catholics are demanding to be taken off the rolls in protest of the mixing of church and state in the papal trip.

Seductive Substitutes

Dr. Gerald G. May, in his book Addiction and Grace, points out that addiction describes the compulsive means we use to calm our restlessness. "Spiritually, addiction is a deep-seated form of idolatry. The objects of our addiction become our false gods. They are what we worship." (pg. 13)

In our Christian journey, oftentimes, we join the ranks of the seekers in quest of a spirituality which will satisfy their longings. Hence we seek the proliferation of programs of meditation, psychological self-improvement, new-age philosophies, and new religious movements that offer methods to contact and get guidance from the transcendent realm.

The spiritual culture around us is very reminiscent of the words of St. Paul: "...following their own desires and insatiable curiosity, will accumulate teachers and will stop listening to the truth and be diverted to myths." (2 Timothy 4: 3-4)

The prophets were constantly warning God's people against the idols of their neighbors. There was a natural desire in the people to want to be just like everyone else and worship the same gods. We have the same condition in our own day. It is hard to be set apart from the rest of the world for religious reasons. The temptation is great to blend in and have the same attitudes and values as the rest of society. Our belief that salvation lies only in Jesus Christ and Him crucified (1 Corinthians 1: 23), whom we are to imitate (Luke 9: 23), sets us at variance from the rest of the world, even to the point of making us look foolish and invite its ridicule, if not persecution.

The psalmist derides the idols of his day, saying: "...They have mouths but speak not; they have eyes but see not; they have ears but hear not; nor is there breath in the mouths." (Psalm 135). The idols of our day, however, are constantly in our face with their incessant demands. They do have speech, sight, hearing, and are interactive. In many cases the talking idol is enshrined in living rooms and bedrooms proclaiming a constant litany and catechism of the world and chronicling the advance of it. Unfortunately, our beliefs may be shaped by the media rather than by the teaching of the church.

It takes consistent prayer and contemplation of the Word of God to stay in the state of conversion, enabling us consistently to turn away from the things of the world and toward the things of God. We want to make sure that the object of our devotion is the true God, not the seductive substitutes which our culture offers.

Labor: Whole And Holy

"Work positively fascinates me — I could watch it all day." The humor of Jerome K. Jerome's observation is based on the popular view of labor as drudgery.

It is, strangely enough, a notion reinforced by a basic misunderstanding of the biblical story of the Garden of Eden. Adam and Eve lost the fruits of Paradise through the original sin of not letting God be God. Whereupon, we are told, they were driven from the garden to toil by the sweat of their brows. Where we go wrong in our interpretation of this story is the belief that after evil came into the world, work was given as a punishment. In fact, it was given as an antidote to evil, a blessing. That is, you and I toiling on this earth are actually toiling for heaven. Our everyday work becomes Jacob's ladder reaching nearer to God.

"What is the use of health, or of life, if not to do some work therewith?"

asked Thomas Carlyle. "Having a purpose in life, through into your work such strength and muscle as God has given you."

We all have a purpose in life. The problem is, we don't always recognize it. I am fortunate in loving my life as a priest, now at The Christophers and before that teaching on college campuses. That in itself is a gift from God. But, when the alarm clock goes off in the morning, even those of us who have work we love may not always leap out of bed with joy. The day-to-dayness of a job gets tough.

That's true whether you're blazing an executive career path or holding down a couple of jobs that barely make ends meet. There is no honest work that cannot be as spiritual as it is ordinary. Waiting on tables, studying spreadsheets, emptying bedpans, building houses, talking with customers — each of these can be lifted from the mundane. Transform your job into something that feeds your soul as well as putting food on your table and you earn far more than a paycheck.

Unfortunately, that's not the end of the story.

"Life is built up every day from work," wrote John Paul II in his encyclical On Human Work. "From work it derives its specific dignity, but at the same time work contains the unceasing measure of human toil and suffering, and also of the harm and injustice, which penetrate deeply into social life within individual nations and on the international level."

It's a good reminder. For too many people in America and around the world, labor isn't a question of job satisfaction but simple survival. And it isn't pretty.

Go to a job that doesn't pay a living wage or where conditions are demeaning or unnecessarily dangerous and it seems more a curse than a blessing. When dignity and security are strangled by a bottom line, it's tough to be grateful. And then there's the terrible burden of not having a job to go to at all.

Labor is holy. But not when it is dehumanizing. That was the last thing the Creator intended. The only way to change things is to speak up for justice on the job. Not only for ourselves, but all who want the right to be whole people and holy workers.

Biblical Fundamentalism

Q. The book our Bible study group is using refers to a "fundamentalist interpretation of Scripture." What exactly does that mean?

One member says it means a literal interpretation of the Bible, but no one knows more than that. If that is the meaning, what's wrong with a literal interpretation?

A. Fundamentalism is a hard concept to nail down, but certain basic characteristics can be nailed down, especially as they relate to the Bible.

The topic is dealt with at some length in the 1993 document of the Pontifical Biblical Commission titled "The Interpretation of the Bible in the Church."

In 1895, conservative Protestant scholars at the American Bible Congress in New York defined "five points of fundamentalism," the first of which was the verbal inerrancy of Scripture, that there is no error in the Bible.

Obviously we share with them the belief that the word of God in Scripture is without error. They, and other fundamentalist scholars today, mean something much more rigid and restrictive, however, than most Catholics would understand by inerrancy.

The biblical commission cites several basic problems with fundamentalist interpretation, which refuses, for example, to admit that the inspired word of God has been expressed in human language, by human authors with limited capacities and resources.

This sacred word comes to us, therefore, in language and expressions that are conditioned by the times in which they were formulated and written.

In other words, strict fundamentalist understanding "makes itself incapable of accepting the full truth of the incarnation itself," since it cannot accept the word of God "made flesh" in the limited condition of our human natures.

In addition, staunch fundamentalism claims as unquestioned historic or scientific truth parts of Scripture which, when they were written, never claimed to be historical.

Fundamentalism does not admit that stories like Jonah in the whale, or Noah's ark, or the creation of the world in six days, might be symbolic or figurative, or anything other than straight history.

Another concern is fundamentalism's refusal to accept the development of the Gospel tradition. Fundamentalism "naively confuses the

Staying Out Of The Marriage Rut

What does it take to keep a marriage fresh, alive and exciting? Why do so many marriages succumb to the doldrums of the "old ball and chain"? What can a couple do to get out of a rut? We have found new life in our relationship through newness in ourselves. When we found our marriage in a rut we chose to learn something new, do something new, or even eat something that is new to us.

Living near a large cultural center as Chicago has given opportunities to take classes (together and apart) that have broadened our interests. And with the many ethnic restaurants in the area, experiencing different, exotic cuisine is far from exhausted in our nearly 21 years of marriage.

However, one doesn't have to live near a major city to find newness in their lives. There was one situation that happened about 20 years ago that is an excellent case in point. A friend was planning a couples' canoe trip to the Wisconsin river. Over a weekend the trip would cover about 28 miles on the river and camping out midway.

Our friend relentlessly goaded us about being part of the trip. Neither of us had any experience in a canoe. Andrew's camping experience was an overnight in a tent in Washington Park when he was nine. Terri had never camped. Though the idea of the trip offered no promise of a good time to either of us, we relented to our friend's exuberance, trusting his assurances to a degree. But mostly to get him off our backs.

To our surprise, we not only found the experience enjoyable, we were pretty good at canoeing and found camping to be a refreshing escape from our daily routine. We saw newness in each other and in ourselves. What is more important is that we experience each other in a new situation. In some ways it was like meeting each other again for the first time. Since then we have been avid campers.

When we find our relationship stuck in a rut, we know that we need to rediscover each other in a new way. Finding newness rekindles excitement in married life. It also reminds us that we are so much more than what we see. As long as there is life, there is learning, new discoveries and, if we're open to it, adventure to enjoy in marriage. Over the years together we have discovered passion in skiing, traveling, Mexican food, Oriental cooking, good wine, poetry, the symphony, the love of children, the beauty of nature, hosting parties, and the unending, inexhaustible love of God.

Marriage is meant to last a lifetime — a lifetime in which to learn, grow and become. Being open to new learning is being open to the wonder of life and grace. We come to know that marriage is not just a result of our own creativity, but a creation of God that has potential of adventure beyond what we've ever known.

St. Leo Church Forms Respect Life Committee

Members of the Respect Life Committee at St. Leo Church hold signs that promote respect for the sanctity of all human life.

WINSTON-SALEM — A Respect Life Committee has been formed at St. Leo Church. Initiated by president and coordinator Marianne Donadio, the group promotes respect for the sanctity of all human life from conception. "Our Holy Father asked us to uphold this principle in his recent encyclical Evangelium Vitae," Donadio said. She noted that the Respect Life Committee encourages support for any pro-life activities already in existence in the Winston-Salem area, including Birthright, The Life Chain and the pro-life booth at the fair.

The committee, made up of more than 20 parishioners, was created in response to the National Conference of Catholic Bishops' call for increased pro-life activity in every parish. "It is encouraging to see the enthusiasm and dedication demonstrated by these faithful members," Donadio said.

The group holds bi-monthly prayer vigils outside an abortion clinic in Winston-Salem, and hopes to start a regular prayer vigil outside other abortion providers in the area.

On July 11, Father Mark Lawlor, parochial vicar at St. Leo, celebrated Mass and led the rosary to commemorate the National Day of Prayer and Fasting for Life.

Retired Bishop, Two Others Arrested At Abortion Clinic

By JOHN BURGER

DOBBS FERRY, N.Y. (CNS) — A retired bishop and a Franciscan priest and brother will stand trial Oct. 17 on charges that they disturbed the peace while blocking the entrance to an abortion clinic parking lot in Dobbs Ferry.

Father Benedict J. Groeschel, a well-known speaker and author of books on spirituality, was arrested Aug. 24 with retired Bishop George E. Lynch and Brother Fidelis Moscinski.

Father Groeschel, director of the Office of Spiritual Development of the Franciscan Friars of the Renewal in Larchmont, said his action was prompted by debate over the legality of partial-birth abortion.

"Partial-birth abortion has made it absolutely clear that nobody can say that a fetus is not a child," Father Groeschel told Catholic New York, newspaper of the New York Archdiocese.

The three blocked the entrance to the clinic parking lot from 7:30 to 8 a.m., when they were ordered to disperse and placed under arrest. They pleaded not guilty to disorderly conduct and were released on their own recognizance.

Father Groeschel was arrested in a similar protest in 1988 in Manhattan. Bishop Lynch, a retired auxiliary bishop of Raleigh, N.C., who lives in his native Bronx, and Brother Moscinski, who is studying for the priesthood in the Franciscan Friars of Renewal, have been arrested at the Dobbs Ferry clinic and others numerous times in the past few years.

In February, Bishop Lynch and Brother Moscinski were convicted in federal court of violating the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act. They have appealed part of that ruling to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

All three said they blocked the entrance on Aug. 24 to save the lives of unborn children. Several cars attempting to enter the parking lot had to be diverted while the men were sitting there.

Father Groeschel, who is also diocesan postulator for the cause for canonization of Cardinal Terence Cooke, said he chose to engage in the protest because of President Clinton's veto of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act.

The legislation vetoed by Clinton would have banned a procedure used in late-term abortions in which the unborn child is partially delivered before surgical scissors are stabbed into the base of the infant's head. The child's brain is then removed by suction, allowing for easier delivery of the rest of the body.

In a statement to the press after his arrest, Father Groeschel said, "The whole moral fabric of our American society is unraveling before our eyes. Evidence of this decline can be observed by any person of reflection.... The most appalling symptom of this decline is the killing of unborn children with the connivance and even special protection of civil law.

"I learned long ago in the civil rights struggle that civil disobedience to unjust laws is often the only way to expose their wickedness. I hope that my arrest and subsequent imprisonment will awaken some of my fellow citizens to the hypocrisy of the Roe vs. Wade decision and similar invalid and inhuman statutes," Father Groeschel added.

In addition to the three arrested, about 30 people participated in the Aug. 24 demonstration, praying the rosary on the sidewalks. They included four Sisters of Life; Father Martin P. Keegan, a Maryknoll missionary to Mexico now on sabbatical; and about 10 Franciscan Friars of the Renewal, a congregation co-founded by Father Groeschel in 1987.

Videos

"For the Moment" (1996)

Doomed romances bloom at a pilot training school for Allied flyers in 1942 Manitoba when the American flight instructor and an Aussie recruit (Russell Crowe) fall in love with two married women whose husbands are fighting abroad. Writer-director Aaron Kim Johnston gingerly explores bitter-sweet relationships and wartime anxieties in an otherwise formula story. Recurring sexual innuendo with fleeting nudity, brief violence and minimal profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Muppet Treasure Island" (1996)

Daffy mix of people and puppets cavort on sand and sea as a plucky lad (Kevin Bishop) outsmarts a treasure-hungry pirate (Tim Curry) with a little help from dauntless Kermit and starry-eyed Miss Piggy. Director Brian Henson's musical take on the Robert Louis Stevenson adventure classic is goofily entertaining in sporadic, tongue-in-cheek spurts. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences.

"Sgt. Bilko" (1996)

The money-making schemes of an Army supply sergeant (Steve Martin) and his loyal underlings are jeopardized when a major (Phil Hartman) with a grudge against the sergeant turns up on base to expose Bilko's scams — and steal his fiancée. With only a wafer-thin narrative, director Jonathan Lynn relies heavily on Martin to carry off this genial but unremarkable movie adaptation of the 1950's TV sitcom. Comic depiction of gambling and minimal crude expressions. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"The Truth About Cats & Dogs" (1996)

Insecure about her looks, a radio talk show host (Janeane Garofalo), persuades her gorgeous girlfriend (Uma Thurman) to impersonate her when an admiring radio fan (Ben Chaplin) asks her out. Director Michael Lehmann's contrived, mistaken identity comedy essentially stresses the value of friendship, love and inner beauty although it is marred by a gratuitous, phone-sex scene. Implied masturbation, some sexual innuendo, occasional profanity and an instance of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Up Close & Personal" (1996)

Romantic fluff about a novice TV journalist (Michelle Pfeiffer) and a veteran correspondent (Robert Redford) who becomes a bullying mentor, then marries her as his career spirals downward while she is groomed for a network anchor spot. Directed by Jon Avnet, the romance is credibly developed within the tension-filled world of live news, resulting in a bittersweet, sentimental crowd-pleaser. Several restrained bedroom scenes, brief violence and minimal rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Breaker Morant" (1980)

During the Boer War, three officers of an Australian unit (led by title character Edward Woodward) are court-martialed for shooting prisoners. Despite uniformly fine performances and well-staged action scenes, Australian director Bruce Beresford's fact-based courtroom drama never quite comes to grips with the issues raised about the irregular nature of combat against guerrilla forces as well as the defense of following orders. Mature themes and battlefield violence. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

COMMUNICATION CAMPAIGN

She's The One

Film Takes A Comic Look At Matters Of The Heart

NEW YORK (CNS) — Striking similar chords to his debut feature, "The Brothers McMullen," writer-director Ed Burns takes a comic look at serious domestic and moral problems in "She's the One" (Fox Searchlight).

This time the New York Irish Catholic family is "The Fighting Fitzgeralds," as the name Dad's boat proclaims.

While long-suffering Mom is never seen, Dad (John Mahoney) is a bullish presence who raised his two twentysomething sons, Mickey (Burns) and Francis (Mike McGlone), to look out for No. 1 first and foremost.

Cabdriver Mickey's been adrift a few years, ever since walking out on his promiscuous fiancée, Heather (Cameron Diaz).

But younger brother Francis has taken Dad's advice to heart, with a six-figure Wall Street job to prove it. Yet his life's a mess since he's ignoring his lovely wife (Jennifer Aniston) in favor of his coldly ambitious mistress — who just happens to be none other than Heather.

As cowardly Francis secretly plots to divorce his wife to marry Heather, Mickey surprises everyone by impulsively marrying a grad student-waitress (Maxine Bahns) he picked up as a fare. It's an uneasy adjustment for Mickey, moving into her cold-water walk-up in the Village, but her belated announcement that she's going to study at the Sorbonne for a year really shakes his confidence in their relationship.

Adding to his confusion is a chance meeting with Heather, who makes it clear she's still interested — whether Mickey's married or not. Discovering that his brother has been sleeping with her is the last straw, but Mickey's anger is so intense his bride suspects he's still not over Heather and decides to go solo to Paris.

With both brothers facing marital breakups, Dad learns that while he was neglecting Mom, she found romance with an unhappily married hardware salesman.

Whether the fighting Fitzgeralds learn anything from their troubled relationships with women is glossed over as Burns is more concerned with witty exchanges than moral insights.

But as a writer, his script is patently contrived, with all three Fitzgeralds simultaneously about to lose their wives — and two sets of siblings squabbling over old flames.

Catholic viewers may not see the supposed humor in characterizing Dad as someone who "doesn't believe in God, but that never stopped him from being a good Catholic."

On the other hand, these characters are not one-dimensional; we get inside their skulls and see how they view themselves and what they want out of life.

The cast does a good job of bringing them to life, giving warmhearted performances that make the human failings of chauvinistic Dad and self-obsessed Francis seem consistent with their me-first outlooks.

In fact, Dad comes to regret having stressed that attitude to his sons. Mickey as well maintains his integrity and points out to Francis that he deserves to feel guilty over cheating on his wife.

Thus a moral viewpoint is expressed, even if the movie concentrates more on its comedic charms than on serious issues of honoring vows.

The result is a lighthearted romantic comedy that is short on substance but engaging in its genial approach to matters of the heart.

Due to its adult theme of infidelity, numerous sexual references and frequent rough language and profanity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

What it takes to be an evangelizer

All contents copyright ©1996 by CNS

By Father Eugene LaVerdiere, SSS
Catholic News Service

Have you ever thought of yourself as an evangelizer, as one who spreads the Gospel? If not, if you are interested or at least curious about it, take the following simple test, answering each question with yes or no:

Are you baptized?

Does Jesus Christ make a difference in your life?

Are you Catholic?

Do you belong to a parish?

Is Sunday Mass important to you?

Do you care about people?

If your answer to each question is "yes," you are an evangelizer! You obviously have heard the Gospel. More than that, you are already passing it

You may not ever have thought of yourself as an evangelizer. It may be you are uncomfortable with the term and wonder, "Why do some people wear their religion on their sleeve?"

To be an evangelizer, you do not even have to quote the Bible. You do not have to say anything. Most people are a bit self-conscious talking about their faith or religion. They leave that to priests, nuns, people teaching religious education and missionaries. It is those people's job to spread the faith.

A lot of people consider faith a private matter. The topic of faith is reserved for conversations with their close, intimate friends.

You have to trust someone quite a lot to share your faith. No one wants to be laughed at.

Actually, in order to evangelize, all you have to do is be yourself, no more, no less. If you are baptized, if Jesus Christ makes a difference in your life, if you are Catholic, belong to a parish, if Sunday Mass is important to you and you care about people, your very life is good news.

tion is some thing you are, not something you do. What you do flows from who you are.

If you answered "yes" to each of the six questions in our simple test, you embody the good news and are a living sign of the Gospel.

Look around. Consider all those other good, ordinary people in your parish. Knowing they really want to live a Christian life and be good Catholics makes a difference to all of us. We are strengthened by their sincerity and their efforts. They give us hope. They are evangelizers to us and to others, and so are you.

Perhaps you want to do more to evangelize. Here are a few simple suggestions:

First of all, think! What is most important for you in life? You can do that kind of thinking while commuting to work by bus or subway, where everyone gets lost in his or her thoughts, or while taking a walk or working out. Perhaps what you consider most important is family, your spouse, your children, your own parents, brothers and sisters.

Then it is a matter of talking! This is the second point.

Talk with close friends about what you think is most important in your life. You can do that over lunch or over a cup of coffee. You may be surprised at the reaction.

A lot of people are very grateful for an opportunity to share the things that are important for them. Sooner or later, the topic turns to faith, the place of God and Jesus Christ in your life.

The third suggestion is to read. Do you have a Bible? Perhaps you have an old one tucked away someplace. Take it out. Turn to one of the Gospels.

After "thinking" about what is most important to you, and "talking" about that to close friends, the Bible, like Jesus' teaching in the New Testament, will provide words and images for those things closest to you.

Very likely you will be surprised at what you find, and you will want to tell people.

Consider, for example, Jesus calming a storm on the Sea of Galilee: "Quiet! Be still!" The wind ceased and there followed a great calm (Mark 4:39).

Two thousand years later you can still feel the great calm. Jesus' presence brings peace to the heart.

Or consider these words from St. Paul to the Philippians (1:6), "I am on to others.

Another word for "evangelizer" would be "evangelist." But a lot of people connect the term "evangelist" with religious TV personalities or with a preacher who attracts large crowds. I am thinking of the Rev. Billy Graham. For that reason, I prefer to avoid the word "evangelist."

What I am referring to as evangelization and being an evangelizer is the common garden variety: someone like you and me.

To be an evangelizer, you do not have to know you are one. Most people do not.

confident of this, that the one who began a good work in you will continue to complete it until the day of Christ Jesus."

Those are words for the times when your spirits are low, or when you're a little down on yourself and it is good to recall your reasons for hope.

With that, you are on your way to being a pretty articulate evangelizer.

How about that?

FAITH IN THE MARKETPLACE

Tell of a time you felt you did your best to pass faith on. What did you do?

"When my eldest son was confirmed last year, I wrote him a personal letter encouraging him to keep his faith. I passed along what my faith means to me and how I hope his faith would be important in his life too, ... (not as) an end but a beginning." — Kathy Long, Eau Claire, Wis.

"The last time it happened was with a friend who was going through a period of terrific family stress: the death of his father from cancer, and just six months later the death of his mother. As a friend, I tried to ... help him see that God always gives us the strength to handle whatever we have to, if we rely on him." — Tom Stoeckle, Topeka, Kan.

"I think mostly of the times I was teaching religious education to young deaf people.... I think the struggles I had communicating with young deaf children, trying to pass on the complexities of faith in a language not my own, ... unexpectedly prepared (me) to accept the totally unexpected deafness of my own first child." — Mary Siegle, Minneapolis, Minn.

"As a social worker I recently answered a call from a young woman who was seeking healing in an abortion situation. She needed someone to listen.... I hope ... that I can help her through this difficult situation to know that God doesn't condemn her, that she can heal." — Kate Hanson, Fargo, N.D.

"Most recently, it's when I work with my kids ... at CYO. When you talk with them about free will, ... and when you can see in a kid's eye that he understands making the choices Jesus wants us to make is the right thing to do, then you know you've passed on faith in an important way." — Frank Kontor, Crown Point, Ind.

The invisible evangelizers

By Dan Luby
Catholic News Service

When I was growing up, just a few notches from the buckle of the Bible belt, Saturday's newspaper featured a religion page filled with ads for evangelists.

I imagined their voices from snippets I'd heard on the radio. They studied their preaching with biblical citations and emotional pleas.

To a boy from a Catholic ghetto, they seemed the very embodiment of everything non-Catholic. Perhaps that's why, in spite of knowing better, these vivid early images of evangelists still pop into my mind whenever I hear the word "evangelization."

Yet dozens of church documents, from the documents of Vatican Council II to the new catechism, make clear that evangelization — proclaiming the good news about God's unquenchable, merciful love — is at the heart of the church's mission.

Some people have a special call to the work of evangelization. It is among the clergy's defining tasks, and many they evangelize nonetheless.

Often these people decisively influence someone. Is it because their lives aren't segmented into unconnected categories of work, family, leisure, religion?

—For some people everything is shot through with faith and spirituality. They are likely to talk as easily about Jesus, prayer or the Bible as about work and their vision for their family.

—Some people's openness and generosity give credibility to their words.

—Some people live in a way that is both attractive and visibly Christian in its inspiration.

Evangelizing is mostly about "living" our faith, but that doesn't mean we never have to "talk" about it. When appropriate — perhaps an interest is expressed, a need is voiced — we have to be able to talk about what faith means to us:

- Who Jesus is.
- How we came to believe in him.
- How faith is challenged.
- How we pray.

It's relatively easy to talk about Christ in the abstract, as we might about the latest scientific discoveries

"We may not be called to preach or work in the mission fields, but the rest of us have daily opportunities to be what we might call 'invisible evangelizers.'"

lay people have been called to a public ministry of evangelization.

But that doesn't let everyone else off the hook. We may not be called to preach or work in the mission fields, but the rest of us have daily opportunities to be what we might call "invisible evangelizers."

These evangelizers aren't employed by the church. They work in commerce and industry, government, the arts and education. Some are leaders within parishes, others might not be easily recognized by the pastor; but or public-policy issues. It's harder to talk about one's own life and relationship to Jesus. To do that, you have to examine your life.

The best way to get stronger in evangelization is by living in a way that is consistent with faith in Jesus. It's not automatic. We know how easy it is to read Scripture, hear a homily, say a prayer and still behave badly.

The connection has to be cultivated between faith and day-to-day living: work, family, watching television, making investments, voting and everything else we do.

The point to realize is that the way we live speaks volumes about our values: what we treasure, what moves us to courage, what opens us to love. And others get the message.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

If only a one-size-fits-all approach could guarantee success in passing faith on to the people we want to pass it on to! But passing faith on is not a matter of just following "the directions." That doesn't mean, however, that passing faith on is beyond the reach of "ordinary" people — like most of us.

One risk to avoid is believing we can force faith into someone else and thus to become "driven to succeed" and perhaps somewhat self-righteous. Ultimately, this is God's enterprise, not one we control.

Scripture provides a clue to passing faith on in saying others found it remarkable to see how the early Christians loved each other. It is important to allow others to "see" our faith in action: that we forgive; bear the poor well in mind; solve problems nonviolently; act to heal relationships; take God's presence seriously; love.

But what about the days I have a headache or arrive home from work not feeling like much of a model of faith — when others see that I'm imperfect?

Passing faith on involves imperfect people. Over time, people do "see" what you truly believe. More times than you imagine, they will find it remarkable.

What astounded others in the first days

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

One of the most effective means of advertising is by word of mouth. Of course, this calls for personal contact.

The first Christians, deeply convinced of Christ's paramount importance in their lives, were eager to share the good news with others. Personal witness was the only way they could do this.

They had no printing presses, and even had they had them, relatively few people could read. In a preliterate culture, ideas were communicated orally by directly sharing experiences and by the direct witness of believers' lives.

The amazing spread of the Christian movement was the result of such witness. Different people carried this out in different ways.

Priscilla and Aquila, for instance, were a very mobile couple. Either by choice or force of circumstances, they moved about quite a bit — from the shores of the Black Sea to Rome, to Corinth, to Ephesus. They had their own trade, and simply set up shop wherever they happened to be.

Constantly meeting new people, Priscilla and Aquila took advantage of these contacts to share their faith. At Ephesus they met a man named Apollos, who himself was actively preaching about Jesus. But it was clear to the couple that Apollos' knowledge of Jesus was rudimentary; he had gotten no farther than accepting the baptism preached by John the Baptist.

So "they took him aside and explained to him the way (of God) more accurately." When the man moved on to Achaia (Greece), Priscilla and Aquila, and the members of the local community "wrote to the disciples there to welcome him. After his arrival he gave great assistance to those who had come to believe" (Acts 18:24-27).

What was involved here was a network of communities that facilitated the spread of God's word, leading to strengthened faith among those who already believed.

The community's involvement was vital to this process. No wonder that in giving a thumbnail sketch of the first Christians' life, Luke included "communal life" as one of its basic elements (Acts 2:42). One wasn't exactly an "individual" Christian, or individual evangelizer, since Christians owed their very existence to belonging to and being actively involved in a community.

The Eucharist itself was a celebration of community: "Because the loaf of bread is one, we, though many, are one body, for we all partake of the one loaf" (1 Corinthians 10:17).

Associations of various kinds were common in the society of biblical times; usually these associations were based on common interests: trades, ethnic background and the like. But Christian communities were unique in being composed of people who, in different settings, might have been expected to be at odds with each other:

"There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free person, there is not male and female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus" (Galatians 3:28).

In terms of evangelization, the life of the people together astounded and attracted others. It elicited this reaction: "Look at these Christians, how they love one another!"

FAITH IN ACTION

Evangelization is directed not only to non-Catholics but to three categories of Catholics themselves, writes Regina Coll in How to Understand Church and Ministry in the United States (Crossroad Publishing Co., 370 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017, 1996. Paperback, $16.95). She says: "For those who are attempting to practice their faith, it is a call to ongoing growth and conversion; for Catholics who are so in name only, it is a call to re-evangelization; and for those who have altogether stopped practicing their faith, it is a call to reconciliation."

Reflection: One study showed that as many as 800 inactive Catholics — defined by the study as people who did not attend church twice in the past year — live within the boundaries of the average parish. Ms. Coll writes: "Various called lapsed, fallen-away, nominal, alienated or marginalized, they are nevertheless Catholic. We would do better to focus on the noun 'Catholic' rather than on the negative adjectives."

Photographic Memoir On Cardinal Bernardin Called 'Assignment From God'

CHICAGO (CNS) — John White, the Pulitzer Prize-winning photographer for the Chicago Sun-Times daily newspaper, called his new photographic memoir of Chicago Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin "an assignment from God." "This Man Bernardin," to be published in hard cover Sept. 9 by Loyola Press in Chicago, contains 186 black-and-white photos of the cardinal, most taken by White over a 14-year period, with a few from the cardinal's family album. Eugene Kennedy, a Catholic writer, commentator and consultant, wrote the book's chapter openings. "A photographer can be the eyes for the world," White said in an interview. "It's a privilege and a tremendous responsibility."

Sister Mary Francis Dorcé, Formerly Of High Point, Dies

Franciscan Handmaids of the Most Pure Heart of Mary Sister Mary Francis Dorcé, who taught at Christ the King School in High Point from 1953-57, died Aug. 18. She was 89.

Born Dec. 1, 1906, in Pointe à Pitre, Guadeloupe, French West Indies, Sister Francis was the daughter of Rollin and Dominique Dorcé. Her early education was obtained on her native island before she immigrated to the United States.

In 1935, she became an American citizen, and she joined the Congregation of the Franciscan Handmaids of Mary on Oct. 1, 1939. Her final vows were made Aug. 22, 1947. She earned a B.A. degree from Fordham University, and a Master's degree from the Catholic University of America.

From 1942-53, she served as the cook at St. Benedict Day Nursery, Mother Theodore Residence, and then at Mother House. During those years, she also did catechetical work and cooked at Camp St. Edward during the summer of 1951-53.

After teaching in High Point for four years, she was transferred to St. Cyprian School in Georgetown, S.C., where she served as teacher and the Superior of the Convent.

In 1962, Sister Francis was assigned to St. Thomas the Apostle School in Wilmington, N.C. After the merger of St. Thomas and St. Mary's Schools to achieve integration, she coordinated a program for Opportunities, Inc., from which emerged St. Thomas Pre-School Child Development Center, the first Catholic institution of its kind in North Carolina.

In 1980, she returned to St. Cyprian School in Georgetown, where she served as teacher and principal. Whether as a teacher or administrator, Sister Francis always found time to distribute food and clothing to the poor, and to give a listening ear to those in need.

Sister "formally" retired in 1992, and returned to the Motherhouse in Harlem, New York City. She continued, however, to serve the children and their parents at St. Benedict Day Nursery by her loving presence: in her own words, "...still trying to touch as many children and adults who are shedding silent, unseen tears."

On May 22, 1994, Sister Francis received the President's Medal from St. John's University for her outstanding service to the education of children and the poor.

Sister Francis is survived by a brother, Emil Dorcé of Guadeloupe; a sister, Colette Dorcé of Paris, France; and several nieces, nephews, grandnieces, grand-nephews, and cousins.

A Mass of Christian burial was celebrated Aug. 24 in the Roman Catholic Church of St. Aloysius, New York, N.Y. Interment followed at Resurrection Cemetery, Pinelawn, Long Island.

Bishop Urges Courage In Face Of Obstacles To Faith

ARLINGTON, Va. (CNS) — Catholics need spiritual courage to face the "uncommon power of a number of cultural intimidators that surround us," Arlington Bishop John R. Keating said in "A Pastoral Letter on Courage." Among intimidating factors in contemporary life that he cited in the pastoral were radical feminism, sexual permissiveness, political correctness and the "culture of death." "If courage is the strength to overcome fear in order to do what is right, then I pray that the Holy Spirit will sear into your soul a recurring refrain to sustain you the rest of your life: 'Be not afraid,'" Bishop Keating wrote. "At the heart of Jesus' message is his call to courage."

Cardinal Bernardin's Oncologist Is Dominican Sister

CHICAGO (CNS) — The oncologist who is treating Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago is well-known in the medical community as a cancer specialist at Loyola University Medical Center in the Chicago suburb of Maywood. But Dr. Ellen Gaynor also is a member of the Dominican Sisters of Sinsinawa, Wis. At separate press conferences Aug. 30, Cardinal Bernardin announced that the pancreatic cancer for which he underwent surgery in June 1995 has recurred and is considered terminal, and Sister Gaynor answered medical questions. In a phone interview with Catholic News Service, she said she doesn't see any particular relevance between her vocation as a religious and her care of the cardinal. "The cardinal knows I am a religious sister," she said, "and we share the same beliefs and values — our belief in eternal life, and that this is a passage from one to the other."

Ohio Priests Compete For Best Spaghetti Sauce

CLEVELAND (CNS) — No one knows if there is Italian food in the afterlife, but in Cleveland's Little Italy section folks got to sample two of the most heavenly spaghetti sauces during the annual Assumption weekend festival at Holy Rosary Church. In the end, Father Angelo Caserta's Italian Supreme Spaghetti Sauce edged out Father Wally Hyclak's Secret Recipe Spaghetti Sauce, 878-867. Voters got each sauce in a paper cup and a bread stick to dip into the sauces, plus a ballot to indicate their favorite. The Aug. 16-18 contest was one way to bring people out to celebrate the reason for the festival: the Assumption of Mary. After sampling sauces, people were able to walk over to the shrine at Holy Rosary, light a candle, pray, and perhaps buy rosaries or medals.

Turn-Of-Century Parish Convent In Illinois Now A Family Home

OAK PARK, Ill. (CNS) — The former 20-room convent of St. Edmund Parish in Oak Park is now home to Sandy and John Troelstrup and their family of eight children. After the Dominican sisters who lived in the convent left the Chicago suburb, the parish sold the property to raise money for capital improvements needed at its school and church. According to Sandy Troelstrup, the stately, turn-of-the-century brick house suits them just fine. "We were under construction for eight months after moving in," she said. "We had to remove 150 feet of wall, because the small, cell-like rooms that served as the nuns' bedrooms weren't practical for us."

Catholic Daughters Of The Americas Set New Agenda For The Future

TAMPA, Fla. — During their International Convention the Catholic Daughters of the Americas (CDA) introduced a new social action plan for the future entitled, "The Circle of Love."

The program will help members who are working with the church and within their communities to address the needs of society, particularly those affecting the elderly, human life issues, family values, community, youth and health issues.

CDA worldwide charitable projects include support of the Adopt-a-Child program of the Catholic Near East Welfare Association, Catholic Relief Services and Project Handclasp, a cooperative effort to collect, donate and transport needed items overseas.

Nationally, CDA supports Catholic Relief Services, Covenant House, Mother Teresa's Missionaries of Charity, Habitat for Humanity, SOAR (Support Our Aging Religious), The Apostle of the Seas and disaster assistance.

The full slate of national officers was reelected to second terms: Grace Rinaldi, National Regent; Eunice Riles, First Vice-Regent; Grace DiCairano, Second Vice-Regent; Maria Loeffler, Third Vice-Regent; and Rose Tomassi, Secretary-Treasurer.

Elected to the board of directors for the 1996-98 term were: Maureen Daughtry, Marie Davoli, Helen Johnson, Carmen A. Ortiz, Dolly Pena, Mary Gail Peters, Sally Tyrlowski, Joann Schaefer and Janice Wallace.

The delegates passed resolutions decrying physician-assisted suicide and euthanasia; denouncing the burning of houses of worship and calling for the advancement of social justice, particularly in Central and South America.

CDA is the largest Catholic laywoman's organization in the country. It was founded by the Knights of Columbus in 1903 and has since grown to 1,476 courts in the U.S., Mexico, Guam, The Dominican Republic, Saipan, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. During the 1994-96 term they collectively contributed more than five million dollars to charitable causes.

Former Superintendent Elected To Notre Dame Sisters Government Team

STEVENSON, Md. — A former superintendent of schools for the Diocese of Charlotte was among the five sisters chosen to lead the 2,000 members of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur for the next six years.

Sister Marie Kelly, SND, who served as diocesan superintendent from 1976-84 and is currently the Provincial Moderator of the Maryland Province, was elected to the General Government group.

Born in Philadelphia, she attended West Catholic High School for Girls. Sister Marie received a B.A. in French from Trinity College, Washington, D.C. She also holds an M.A. in Educational Leadership from the University of Scranton (Pennsylvania) and an Ed.D. (Doctor of Education) from Nova University in Florida.

"I am very excited and challenged by the directions coming from the 14th General Chapter and look forward to moving them from words to a living experience for myself and all my sisters of Notre Dame," Sister Marie said.

During the recent chapter meeting, delegates elected the first African — Sister Honorine Yamba of Zaire — to the General Government group.

VA Medical Center Honors Catholic War Veterans Post

ASHEVILLE — Four members of the Rev. Ralph F. Neagle Catholic War Veterans Post #1914 were recently recognized by the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center.

John J. Short, Post Commander Herbert W. Reith, Mary Robertson and Oswald Spinks were honored at a dinner for outstanding volunteer service to the Medical Center's patients.

Short received a certificate of outstanding service for more than 14,000 volunteer hours. Reith was recognized for 10,000 hours of volunteer service, and Robertson and Spinks were recognized for 3,000 hours and 800 hours of volunteer service, respectively.

Post 1914 members have donated 873 hours to the VA Medical Center since the start of the federal fiscal year last October.

Five other members of the post were recognized as "regularly scheduled volunteers." They include Marjorie Thomas, Thomas McIlwain, James Mulligan, Patricia Smith and Jack Vaughan. Their assignments range from providing military graveside interment rites at the Western Carolina State Veterans Cemetery in Black Mountain to taking veteran in-patients to various locations within the medical center for tests, x-rays and similar procedures.

Catholic War Veterans Post 1914 is named for Father Ralph F. Neagle, a combat Army Chaplain in the Pacific during World War II. After the war, he served as chaplain in the VA Medical Center for many years — first in Bath, N.Y., then in Asheville.

talent, and energy facilitating the growth of an active faith community among Hispanics in the Asheville area.

Martin Luna first came to the U.S. in 1985 after completing an engineering degree at the University of the Americas in Puebla, Mexico. After working for two years at Arcadia Farms (a beverage processing plant in Arden), he took a job with TELEMONT Corporation in Hendersonville as an employment counselor because he preferred being "involved with people." He assisted Hispanic workers — mostly seasonal farm workers — looking for full-time, year-round employment. It was through this work he met Wilfredo Morel, the first outreach minister to Hispanics from the Diocese of Charlotte, who was in Asheville conducting an assessment of needs among Hispanics in the area. Morel, who stayed only a few months before moving to New York, recognized Luna's bilingual abilities, interpersonal skills and sincere concern for the Hispanic community, and recommended Luna as his replacement.

When he began working for Catholic Social Services in 1991, Luna continued to work on the assessment. He recalls "offering all sorts of services to Hispanics but primarily being involved with immigration procedures." It soon got around that he was accessible and willing to help, he says, and, "I was called upon to help with all sorts of translations, language problems, and difficulties in communication between Anglos and Hispanics."

Luna looks back on his work with CSS with satisfaction and a seasoned sensitivity, too. The "funniest" episodes he recollects now were often those that frightened him at the time because "I didn't know what to do," he admits apologetically. "Keep in mind that I never studied social services or any related courses, so through most of this I just used my common sense and my heart." While he worked for CSS, people routinely called him at home at all hours for help. Difficult as this was for his family, often interfering with his home life, he accepted it as "a part of what we're called to do as Catholics — to be there for others when you are needed."

Though Martin no longer works for CSS, he and Christine — who now have two children, Jessica Marie (8) and David Martin (3) — remain as involved as ever in the concerns of a growing Hispanic community. Initially the Lunas helped with a monthly Spanish Mass that was celebrated at St. Joan of Arc Church. During that same period, they also assisted with a similar Mass that has since become a regular weekly liturgy at Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville.

When Father Cancro became pastor at St. Eugene, the ministerial needs among the Hispanics in the immediate vicinity were becoming more evident. Scheduling a regular monthly liturgy in Spanish has helped immensely, says Luna. "Having Mass in Spanish has drawn people from Spain, Columbia, Argentina, and Puerto Rico in addition to the Mexican majority." Both he and his wife believe the formation and development of a mature faith community will depend on the availability of a regular weekly liturgy.

Recently a parish task force has been organized to better assess current needs among the Hispanic population. The results, according to Father Cancro, reveal at least 75 stable Hispanic families interested in religious education and sacramental preparation for their children as well as Bible study, in addition to weekly liturgy and celebration of sacraments. Father Cancro's regard for the lay ministry of couples like the Lunas is high: "They are well respected in the community, their ministerial intuitions are accurate, and they are talented at empowering others to become involved and assume leadership."

Singer-Songwriter Brings Message Of Jesus' Love

FORT MILL, S.C. — Christian musician Bob Colasanti, whose self-distributed debut recording has sold more than 22,000 copies, will present a love offering concert Sept. 11 at 7 p.m. at the Radisson Grand Ballroom.

Colasanti, a south Florida resident, found music as his ministry after personal tragedy caused him to question his faith. He looks at music as a means of healing — and of conveying a message celebrating the love of Jesus.

His first album, It is the Season, has received airplay on WMIT/WFGW radio station in Black Mountain, and sales and support of the record have been steady. A new recording is scheduled for release in February, 1997.

Colasanti has performed with other contemporary Christian artists such as Phil Keaggy, First Call and Tony Melendez. In addition, he has appeared on the Trinity Broadcasting Network and other syndicated radio and television programs.

Church Aid To Migrants Must Be Linked To Evangelization, Says Pope

By JOHN THAVIS
VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The church's aid to the millions of non-Christian migrants around the world must be linked to evangelization efforts, Pope John Paul II said in his 1997 World Migration Day message.
"The urgency of helping migrants who often find themselves in precarious conditions should not hinder the announcement of those ultimate realities upon which Christian hope is founded," the pope said.
"The true pastor, even when besieged by enormous practical problems, never forgets that migrants have need of God and that many are seeking him with a sincere heart," he said.
The text, released at the Vatican Sept. 3, cited the growing number of people fleeing situations of war, hunger and ethnic conflict. The situation clearly challenges Christians to work for social justice on behalf of refugees, it said.
It also highlights a special responsibility to "transmit the faith," it said.
"The church's commitment to migrants and refugees cannot be reduced to simply organizing structures of welcome and solidarity," the pope wrote.

Nor is the church merely called to transmit authentic values to people, but "above all to unveil the mystery of Christ," he said.
He cited the words of Pope Paul VI, saying that the Church must never back off from announcing the Gospel to non-Christians.
Today's migration patterns make that advice particularly significant, he said. In recent years, most modern migrants have been non-Christians arriving in traditionally Christian countries in search of better living conditions.
He noted that some of these host countries have taken measures to ensure legal recognition for the non-Christian groups and to provide protection, freedom of activity and economic support for their cultural activities.
The church supports such legislation because it favors freedom of worship for every human being, he said.

Members of St. Peter's Church in downtown Charlotte are shown getting things in order for their "Garden of Eden" before the Carolina Panthers Sept. 1 season opener against the Atlanta Falcons. The group sold between 220-230 barbecue and hot dog box lunches to fans headed to the game. Parishioner Jan Kelly said the fund-raiser grossed $1,445 (not including start-up costs). All profits will be given to feed the poor of the city. She added that parishioners plan to have the pre-game food and fun before one game each month. Free apples were also provided, "in keeping with the (original) Garden of Eden," Kelly said.

Stewardship Day: Promoting Discipleship

MORGANTON — Stewardship — the planned, proportionate giving of time, talent and treasure in return for God's many blessings — has become a priority in the Diocese of Charlotte. This year's Parish Stewardship Day, one of many diocesan efforts to promote stewardship as a way of life, is Sept. 20-21 at St. Charles Borromeo Church and will focus on designing and expanding programs that enhance stewardship in diocesan parishes.
Father George Kloster of St. Michael Church in Gastonia, diocesan Director of Development Jim Kelley, and Associate Director Barbara Rohrman will be workshop speakers.
Father Kloster, a leader in stewardship efforts, is keynote speaker. He will address theological and spiritual elements of stewardship and takes the place of Bishop J. Kevin Boland of the Savannah Diocese, who suffered a recent accident and is unable to attend.
Following the keynote speech, participants can choose from workshops on a variety of themes. Those new to the concept of stewardship may choose to attend Kelley's workshop on building stewardship committees in parishes. Rohrman's session, which will focus on creative ideas for stewardship renewal, is recommended for those parishes that have been active in stewardship efforts for several years.
Afternoon workshops will also offer choices. Kelley's session centers on welcoming new parishioners, while Rohrman will discuss incorporating stewardship in the lives of young people.
Kelley and Rohrman, along with seminarian Arturo DeAguilar, Father Ken Whittington of the Office of Liturgy and Worship, and Diocesan Director of Justice and Peace Joanne Frazer will also host roundtable discussions. Topics will concentrate on introducing stewardship in the parish, stewardship in the Hispanic community, liturgical expressions of stewardship parish tithing committees, and discernment of gifts and talents.
For participants' convenience, the same program is offered both days. To register or for more information, contact Barbara Rohrman, (704) 331-1710. Registration deadline is Sept. 11.

final stage of this tradition" (what the evangelists finally wrote) with the initial stage (the actual words and deeds of Jesus), and thus ends up misrepresenting God's call that is voiced by the Gospel itself.
Finally, because of its attachment to the "Scripture alone" principle, "fundamentalism is often anti-church." Creeds, doctrines, liturgical practices and the teaching function of the church are considered of little importance.
By the "literal" sense of Scripture, Catholic teaching and scholarship generally mean the answer to the question, "What precisely did the author of this book or passage mean when he wrote it?" (It seems unlikely that any biblical books as we have them were written by women.)
The answer to that question is of fundamental importance in interpreting the Bible. This literal meaning, expressed directly by the inspired human authors, is, we believe, the understanding intended by God, the principal author.
This differs significantly from the "literalist" sense proposed by fundamentalists. Word-for-word translations don't always give the real literal meaning.
When God tells people in Scripture to "gird their loins," he's not giving them direction about clothing. He's telling them metaphorically to prepare themselves for action.
One needs to understand the text according to the literary custom of the time, a serious project which means using all available findings of literary and historical research.

As you see, the elements of fundamentalism can be complicated. But these thoughts may give some ideas of how that approach to the Bible contrasts with the major thrust of Catholic and other Christian understanding of the Bible during most of this century.
The quotes and explanations given here are generally from the biblical commission's document, primarily in the section titled "Fundamentalist Interpretation." The document is available from the U.S. Catholic Conference in Washington, D.C.
A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about receiving the Holy Eucharist is available by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Churches In Miami On Security Alert In Scare Over Stickers

PEMBROKE PINES, Fla. (CNS) — The Archdiocese of Miami placed all of its parishes on a special security alert in late August after two Catholic churches in Pembroke Pines were defaced with stickers reading, "If you love God, burn a church." Six stickers, measuring about 4 inches by 1 inch, were plastered on an automobile and buildings at St. Maximilian Kolbe Church before 7 a.m. Aug. 25. Four more stickers, which also included a drawing of a burned church, were found at another Broward County church, St. Boniface, about two miles away. Although Jewish houses of worship have been defaced by hate messages in South Florida, it was the first time that local Catholic churches had been the target of such actions.

Priest Flooded With Donations After Returning Senator's Check

NORTH GROSVENORDALE, Conn. (CNS) — A Connecticut priest who gained national attention in April for returning a pro-abortion lawmaker's $5,000 donation to a Catholic school has received more than 10 times that amount from pro-lifers who are lauding the priest's actions. Father George H. Parker, administrator of St. Joseph Parish in North Grosvenordale, told Hartford's archdiocesan paper, The Catholic Transcript, that he had received $56,300 in donations to St. Joseph's School as of Aug. 22. All of the donations were from people who supported Father Parker's refusal to accept money from Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn., an advocate of keeping abortion legal.

Cardinal Bernardin Answers Critics On Dialogue Plan

CHICAGO (CNS) — Answering his critics, Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago said Aug. 29 that his call for dialogue in the church was not an invitation to dissent or compromise with the truth. In a 10-page written statement on the wide reactions to his Catholic Common Ground Project and its framework statement, "Called to Be Catholic," the cardinal said that when he unveiled the project Aug. 12 he expected criticisms "from some groups on the right or left" who judge everything in terms of their own agenda. "More troubling," he said, "is the criticism that mixes arguable points with what I believe are grave misunderstandings." He expressed concern that "even a carefully framed appeal for dialogue coming from an archbishop and seconded by a broad range of distinguished advisers was met with immediate suspicion." To some extent the criticisms themselves "confirm the need for this initiative," he said.

Young Adults Want To Feel 'At Home' In Church, Bishop Says

LOS ANGELES (CNS) — Young

adult Catholics are "looking for a church where they really feel they belong and ... feel at home," a Los Angeles auxiliary bishop said at a conference for young adults. Auxiliary Bishop Stephen E. Blaire spoke to some 800 Catholics about "mature discipleship" at the Los Angeles Archdiocese's Young Adult Conference '96, held Aug. 24-25. This November, Bishop Blaire and the rest of the U.S. bishops will vote on a pastoral plan to reach out specifically to Catholic young adults, many of whom leave the church after high school or college but later find themselves wanting to come back.

Chicago Interfaith Prayer Breakfast Highlights Unity Theme

CHICAGO (CNS) — Quoting Scripture and hearing responses of "Amen, brother," Vice President Al Gore put on his preacher's hat at an interfaith prayer breakfast held in conjunction with the Democratic National Convention in Chicago. "God bless you for pitching in to this American effort to heal our nation and bring people together," he told 2,000 cheering clergy and lay leaders who gathered Aug. 27 for the event "Celebrating Democracy Through Diversity" at the Chicago Hilton and Towers. Gore, who once attended divinity school at Vanderbilt University in Tennessee, reminded members of the predominantly African-American audience that they must "live in faith but under public policy."

New Study To Analyze Anglo, Latino Catholic Young Adults

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A team of researchers headed by sociologist Dean R. Hoge is launching a major study of young adult U.S. Catholics with a $494,905 grant from the Lilly Endowment. They will research the spiritual needs and values, the religious training and the sense and character of Catholic identity among Anglo and Latino Catholics in the 20-29 and 30-39 age groups. The researchers are starting from an assumption that "a strong Catholic identity probably will be harder to achieve in the future," Hoge said. "This is a gradually growing problem for American Catholics," he said. "There is strong debate in Catholic circles about religious education, Catholic identity and the best approach in the future."

Bosnian Elections Require International Support, Says Vatican

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Ensuring free and fair elections in Bosnia-Herzegovina is the obligation of the international community, said a Vatican diplomat. Speaking to the permanent council of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe Aug. 29, Msgr. Mario Zenari said the OSCE — the trans-Atlantic body responsible for overseeing the mid-September vote — faces "a challenge and a responsibility." However, he added, the Vienna-based organization does not face this job alone: Its member-states, which include the United States and Canada, must pitch in.

Sudanese Rebels Free Missionaries, One Chooses To Stay At Mission

NAIROBI, Kenya (CNS) — Five missionaries who had been detained since Aug. 17 by Sudanese rebels in Mapourdit, Sudan, arrived in Nairobi Aug. 30. A sixth detainee, Sudanese Father Raphael Riel, 48, vicar general of the Diocese of Rumbek, Sudan, was also freed but chose to stay in Mapourdit to keep the mission open. The five who arrived in Nairobi were reported in good health. They were not tortured, but said they were physically mistreated while being held captive by members of the Sudan People's Liberation Army, or SPLA.

Argentina's Bishops Say Program Must Defend Dignity

CORDOBA, Argentina (CNS) — Argentine bishops and lay leaders, gathered at a three-day meeting in Cordoba, said Aug. 25 that the government's new economic program must defend human dignity. At the seventh Meeting of Constructors of Society, held Aug. 23-25, the Catholic prelates urged government authorities to "humanize the economic system" so that it promotes human dignity. "We must not consider human beings as robots ready to produce money," said Cardinal Raul Primatesa of Cordoba. The meeting was held two weeks after Argentina's government announced its new economic program aimed at lowering the deficit.

St. Aloysius Church

HICKORY — Although there existed a small Catholic presence in Catawba County during the late 19th century, the first Mass was not celebrated in the area until Dec. 7, 1913. Benedictine Father Celestine Bache, a missionary assigned by Bishop Leo Haid to confirm the existence of a Catholic population in the region, gathered a dozen or so Catholics together in a Hickory home, where Mass was celebrated for almost two years.

In April 1915, Bishop Haid dedicated a former Seventh Day Adventist Church as the new St. Aloysius Catholic Church. The building and property had been purchased by the Catholic residents the year before. Benedictines from Belmont Abbey visited Hickory to celebrate Mass from that point, although the liturgy was said only four times that year. Soon Masses were said monthly, and in 1928, Benedictine Father Anthony Mayer celebrated on a weekly basis.

By that time, some 50 Catholics lived in the Hickory area. The congregation looked to expand its facilities, and property was bought in April 1937. A year later, which marked the Silver Jubilee of the St. Aloysius community, a new, brownstone church was dedicated.

The years during World War II saw Masses added for the Naval Cadets who were stationed at Lenior-Rhyme College. Parish growth continued through the next two decades; organizations and programs were developed and a newly built rectory enhanced parish life. Previously, Catawba County had fallen under the jurisdiction of Belmont Abbey, but in 1944 was welcomed into the Diocese of Raleigh. The first resident pastor of the now-diocesan church, Father William T. McShea, also began celebrating Mass in Burke County and in Morganton, thereby establishing missions there.

By the early 1960s parishioners again saw the need to build a larger church, thanks in part to an increased Catholic population due to expanded industrialization in the area. More than 400 people made up the congregation, and on May 10, 1963, then-Msgr. Michael J. Begley — later to become the founding bishop of the Charlotte Diocese — preached the sermon at the dedication Mass of the new red-brick St. Aloysius Church.

St. Aloysius parish continued to thrive. During the 1970s, the parish established a new church in Newton. The church, St. Joseph the Worker, was dedicated on Labor Day, 1978, and remained a mission of St. Aloysius until attaining parish status in 1980.

Continued expansion during recent years has most notably included a new multi-purpose, three-story complex which houses a sanctuary with a capacity of 750 people. The complex, dedicated in 1993, also is home to classrooms, offices, meeting rooms, a nursery, a music room and a parlor. Plans continue for the renovation of the original church building, which parishioners hope to transform into a day chapel. Also, the red-brick church will be converted to a parish hall.

Both within the St. Aloysius family and in its community, parishioners have dedicated themselves to a number of ministries and outreach programs, including youth ministry, Knights of Columbus, Confraternity of Christian Mothers, Newman Club, Co-operative Christian Ministry, the Hickory Soup Kitchen, Habitat for Humanity, N.C. Right to Life, Pregnancy Care Center, the American Red Cross and the Department of Social Services.

Although the beginnings of St. Aloysius parish were meager back in the early years of the century, the parish family has grown to include some 2,600 people. Much has occurred in Hickory since that group of 12 celebrated Mass for the first time in 1913, and St. Aloysius Church stands as a monument to the enterprising spirit of this church community.

Tri-State Rally participants joined for the closing Mass at Carowinds Paladium on September 8. "In his homily, Bishop William G. Curlin reminded youth from the dioceses of Charleston, Charlotte, Savannah and the archdiocese of Atlanta, "Never forget that Jesus is alive in our world. He's alive in you; and as long as God is living in you, it's going to be a great world."

LAKE WYLIE, S.C. — "How many have been told you are the future of the church?" Hundreds of youthful hands shoot skyward in response to Anna Scally's question. Wrong, she says. "You are the church today, and we are counting on you."

With that in mind, 1,200 of today's church kicked off the Tri-State Youth Rally. Sponsored by the office of youth ministry, teens from the dioceses of Charleston, Charlotte, Savannah, and the archdiocese of Atlanta, jump-started their weekend with a dance hosted by Scally, a disc jockey and producer for Cornerstone Media's Burning Issues, an audio program focusing on current youth issues.

Dozens of teens begin to move to the rhythm. As a video camera projects dancers onto a wide-screen TV, more and more join in until the grounds of Camp Thunderbird resemble a toned-down version of The Grind (a 90s rendition of American Bandstand).

Don't just stay with your parish group, urges Scally. You need to meet 100 people tonight. As the music pumps to levels guaranteed to please the teens, they scatter to form new friendships.

For the next two hours, chart-topping tunes reverberate across Lake Wylie.

Scally hits the kids where they live: music. She gains their trust with a key-note that weaves elements of faith through a music needle. As soft refrains permeate the evening air, she calls teens

Bishop Dedicates Chapel At Maryfield Nursing Home

By MIKE KROKOS
 Editor

HIGH POINT — Frank Deal takes pride in saying he is a convert to the Catholic faith.

Like many other converts, the parishioner at Christ the King Church enjoys sharing because "it is a way for expressing our thanks to God for bringing us here."

Deal, who became a Catholic nearly 50 years ago, continues to develop a closer relationship with the Lord. He was among the 300 people who filled the main ecumenical chapel at Maryfield Nursing Home Sept. 8 for a Mass celebrated by Bishop William G. Curlin dedicating the new Blessed Sacrament Adoration Chapel.

In the devotion, the consecrated Eucharist remains exposed on the altar in the monstrance for veneration by the faithful in the chapel, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Adorers commit to a specific day and time to ensure that our Eucharistic Lord is never left alone. People use the time they commit for prayer and reflection.

Deal said Perpetual Adoration provides a "bottomless well of grace."

"To go into the chapel, to kneel, say your rosary, say other prayers, to read, to look at our Lord in the monstrance is such a consolation; it is such a manifestation of His immense love for us," Deal said.

"This chapel is being dedicated that we may come and see the Lord. We reflect, worship and are renewed by His presence here," Bishop Curlin said. "We are comforted by the fact that in this special house of prayer we can find the Lord, but we are also challenged to find Christ in our lives and the lives of those around us."

The sisters of the Poor Servants of the Mother of God, who operate the nursing home, established Perpetual Adoration at Maryfield in June, 1994. Faithful come from Greensboro, Kernersville, Thomasville and Winston-Salem. As part of the dedication ceremony, Bishop Curlin carried the monstrance in procession from the main chapel to the adoration chapel.

The building of the Perpetual Adoration chapel was a yearlong project. "This tremendous and most important undertaking has been a success because of the strong support that has been received — financially, and equally significantly, spiritually and physically," said Poor Servants of the Mother of God Sister Lucy Hennessy.

Parish Nurse Is Minister Of Health

By PAUL FREDETTE

Correspondent

HENDERSONVILLE — "A parish what?" Some parishioners at Immaculate Conception Church are still puzzled when Mary Scillieri introduces herself as the parish nurse. The pastor, Capuchin Father John Aurilia, admits the idea is new to him, too. "I learned of this program only last year. It was a shocking experience in the good sense of the word — ministering to both the body and the soul. The parish nursing program involves a holistic approach to health. It's a blessing for our parish because so many of our parishioners are older people."

Mary Scillieri recalls her first thoughts upon learning of the position. "A parish nurse — that's something new?" Further thought, she says, led her to realize that while this particular position made possible by Park Ridge Hospital with a grant from Duke University is very recent, the inspiration is actually quite old.

"The Church has always ministered to the sick," she says. Scillieri situates her role as a nurse at the very heart of Jesus' own ministry. "The Church has been involved in healing and holistic growth since the moment Jesus said to one man who could not walk, 'Your sins are forgiven,' while to another he said, 'Get up and walk.'" In her view, the fact that Jesus always addressed the whole person illuminates the basic character of nursing as ministry over the centuries.

Today, health care systems are often criticized for having grown too complex and depersonalized in the past 50 years. Scillieri believes that, as hospitals work to become more decentralized, health care providers will find the Church as a natural environment for bringing services into local communities. "The Church has always affirmed the faith-health connection," she told the assembled congregation at Mass. "Our spirituality corresponds with our overall health. As our heart and spirit goes, so our body will go as well."

A native of Erie, Pa., Scillieri worked as a psychiatric nurse in Flagstaff, Ariz., for more than three years before coming to North Carolina. She credits her commitment to affirming the Church's role in healing to her Catholic upbringing and education at Villa Maria Elementary School and later at Gannon University in Erie. "When I was educated as a nurse at Gannon University, nothing that was taught that did not have some element of spirituality about it. You can't separate a person's body and emotions from their spirit — and I was looking for a way to integrate this."

Scillieri now occupies a small office on the parish grounds and is deciding just how to best use the 20 hours per week for which she has been hired. On examining the variety of parish ministries currently serving the needs of the homebound, those in hospitals and nursing homes and the recently bereaved, she reports, "It's already happening — the corporal works of mercy. My job is to coordinate what's happening...to discover the needs of people here and connect them with resources available in the Church or in the larger community."

Noting that more than 60 parishioners are currently in nursing homes and the list of homebound is seldom less than 30, she sees herself in the role of liaison and advocate as well as nurse; an expansion that might be better termed "minister of health" than parish nurse.

Even now Scillieri knows she wants to spend at least part of the week across the street at Immaculata School with the children. Congregation of the Sisters of Holy Cross Sister Judith McKenna, principal, has already indicated to Scillieri that, although first-aid is routinely handled by teachers who are also nurses, and vaccinations administered by county nurses, there is plenty of health-related screening and education to be done.

The variety in Scillieri's nursing background is already extensive. Her experiences in medical, surgical, childbirth education, involvement with hospice and work with victims of alcohol and chemical dependency have equipped her with a considerable range of skills. This will prove an even greater asset as she responds to a diversity of needs in the faith community. "I was a generalist in the age of specialists," says Scillieri, adding with a smile, "and it has brought me to parish nursing."

Greatest in the Kingdom

The disciples asked Jesus, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" He called a child over, placed it in their midst, and said, "Amen, I say to you, unless you turn and become like children, you will not enter the kingdom of heaven. Whoever humbles himself like this child is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven." Matthew 18:1-4

"We are also grateful to the strong corps of adorers, who so faithfully come here to pray before the Blessed Sacrament. It is your devotion to our Lord, and to the extra effort you expend in coming out here to adore him, that is the reason for our celebration today," Sister Lucy added.

Bishop Curlin praised the work of the Poor Servants of the Mother of God and volunteers of Maryfield. "I think your greatest work is your care for the aged and sick. Your ministry can be unbelievably difficult," he said.

"Perhaps the single greatest thing that you have done in your ministry is to enthrone Jesus in our midst," the bishop added. "He is the source from whom grace and strength for ministry flow. Sisters, I thank you on behalf of the diocese for visibly reminding us that Jesus is the center of our lives."

The faithful come from High Point, Greensboro, Kernersville, Thomasville and Winston-Salem to take part in Perpetual Adoration at Maryfield.

Scholarship A Testimonial Of Students' Faith, Leadership

Catholic Campus Ministry and the Foundation make a presentation honoring the life of UNCC student Kim Piccolo.

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — More than eight years have passed since Barbara Neff-Hutchison's first effort to establish an Endowed Catholic Scholarship Fund for Catholic students attending the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

Some $10,000 later, the UNCC Catholic Campus Ministry chaplain, along with Diocese of Charlotte Foundation Executive Director Jim Kelley, presented Cynthia Soderholm the Kim Piccolo Endowed Scholarship. Soderholm, a senior double-majoring in accounting and management information systems, received the scholarship during a presentation at the Catholic Center Aug. 13.

"I'm honored and touched to have been chosen," said Soderholm, a parishioner of St. Thomas Aquinas Church. "It makes me feel very humble."

The scholarship honors the life of Kim Piccolo, a UNCC business major and a member of the Catholic Campus Ministry who in January 1989 was murdered in her apartment. Her parents, Bonnie and John Piccolo, are former parishioners of St. Matthew Church in Charlotte.

The endowment has been in place within the diocese since July 1994. It was one of the first four endowments — and the first scholarship — set up by the Foundation, and has since grown by 74 percent thanks to both income earned as well as the contributions of individuals and organizations. The Foundation currently comprises 24 endowments, with assets totaling $2.56 million.

The $600 scholarship is directed at tuition costs as Soderholm finishes her final year of school. With it, she and future recipients will receive funds to ease their financial burden during college years. Both Kelley and Neff-Hutchison hope to see the endowment — and thereby, the scholarships — continue to grow over time.

"The purpose of the endowments is not only to provide money, but to provide a means of changing lives," said Kelley. "This particular endowment marks the first grant made from the Foundation to help an individual, rather than a parish or school or other entity. As the Foundation continues to grow, we hope to continue providing such distributions throughout the diocese."

"The important thing," added Neff-Hutchison, "is that we've reached our goal — we've been able to give honor to Kim's life."

Neff-Hutchison, who worked with parochial vicar Franciscan Father Tom Crangle of St. Thomas Aquinas Church in deciding on a recipient, said Soderholm was the obvious choice. The determined 21-year-old has worked her way through school, and as a member of Catholic Campus Ministry, better known as Chi Rho, Soderholm took on leadership responsibilities which further identified her as a caring person of faith — much like Kim Piccolo herself. "We wanted a financial need, we wanted scholarship, and we wanted Catholic loyalty to campus ministry," she said. "Cynthia met that criteria, and she also is someone with the same personality traits as Kim — that same goodness and faith. Presenting the scholarship to her just felt as if it was in the spirit of the entire project."

In that endowed scholarships rely on consistent contributions to grow, Neff-Hutchison and Kelley remind people that the scholarship fund is always open to expansion. To make tax-deductible contributions to this memorial celebrating the life of a faithful Catholic and student, make checks payable to The Kim Piccolo Endowed Scholarship Fund and send them to Jim Kelley, Executive Director of the Foundation, 1524 East Morehead Street, Charlotte, N.C. 28207.

The Pope Speaks

Mary Embraced Role Of Servant To Which God Calls All, Says Pope

Dear brothers and sisters,

Our catechesis today deals with Mary's response to the angel at the Annunciation, an act of free submission to God and a conscious giving of herself to his will. In this, she shows her complete willingness to be "the handmaid of the Lord." In fact, her words anticipate those of Christ himself, who declared: "The Son of Man has come not to be served, but to serve." (cf. Mt 20:28; Mk 10:45). Thus, from the outset, there is a marvelous correlation between Mother and Son in their interior disposition to serve and to give themselves totally to God's will. Indeed, it is as Christ himself said: "My food is to do the will of him who sent me, and to accomplish his work" (Jn 4:34). In total and loving obedience to the divine will, Mary had an intimate share in her Son's passion and death, so much so that "a sword pierced her own soul also" (cf. Lk 2:35).

I extend a special greeting to the representatives of the Department of Religious Affairs of the government of Thailand: I hope that your visit to Rome will give you a renewed appreciation of the church's mission at the service of the human family. Upon all the English-speaking visitors, especially the groups from Sweden, Thailand, Japan and the United States, I invoke the peace and grace of Jesus Christ, our lord and savior.

Pope, Church Leaders Condemn Change In Poland's Abortion Law

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — Pope John Paul II and Polish church leaders have condemned a vote by Parliament to permit more legal abortions. "Parliamentarians elected to defend society and safeguard human life have declared themselves in favor of the death of innocent, helpless people," said Bishop Tadeusz Pieronek, secretary-general of the Polish bishops' conference. "It is horrifying that someone can coldbloodedly calculate the death of another," he said. At the papal summer residence in Castel Gandolfo Sept. 1, Pope John Paul told Polish pilgrims: "I am filled with sadness by the fact that in our homeland, which suffered so much during the Second World War, the drama of the death of thousands of innocent and defenseless human beings continues."

Pope Visits Ancient Monastery, Meets With Elderly In Hungary

PANNONHALMA, Hungary (CNS) — Pope John Paul II visited an ancient, mountaintop monastery in Hungary, meeting with some ill and elderly people under care there. Upon his arrival in Budapest on the morning of Sept. 6 and throughout the day, he spread an unceasing message of hope. Speaking often in Hungarian, he encouraged the victims of unexpected economic hardship and other disappointments in post-Cold War Hungary not to abandon faith. And he underscored the importance of this message in personal encounters along the way. Whether from emotion or the fresh mountain air on a crystalline day, the color rose in the pope's cheeks as he greeted a receiving line of religious who worked in the 1,000-year-old Benedictine monastery at Pannonhalma. Glancing at the identification tags hung about their necks for the occasion, he took trouble to pronounce some first names, to the delight of the people filing by.

Partial-Birth Abortion Is Wrong

On Sept. 19, Congress will attempt to override the veto of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Bill. Eighty-six percent of Americans believe this type of abortion is morally wrong when it is explained to them, yet our president vetoed the wishes of the American people as expressed through their elected officials in Congress.

The media has misled us because they refer to it as a "late-term abortion." Only 26 percent of Americans know the nature of this brutal, barbaric procedure, according to Carol Everett, a former owner of several abortion clinics. Of 35,000 abortions performed in her clinics, Everett has stated that not one was ever done for the health of the mother.

Medical journals state that the only reason for this kind of abortion is to ensure a dead baby since some abortions produce live babies. How can anyone sanction a procedure where a living baby is drawn feet first through the birth canal while its head remains within the birth canal, and scissors are inserted into the base of the skull and the brain suctioned?

This procedure is never necessary for the "health" of the mother since it takes 72 hours to prepare her body, and it actually endangers her life. If a woman were at risk, a doctor would normally do a C-section.

Abortionists can do three of these procedures in an hour and get paid $750 to $4,000 cash for each one, often avoiding income taxes. If we took the money out of abortions, the number of them would be drastically reduced. When society condones the behavior of abortion, is it any wonder that the value of life has declined and social problems have increased since Roe vs. Wade?

Time is short. Call your representative in Congress and both senators: Sen. Lauch Faircloth, (202) 224-3154, or (704) 375-1993; Sen. Jesse Helms, (202) 224-6342; Rep. Sue Myrick, (202) 225-1976, or (704) 362-1060; Rep. Mel Watt, (202) 225-1510, or (704) 344-9950; or Rep. Bill Hefner, (704) 332-9369.

Rosh Hashannah

This is a sacred time for our Jewish friends. At sundown on September 14, Jews all over the world will begin the observance of Rosh Hashannah, a two-day holiday that marks both the beginning of the new year (5757) and the beginning of the Ten Days of Repentance. The ten days end with the observance of Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. Repentance, atonement, starting anew — all people of faith can identify with those needs.

Many rituals associated with these High Holy Days help Jews to stay connected with their families, culture and history as well as their faith. On the first day of Rosh Hashannah families gather at a body of flowing water for the Tashlich ("cast off") ceremony. They throw bread crumbs on the water while reciting Psalms and penitential prayers, a symbolic casting away of sins.

These Days of Awe, as they are also called, offer a time to review life, to acknowledge moments of both joy and shame. As one rabbi puts it, "We admit where we have failed and where we have hit the mark."

Here's a story Rabbi Sue Levi Elwell told in a Rosh Hashannah sermon. It is the custom for Jewish children to get new clothes for the new year's celebration. Years ago, on the edge of a small town, a poor seamstress would take special delight in creating new outfits out of remnants left by her wealthier clients. These were for the children in the local orphanage.

In time the seamstress died and the orphanage closed down. Meanwhile the local synagogue grew. The congregation needed to raise money for expenses. So they asked a famous industrialist, who had spent his childhood in the orphanage, to worship with them for the High Holy Days. They hoped he would share the secret of his success. He accepted the invitation.

When asked the key to his rags-to-riches achievement, the executive spoke of his loneliness as an orphan. He longed for some real connection to his past, to hope for the future. He told how he had looked forward to the set of new clothes he got every New Year. "But for me the new clothes held a special secret: each year, in one of the pockets, was a small note...It assured me that I was not alone and that I would not spend all the days of my life longing."

What was written on the note? "That is not what is important," he said. "Someone, and I never learned who, sent those messages just to me. And that made all the difference."

You see, this is not only a day of judgment and atonement, but a day of reconnection with one another through the small acts of kindness that make up our everyday lives. God expects us to understand the power of simple deeds and to bring real blessings to those with whom we live and work every-day.

You and I can also take our places at the water's edge and as Rabbi Elwell said, "Cast out the crumbs of last year's deeds, the memories of wounds sustained and inflicted, the remnants of conversations that hurt instead of healed."

Because it is God who helps us distinguish between what must be cast off and what must be cherished and preserved. It is God who inspires us to perform acts of loving kindness. And it is God who reminds each of us, in the world of the Talmud, that when a person saves a single soul, it's as if he or she had saved the whole world.

Question Box

Father John Dietzen

Literal And Literalist Bible Interpretations

Q. This is a follow-up question to your column of several weeks ago on literal interpretation of Scripture.

You say the church documents have a problem with fundamentalist literal ways of understanding the Bible. But isn't it rather selective in applying literal and non-literal solutions?

A Protestant friend agrees that God often speaks symbolically or metaphorically in the Bible, as in the story of Jonah and the large fish.

But he is puzzled then by our insistence on a literal interpretation of the words of transubstantiation spoken by Jesus at the Last Supper.

Our response has been that this literal interpretation is the core of our faith and is not a matter about which we're inclined to speculate or seek a rational explanation.

Can you help us over this seemingly uneven application of literal and non-literal understandings of the Bible?

A. The whole matter comes down to what one means by literal.

You may recall that, in the column to which you refer, I distinguished between what are often called literal and literalist understandings of Scripture.

Literalist interpretation means translating and understanding a passage simply word for word, generally seeing in it the meaning those words would have if they were written today. Historical context, changes in language and so on are considered irrelevant.

It is this "fundamentalist" approach to the Bible that contrasts with the major thrust of Catholic and most other exegesis today.

The literal sense of a Bible passage, on the other hand, is the meaning expressed directly by the inspired human authors, the meaning that the author of each passage intended when he wrote it.

As a major Catholic document puts it, this literal sense is the fruit of inspiration, the meaning intended by God as principal author ("Interpretation of the Bible in the Church," Pontifical Biblical Commission 1993; section II-B).

Thus, a predominant purpose of biblical scholarship today is to discover that literal meaning with every available scientific and historical method.

If you think about what I've said, it is clear that the genuine literal sense of a passage may very well be the plain, self-evident meaning. It is not necessarily

"Well here we are at last. It is all so wonderful! My mind is filled with the most vivid impressions — thousands of them. What before was thousands of miles away is now all around us. I have not time to describe anything now. I must just say that the houses are knocked to pieces quite as effectively as the Sunday papers picture them. Once again, I beg you not to worry about me. Just remember that I am enjoying life to the fullest. What may be hardships to others are to me just wonderfully interesting experiences. It is perhaps not right to write in such a light vein of such a terrible war, but I do find it wonderfully interesting and am having a bang-up good time and that is all there is to it."

So ended a letter from Lieutenant Madison H. Lewis of New York, to his mother and father on April 20, 1918. My mother discovered a copy of this letter while cleaning out our family's attic this summer. My mother's grandmother, Jeanette Hansen, was a first cousin and dear friend of Madison's mother, Hope Lewis. Hope typed copies of the letters she received from her son during World War I and sent them to relatives who were anxious to receive news of her 22-year-old soldier and son, serving in France.

My mother also uncovered a box of love letters from her grandfather to her grandmother at the turn-of-the-century. The letters from my great-grandfather Carl were written to my great-grandmother during a challenging period early on in their marriage when they were separated because of his job in Montreal.

As my mother, my husband, Joe, and I read through these letters, we felt connected with a piece of our past. How privileged we were to hold in our hands the very letters that were once in the rugged hands of Great-grandfather Carl as he wrote such tender words to is "dearest little sweetheart" in 1899. As we read my grandfather's words on the white parchment paper discussing his malaria, his anxiety when the train didn't bring a letter from his "sweet and pretty wife," we were touched beyond words. There is something absolutely revealing about a person writing during a time of uncertainty. A latter day reader not only gets a look back into time, but also a look into the writer's soul.

I've thought about this recently as friends, editors and acquaintances have told me that I really must start communicating by e-mail. I'm told that it is quick, easy and in the words of one friend, "You hardly have to think what you're writing."

I understand how practical and effective e-mail is, both inside and outside of the workplace. But as e-mail grows in popularity, it's important to celebrate the power and beauty of the hand-written word as well. We have a responsibility to use God's gift of technology in ways that educate and enlighten people. Ultimately, what is most important is not how we communicate, but what we communicate.

The art of letter writing has played a profound role in our own faith. More than half of the books in the New Testament are letters. St. Paul, one of the

Raleigh Diocese Dealing With The Aftermath Of Fran

By: MATT DOYLE
NC Catholic Staff

RALEIGH — Several days after Hurricane Fran tore through eastern North Carolina, officials of the Diocese of Raleigh continued their assessment of damage from the storm. Initial reports say that church property suffered only minor damage.

Fran came ashore near Wilmington in the evening hours of Sept. 5 and maintained hurricane-force winds as far as the Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill area, about 120 miles inland. Widespread power outages affecting more than one million people kept utility workers from across the country busy for several days.

Pam Denning, assistant director of Catholic Social Ministries in the diocese, says Catholic Charities USA has given a $10,000 grant to the local office. That money will be used for food and other basic needs.

One of Denning's specialties is dealing with disaster preparation and response. She says the emotional impact of the storm will linger for some time.

In conducting a critical stress debriefing session with several families in Greenville, Denning said the expected fears and anxieties surfaced. "For a lot of people it is just that loss of control — not knowing what has happened and what will happen.

"People worry about their families and their neighbors. There is that long period of time that you can't get in touch with anybody. While your mind tells you everybody is probably okay — you are just so afraid."

There will be times when the threat of new storm will bring those same fears and anxieties to the forefront. Denning said in some cases children are spending hours watching weather on cable systems because they are afraid it will happen again.

The power outage did present an opportunity to turn bad fortune into acts of charity. In Wilmington, Catholic Social Ministries (CSM) took advantage of a donation of cold cuts from The Subway Sandwich Shop and turned that meat into meals for people who were in need.

St. Mark Catholic Church in Wilmington put its new ice machine to good use. Parishioners gathered what was in the machine, bagged and turned it over to CSM for distribution.

That story was repeated many times in many different ways throughout the region. Supermarkets gave away meat supplies before they spoiled, rescue mission reported they had more food than they were equipped to handle and various agencies donated ice which had become as precious as gold as the power outages continued.

Society of the Sisters of St. Ursula Sister Rosemary McNamara of St. Mary Church in Wilmington said residents of Hadden Hall, a senior-citizen housing complex, fared well during this storm. Hurricane Bertha, which had passed through the area several weeks before Fran, led residents to form an emergency committee that helped prepare the occupants to ride out the storm.

One big difference this time, according to Sister Rosemary, was the residents planned their food shopping better. There was less food on hand that would spoil in case of a power outage.

While recovering from Fran, people in North Carolina are keeping an eye on more trouble from the tropics. Sister Rosemary said the residents of Hadden Hall "would be very happy if (hurricane) Hortense decided to go elsewhere."

Norma C. Boyd, Mother Of Asheville Pastor, Passes Away

ASHEVILLE — Norma Torp Boyd, 69, mother of Rev. C. Morris Boyd, pastor of St. Joan of Arc Church, died Aug. 28, after a brief illness.

Affectionately known as "mom" by most of her friends and acquaintances, Mrs. Boyd lived with her son at the rectory since moving to Asheville in 1988 when Father Boyd became pastor of St. Joan of Arc. She was known and admired for her caring disposition and good humor, her love of the arts, her skills as a cook and crafter, and especially her enthusiasm for the Atlanta Braves.

Bishop William G. Curlin presided at the Mass of Christian burial Sept. 2 at St. Joan of Arc Church. He was assisted by Father Boyd and numerous priests from the area. Father Conrad Hoover, pastor of St. Elizabeth Church in Boone, was homilist, and Father Frank Cancro, pastor of St. Eugene Church in Asheville, was master of ceremonies. Patrick Evans, a member of the pastoral council at St. Joan of Arc Church and family friend, delivered the eulogy after Communion.

He described Mrs. Boyd as a woman of remarkable compassion who reminded others that "it's important for someone to care," even in the midst of her own illness and pain.

Mrs. Boyd, a native of Mobile, Ala., was the daughter of the late Furman N. and Minnie Goetting Torp. A 1947 graduate of City Hospital School of Nursing in Mobile, she considered the 36-year nursing career from which she retired in 1983 a genuine vocation. Her nurse's cap and cape rested upon her casket throughout the funeral liturgy, together with a single rose, a cross she herself had crafted, and the rosary given her by Pope John Paul II in 1989. Mrs. Boyd was received into the Catholic Church by her son a year earlier, and as a member of St. Joan of Arc, developed a deep devotion to St. Joan.

In addition to her son, Mrs. Boyd is survived by a brother, Paul E. Torp of Mobile. Interment took place Sept. 5 at Magnolia Cemetery in Mobile, Ala.

Cursillos hispanos en Clemmons

CLEMMONS — El pasado mes se llevaron a cabo el quinto Cursillo de hombres en español y el quinto Cursillo de mujeres en español de la Diócesis de Charlotte, en la parroquia de la Sagrada Familia (Holy Family), en Clemmons.

El Cursillo de hombres tuvo lugar del 1 al 4 de agosto y el de las mujeres del 15 al 18.

Los Cursillos fueron dirigidos y coordinados totalmente por equipos compuestos por cursillistas hispanos de esta diócesis y apoyados en la cocina por cursillistas de habla inglesa, quienes demostraron gran espíritu de servicio, hermandad y amor.

El director espiritual de ambos Cursillos fue el Rev. Vicente H. Finnerty, C.M., Director de la Pastoral Hispana de la Diócesis de Charlotte y Director Espiritual del Movimiento de Cursillos Hispánicos de la Diócesis, quien con un gran espíritu de amor y trabajo mantuvo a los candidatos y equipos animados y unidos todo el tiempo con sus meditaciones y palabras que llevaban el mensaje de verdad y amor de Nuestro Señor Jesucristo.

El equipo del Cursillo de hombres estaba compuesto por nueve cursillistas y el de las mujeres por ocho. Estas personas se prepararon con mucho amor y sacrificio por unos seis meses, respondiendo a la invitación que les hicieron los coordinadores.

La preparación de los equipos comenzó con una escuela intensiva donde se explicó la metodología a seguir, la preparación de los diferentes temas o rollos y todo lo necesario para llevar los Cursillos a una culminación exitosa.

Durante el período de preparación todos los miembros participaron semanalmente en sus reuniones de grupo, que son parte del post-Cursillo.

En estas reuniones se comparte el espíritu del movimiento que es la piedad, el estudio y la acción. También participaron en una escuela de dirigentes, en un retiro espiritual y en ultreyas o reuniones mensuales.

Al Cursillo de hombres, que fue coordinado con gran humildad y sencillez por Luis Lecaros, asistieron 21 candidatos, quienes cuando concluyó el mismo dieron testimonios de que el Espíritu Santo había invadido sus corazones y que sentían su ardor como los discípulos de Emaús.

Marta Medina fue la coordinadora del Cursillo de mujeres, y ella y el pequeño equipo, con fe y confianza en el Señor, no se desalentaron al recibir a 36 candidatas, un número mayor de las que ellas esperaban.

La clausura del Cursillo de mujeres fue también muy emotiva. Las nuevas cursillistas dieron testimonio de que sus vidas habían sufrido un cambio en esos tres días y estaban dispuestas a cambiar sus ambientes. Ellas dijeron que ahora sabían que Cristo las necesitaba. Al final, el sacerdote les dijo en nombre de Jesús: "Cristo cuenta contigo", a lo cual todas respondieron con voz alta y clara, levantando los brazos en señal de victoria: "y yo con su gracia".

Dos tercios de los candidatos y candidatas proceden de la región de Asheboro, donde seis cursillistas con gran ánimo y alentados por el Padre José Mack, párroco de la Parroquia de San José, participaron con gran esfuerzo y sacrificio en la formación de los equipos, asistiendo a las escuelas y reuniones de preparación, que se llevaron a cabo en Charlotte.

También hubo candidatos de Yadkinville, Jefferson, Clemmons, Winston-Salem, Salisbury y Charlotte.

Graduados se desvían como misioneros en camino hacia sus carreras

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Cuando se graduaron de las escuelas superiores en esta primavera, Ben Gaffney, Nick López y Paul Caulfield hicieron rápidamente planes para salir del sendero de sus carreras antes de ingresar seriamente en él.

Los tres salieron de Washington el 9 de agosto hacia Guayaquil, Ecuador, donde vivirán y trabajarán durante un año como misioneros laicos en un barrio urbano cerca de la ciudad más populosa del país, en la parte norte de la América del Sur.

López, de Silver Spring, Maryland, y Caulfield, de Kensington, Maryland, ambos graduados de la Universidad de Fairfield, en Connecticut, y Gaffney, graduado de la Universidad de Notre Dame, oriundo de Seattle, se unirán a otros dos voluntarios en una misión llamada Rostro de Cristo. Ellos pasarán un año enseñando, ayudando en la atención médica y proporcionando otros servicios para los pobres.

Los tres hombres de 22 años de edad tienen motivaciones ligeramente distintas para posponer los pasos de sus carreras o los estudios para grados avanzados, a fin de realizar trabajo de misión. Gaffney quiere aprender sobre sí mismo y sobre otra cultura. López está ansioso por aprender español y experimentar la vida más allá de los suburbios de Maryland y Connecticut donde él creció, asistió a la escuela superior y espera trabajar. Caulfield quiere reciprocitar algunas de las ventajas que se le han dado.

Pero ellos concurren en esperar que la experiencia amplíe sus perspectivas y los deje mejor preparados para cualquier cosa que ellos hagan después en sus vidas.

Mensaje del Padre

El corazón del evangelio de Marcos se encuentra en su capítulo 8, versículos 27-30. Es el corazón porque habla de lo central de todo el evangelio. En este pasaje, Jesús les hace dos preguntas a sus discípulos. La primera pregunta no es muy importante. Quiere saber qué dice la gente en la calle de él, qué chisme han escuchado los discípulos. Es una pregunta para recoger información. La segunda pregunta es la pregunta clave. Jesús quiere saber cuál es la opinión de estos discípulos, esta gente que ha tenido una experiencia de primera mano con él. Es Pedro quien da la respuesta: «Tú eres el Mesías».

La clave en este pasaje es el movimiento de una fe de otros a una fe personal. Jesús exige esa clase de fe. Cuando él se encuentra con María después de la muerte de su hermano, Lázaro, él le pregunta si ella cree en la Resurrección. Ella dice que sí, la del último día. Jesús le dice que él es la Resurrección y la Vida y le pregunta si ella cree esto. María responde que sí y Jesús le restaura la vida a su hermano. El compromiso personal con Jesús era necesario. La fe no es un dogma impersonal, sino un compromiso con la persona de Jesús.

El pasaje de la mujer samaritana (Juan 4, 5-30), nos da el ejemplo más claro de este movimiento en la fe. Jesús pasa tiempo conversando con la mujer enseñándole lo que él es y lo que él significa. Ella se conmueve tanto por esta experiencia que corre al pueblo para anunciar a todos lo que Jesús había dicho y les convence de que vayan a escucharlo. Por el testimonio de la mujer, las personas van y escuchan a Jesús y se convencer de su mensaje y su valor. Y todos dicen que ya su fe no depende del testimonio de la mujer. Han visto y creen. Tenemos aquí un movimiento de una fe de otros a una fe de primera mano, o personal.

Es importante notar los pasos que Jesús usa con sus discípulos. Primero, les pregunta qué piensan otros. Nosotros también necesitamos buscar la opinión que otros han tenido de esto; las experiencias, las reflexiones de los que nos han precedido, como los autores espirituales, los escritos de la Biblia. Esta clase de información es importante para nosotros.

Ciertamente, nuestra fe tiene que ser algo que viene de otros. No podemos caminar con Jesús o escucharlo de la misma manera física de hace veinte siglos. Dependemos del mensaje y testimonio de otros para tener una idea de quién es Jesús. Para muchos de nosotros fue mamá o papá o los abuelos quienes primero nos hablaron de Jesús, pero nuestra búsqueda y conocimiento de él no puede quedar ahí.

Es lo que pasó con la mujer samaritana. La gente se acercó a Jesús por el testimonio de la mujer. Pero nadie estaba contento de quedarse con una fe de otros. Después de escuchar a la mujer, la gente llega a escuchar a Jesús y lo experimenta en sus propias vidas. Por eso la gente puede decir a la mujer: «Nuestra fe ya no depende de ti;

Hermanos y hermanas, una cosa es haber oído de grandes libros. Es otra leerlos y conocerlos. Es una cosa que le cuenten de la música. Es otra, escucharla, exponer su alma a su encanto, dejar que la vida sea enriquecida por ella. Es una cosa escuchar de la mecánica. Es otra trabajar en un motor. Es una cosa creer en el amor, leer sobre él, escuchar a otros hablar de él; es otra cosa enamorarse.

Todas las cosas grandes son plenamente realizadas únicamente por la experiencia personal. Así sucede con Cristo. Hemos oído acerca de él toda nuestra vida, pero ¿hasta qué punto lo hemos experimentado? El es y debe ser diferente para cada uno de nosotros. Cada uno de los evangelistas tenía una visión diferente de Jesús.

Para Marcos, por ejemplo, Jesús era el Mesías sufriente, quien validaba su misión y trabajo a través de la entrega al Padre y así es que el sufrimiento de los seguidores de Jesús tiene significado. Marcos llegó a conocer a Jesús a través del sufrimiento.

Para Lucas, la compasión de Jesús era el factor principal. Lucas veía a Jesús como el que se rodeaba con los pobres, los marginados, los enfermos y los pecadores. Jesús trató a todas estas personas con amor y misericordia y así, miraba Lucas a Jesús.

Para Mateo, Jesús era un gran Maestro que explicaba y llevaba a cabo las promesas de Dios al pueblo judío. Jesús fue el fin y la plenitud de todo lo que fue prometido a Israel. Jesús era un maestro.

Para Juan, Jesús era el Hijo de Dios que vino a revelar la naturaleza de Dios y su mensaje a su Pueblo. Jesús llevó a cabo la voluntad de Dios hasta el final. En el evangelio de Juan, la pregunta que continuamente se hace es cómo estamos nosotros en relación con Dios. Leemos que Jesús es la Luz del Mundo; entonces, ¿quiénes somos nosotros? Somos el pueblo que camina en las tinieblas, que necesita luz. Jesús es la Vid verdadera; somos las ramas. Jesús es el Buen Pastor; necesitamos que nos guíe. El es el Pan de Vida, el Agua Viva, la Resurrección y la Vida; somos los que necesitamos ese pan, ese agua, esa vida.

De muchas maneras, la visión de Pablo es la más interesante. El experimentó una sola revelación de Jesús en el camino a Damasco y desde ese momento, su vida cambió completamente. Pablo nunca podría ver las cosas de la misma forma de nuevo. El nos dice que todo lo que él había considerado como ganancia, es nada en comparación con el seguimiento de Jesús. Pablo creció en conocimiento y apreciación de quién era Jesús y lo que significaba para su vida. Todo tenía que ser revalorizado, cambiado. El sufrimiento tenía un nuevo significado y valor; cuando se burlaban de él no significaba nada. Las privaciones y sacrificios eran parte de su trabajo; la alegría venía de los éxitos limitados y al perseverar cuando sabía que tenía la razón.

"La figura de Cristo"

Jesús transformó la vida de Pablo, y Pablo llegó a conocer a Jesús de una manera especial. Toda su vida empezó a girar alrededor de Jesús—como él mismo dice: «Ya no soy yo quien vivo sino Cristo que vive en mí».

Podemos observar que la visión de Jesús que Pablo tenía está basada en su pregunta a Jesús en el camino a Damasco: «¿Quién eres, Señor?» Es la misma pregunta que Jesús hace a Pedro y a los apóstoles.

Hay un verdadero sentido por el cual nosotros también debemos tener una experiencia de Jesús como la de Pablo. Mucho de lo que conocemos de Jesús es de otros, aún de la Biblia, pero tarde o temprano, tenemos que hacernos la misma pregunta que hizo Pablo: «¿Quién eres, Señor?» Nuestra respuesta puede cambiar nuestras vidas. Y no es una respuesta que damos una sola vez, sino que, como Pablo, tenemos que crecer en ella a lo largo de nuestras vidas. Una vez leí una pequeña poesía que decía:

*Estás escribiendo un evangelio, un capítulo cada día,
Por los hechos que haces, por las palabras que dices.
La gente lee lo que escribes, seas hipócrita, seas fiel.
Oye, ¿qué es el evangelio según tú?*

Se nota lo que es la experiencia de Jesús en la vida de uno por la manera en que vive.

Hay un pasaje en los evangelios en que Jesús sana a un hombre que había nacido ciego (Juan 9, 1-41). Después, los fariseos y escribas quieren saber cómo pasó eso. Primero, niegan que el hombre había nacido ciego y después dicen que Jesús era un pecador. Durante toda la interrogación la respuesta del hombre queda igual. «No sé cómo pasó, sé solamente que estaba ciego y ahora veo». Esto, hermanos y hermanas, es el evangelio de una vida transformada. Era de una manera, y ahora soy distinto, gracias al poder de Dios.

Algo parecido pasó con los apóstoles después de la muerte de Jesús. Lo experimentaron como vivo, todas sus vidas cambiaron y las vidas de todas las personas con quienes se relacionaron. Esta es la clase de evangelio que podemos escribir y predicar: el evangelio de una vida cambiada por el poder de Dios.

Entonces, ¿quién es Jesús? Jesús es Dios vivo entre nosotros. Se encarnó entre los hombres, se hizo hombre para manifestar a todos la misma vida de Dios, el amor. Es un hombre que nació de una mujer, nació pobre en un pesebre. Se identificó con los pobres y necesitados. Vivió una gran compasión para con los enfermos y los pecadores. Lloró por la muerte de su amigo, Lázaro. Era niño que jugaba, que fue a la escuela, que aprendió las tradiciones de su pueblo, que trabajó en el taller de San José. Aprendió a ser carpintero.

Se enojó, echando fuera del Templo a los negociantes. Caminaba y se cansaba. Enseñaba con poder y autoridad. Estaba plenamente envuelto en todos los problemas y realidades de su Pueblo y de su época. Se compadece de las muchedumbres que tienen hambre. Se ocupó de los enfermos, de los atribulados y de los agobiados. Pasó por el mundo haciendo el bien.

Es interesante, hermanos y hermanas, que en la época de Jesús, todo el mundo aceptaba que Jesús era hombre. La dificultad era aceptar que decía que era también hijo de Dios. Nosotros tenemos el problema opuesto. Fácilmente, aceptamos que es hijo de Dios, pero nos cuesta aceptar que es hombre como nosotros en todo, menos en el pecado.

Juan Pablo II dice que toda la humanidad encuentra su plenitud en la humanidad de Jesús. Si estamos buscando descubrir lo que es ser realmente humano, la respuesta está en la persona de Jesús.

Hermanos y hermanas, creo que a todos nosotros nos fascinan las personas que tienen la capacidad, el talento de imitar a otros. Estas personas por la manera que caminan, mueven sus cabezas, por sus gestos, sus voces, pueden imitar a otros. Esto es un verdadero talento. Muchas personas tienen héroes a quienes intentan imitar por la manera que viven.

Podemos decir que esto también es verdad de los apóstoles que andaban con Jesús. Ellos querían imitarlo. Vemos, por ejemplo, que Pedro quería caminar sobre el agua como Jesús. Los discípulos intentaron echar a los demonios como Jesús. Después de la Resurrección, ellos empezaron a hacer muchas de las mismas cosas que Jesús hizo durante su ministerio. Empezaron a predicar, sanar, exorcizar. Pero tal vez, lo más importante es que empezaron a pensar como Jesús. Empezaron a ver la salvación universal para todos los pueblos. Veían el valor de los pecadores y conocían la compasión y la comprensión. Estaban dispuestos a sufrir por Cristo. Empezaron a imitar a Cristo.

Es importante que tengamos una imagen correcta de Cristo. El es nuestro Mesías, como Pedro dice; nos salva de la falta de amor en el mundo, de nuestro pecado. Nos libera de todo lo que nos ata: la pobreza, la injusticia, la miseria, el pecado. El es humano como nosotros. Podemos relacionarnos con Dios porque podemos relacionarnos con Jesús, quien es humano. El es el Camino al Padre. Es el Camino, la Vida y la Verdad. El es hermano y amigo de nuestros corazones. Comprende lo que vivimos porque también es humano.

Hermanos, nosotros también en nuestro compromiso personal con Cristo, tenemos que trabajar con nuestra imitación de él. En la Eucaristía, el sacerdote levanta la hostia y la copa y ora: «Por Cristo, con él y en él...» Nuestras vidas tienen que ser por, con y en Cristo.

Cuando nos preguntan: «¿Quién dices tú que es Cristo?», nuestra respuesta tiene que ser proyectada en la imitación de Cristo en nuestras vidas, en el evangelio que escribimos todos los días.

Noticias de Asheboro

Por RUTH YASEN AQUINO
Durante los meses de julio y agosto la comunidad hispana de Asheboro tuvo la oportunidad de participar en el estudio del libro de los Hechos de los Apóstoles en la Iglesia de San José.

La señora Flora Smith fue la encargada de dirigir dichos estudios los cuales fueron muy bien acogidos por los participantes.

También el 4 de julio la ciudad de Asheboro celebró el día de la Independencia de los Estados Unidos con una gran fiesta donde hubo puestos alusivos a esta conmemoración y los siempre esperados fuegos artificiales.

El grupo de oración de la Iglesia de San José participó muy activamente en este evento y vendió deliciosos "antojitos mexicanos" con mucho éxito.

El 6 de julio en la Iglesia de Nuestra Señora de los Caminos, en Thomasville, se reunieron los miembros hispanos de esta comunidad con los de Monroe, Greensboro, Biscoe y Asheboro en un retiro de Evangelización y Convivencia dirigido por el Padre Vicente Finnerty, Director de la Pastoral Hispana de la Diócesis de Charlotte, con la asistencia del seminarista Juan Polanco.

Este retiro consistió de charlas, mesas redondas, cantos oraciones y confesiones. Todos los asistentes participaron con gran alegría y amor a Dios. El Espíritu Santo estuvo presente todo el tiempo y se vio reflejada en la cara de los asistentes el deseo de asistir a más retiros como éste.

Obispos guatemaltecos tratan de charlas de paz con rebeldes

LLAMADO A LA PAZ — Un miembro de la Patrulla de Defensa Civil de Guatemala asiste a una ceremonia el 9 de agosto, poniendo fin oficialmente a 14 años de operaciones de contra-insurgencia en contra de los guerrilleros izquierdistas en el altiplano de Guatemala. Su letrero dice: "Ya no queremos más guerra". La milicia fue creada en 1982 para ayudar al ejército a combatir a los guerrilleros, pero también fue culpada de algunos de los peores abusos contra los derechos humanos en el país.

CIUDAD GUATEMALA (CNS) — Los obispos guatemaltecos se reunieron en San Salvador con los dirigentes principales de los rebeldes guatemaltecos para tratar de las negociaciones continuas de paz con el gobierno.

Monseñor Jorge Mario Ávila del Águila, presidente de la Conferencia Episcopal de Guatemala, dijo que los rebeldes de la Unidad Nacional Revolucionaria Guatemalteca propusieron "la necesidad de crear un proyecto de consenso nacional para el desarrollo del país, al cual se invitaría a todos los sectores de la sociedad y el cual sería el producto de un diálogo".

Monseñor Ávila del Águila hizo notar que la propuesta de los rebeldes coincide con la carta pastoral más reciente de los Obispos, titulada "La Paz es Urgente", publicada en diciembre último.

"Cuando publicamos esa carta pastoral, lo hicimos sabiendo que la firma del acuerdo de paz no significa que vendrá la paz, sino que abre la puerta para edificarla", dijo Monseñor Ávila del Águila.

Además de Monseñor Ávila del Águila, los Monseñores Rodolfo Quezada Toruño y Víctor Hugo Martínez Contreras, Obispos de Zacapa y Esquipulas, y de Quetzaltenango, respectivamente, participaron también en la reunión del 30 de julio, en la cual estuvieron presentes tres de los cuatro miembros del Comando General de los rebeldes izquierdistas.

Monseñor Quezada presidió el trámite de paz entre 1990 y 1993 como representante de la conferencia episcopal. En enero de 1994, las charlas de paz empezaron bajo la moderación de las Naciones Unidas.

Se espera la firma de un acuerdo final de paz en septiembre de este año, que pondrá fin a más de 30 años de guerra interior y al conflicto armado de mayor duración en la América Latina.

Ya se han firmado los acuerdos sobre derechos humanos, una comisión de veracidad, las poblaciones desplazadas, los asuntos indígenas y los asuntos socioeconómicos.

En la mayoría de los casos, estos acuerdos proporcionan sencillamente un plano amplio para cambios en los cursos de acción que deberían ser llevados a la práctica, pero no disponen reformas inmediatas.

Argentinos en huelga después de peregrinación a santo patrón

BUENOS AIRES Argentina (CNS) — El día después que millares de argentinos comenzaron una peregrinación hacia un santuario que honra a San Cayetano, su santo patrón del trabajo, ocurrió una huelga nacional para protestar de la política económica del gobierno.

La peregrinación empezó después que sonaron 48 veces las campanas del Santuario de San Cayetano a medianoche, entre los días 6 y 7 de agosto, y los trabajadores fueron a la huelga el 8 de agosto.

La cantidad de peregrinos que fue al santuario excedió de un millón por primera vez en este año, a medida que el desempleo está afectando a 4,200,000 argentinos — el 17.1 por ciento de la población adulta.

La huelga fue realizada para protestar de las rebajas presupuestarias recientes hechas por el gobierno, que disminuirán dramáticamente los beneficios sociales para las familias pobres extensas.

Según dijeron los dirigentes sindicales, la huelga paralizó al 80 por ciento de la fuerza de trabajo en Buenos Aires. Las fuentes del gobierno dijeron que la cifra era "muy exagerada", pero reconocieron que la huelga tuvo un efecto considerable.

El Santuario de San Cayetano, situado en la vecindad de clase trabajadora de Liniers, honra al santo nacido en Vicenza, Italia, en 1480.

El 7 de agosto de cada año, los peregrinos forman una fila de casi una milla a fin de asistir a una de las 20 Misas que se celebran cada hora, desde las 4 de la mañana hasta la medianoche.

La Arquidiócesis de Buenos Aires suministró 400 sacerdotes en el santuario para oír confesiones, y 1,500 voluntarios de los grupos juveniles católicos para ayudar a mantener el orden en la fila y proporcionar alimentos o mantas durante la noche fría.

Bogus

Title Fits Film Filled With Awkward Fantasy Scenes

NEW YORK (CNS)—“Bogus” casts Whoopi Goldberg, Gerard Depardieu and an adorable tyke in a gentle, well-meaning fantasy that just doesn’t fly.

Albert (Haley Joel Osment) is 7, lives with his dancer single mom (Nancy Travis) in Vegas, where Antoine the magician (Denis Mercier) teaches him neat tricks.

But his happy little world ends when mom is killed in a car crash and Albert is told he must go live in New-ark with his mom’s foster sister, Harriet (Goldberg), who is just as un-happy to have been named his guard-ian. She’s a struggling single business-woman and the last thing she wants is a little white boy to raise.

alone. While on the plane his drawing springs to life in the form of an invis-ible-to-others secret pal, a great big bear of a Frenchman who calls himself Bo-gus (Depardieu).

And so as the threesome settle un-easily into Harriet’s apartment Bogus urges Albert to be patient with the too-busy businesswoman, who doesn’t like that Albert talks aloud to a make-believe pal. But when he tries to show her his magic, she hasn’t got time for such non-sense.

Sounds like Bogus is going to have to work a minor miracle to bring these two together, but of course there’s never any doubt that he will effect a magical transformation in harried Harriet.

Veteran director Norman Jewison (‘Fiddler on the Roof,’ ‘Moonstruck’) goes for an overly sentimental treatment of the story, relying heavily on the child’s vulnerability to tug at heartstrings. The boy is certainly appeal-ing, and Goldberg and Depardieu try hard, but the dramatic and fantasy ele-ments never come together as a satisfy-ing whole.

In fact, it’s mostly unconvincing, making the fantasy scenes — such as the hefty Depardieu and Goldberg doing a Ginger Rogers-Fred Astaire ballroom scene — look embarrassingly awkward.

The theme of believing in magic and the power of the imagination to deal with life is pushed hard where delicacy would have been more effective.

Instead, the precious treatment given Albert and the sudden if totally predictable bonding between boy and surrogate mom robs the audience of a genuine emotional connection to the story. Add to that Depardieu’s final flourish of talking to the camera as the movie concludes and you have a true fantasy misfire.

Due to a fatal car crash and fleet-ing violence, the U.S. Catholic Confer-ence classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Asso-ciation of America rating is PG — pa-rental guidance suggested.

Videos

“The Corn Is Green” (1945)

Fine adaptation of the Emlyn Wil-liams play set in 1895 when a dedicated teacher (Bette Davis) wins over a Welsh mining town and the local lord (Nigel Bruce) through her perseverance in start-ing a school and preparing her prize stu-dent (John Dall) to take the entrance exam for Oxford. Directed by Irving Rapper, the performances and period setting convincingly demonstrate the value of universal education, though an unwed pregnancy seriously complicates matters. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Associa-tion of America.

“Educating Rita” (1983)

British production from the Willy Russell play about a disillusioned, drunken professor of English (Michael Caine) who becomes involved with a spunky Dublin housewife (Julie Walters) determined to get an education. Directed by Lewis Gilbert, the Pygmalion rela-tionship has some charm but Walter’s characterization is somewhat crude and ethnically stereotyped. The U.S. Catho-lic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Associa-tion of America rating is PG — pa-rental guidance suggested.

“Goodbye, Mr. Chips” (1969)

Musical version of the James Hilton novel with Peter O’Toole as the distracted, unbending schoolmaster who is set upon, conquered and finally hu-manized by a hoydenish music hall per-former (Petula Clark). Director Herbert Ross shifts the focus from the academic to the happy marriage of such unlikely opposites, with pleasantly unobtrusive songs by Leslie Bricusse pacing an old-fashioned romance some will find quite charming, though youngsters are less apt to be enchanted by the sentimental pro-ceedings. The U.S. Catholic Confer-ence classification is A-I — general pa-tronage. The Motion Picture Associa-tion of America rating is G — general audiences.

“My Fair Lady” (1964)

Handsome production of the Lerner and Loewe musical based on George Bernard Shaw’s play, “Pygmalion,” about an egotistical pro-fessor (Rex Harrison) who makes a bet that he can transform the Cockney speech and manners of a London flower girl (Audrey Hepburn) well enough for her to pass for a lady at the upcoming Royal Ball. Predictably, it is not always the professor who gives the lessons. George Cukor’s direction, Cecil Beaton’s stunning sets and costumes, the charming performances and some wonderful music add up to splendid family entertainment. The U.S. Catho-lic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Pic-ture Association of America rating is G — general audiences.

NFL Coach Marchibroda:

Not Praying To Win, But To Do His Best

BALTIMORE (CNS) — At the two-minute warning before the players take the field, they kneel down in the locker room, join hands and pray the Lord's Prayer. The brief but reverent ritual is repeated at the end of the game, win or lose. Several hours earlier, players and other members of the Baltimore Ravens' staff, family and friends may have chosen to attend either a team-sponsored Mass or nondenominational chapel service, which are conducted concurrently. That the Ravens give prayer a priority in the midst of the competitive intensity of the National Football League is in part a reflection of the spirituality of the man who leads them: head coach Ted Marchibroda, to whom faith is as natural and comfortable a part of his life as is the game of football. The 65-year-old son of devoutly Catholic Polish immigrants, Marchibroda said his faith was formed and directed early on by his parents, especially his mother.

Auxiliary Bishop Retires On Anniversary Of Ordination

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (CNS) — The resignation of Auxiliary Bishop Benedict C. Franzetta of Youngstown was accepted by Pope John Paul II on Sept. 4, the 16th anniversary of the bishop's episcopal ordination. He was the third native Youngstown diocesan priest to become a bishop, having been preceded by retired Bishops James W. Malone of Youngstown and William A. Hughes of Covington, Ky. "I have been deeply appreciative of the honor and privilege to serve the diocese as priest and bishop, and to be a participant in the college of bishops," Bishop Franzetta wrote in a letter to brother priests, deacons and chancery colleagues notifying them of his impending resignation.

Jesuit Superior Disagrees With Father Drinan On Abortion Veto

BOSTON (CNS) — Jesuit Father Robert F. Drinan's provincial superior said Aug. 30 that he disagrees with Father Drinan's public defense of President Clinton's veto of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act. Father Drinan's articles on the issue last spring in The New York Times and National Catholic Reporter "seriously offended many good people," and he caused scandal "without intending to," said Father William A. Barry, head of the New England Jesuit province. "Since it might appear, by my silence on the issue, that the Society of Jesus supports Father Drinan's position, I want to say publicly, as his religious superior, that I disagree with Father Drinan in this case and have told him so. In fact, I wrote to President Clinton in May to protest his veto.... I hope that Congress will override the veto," Father Barry said.

Turn-Of-Century Parish Convent In Illinois Now A Family Home

OAK PARK, Ill. (CNS) — The former 20-room convent of St. Edmund Parish in Oak Park is now home to Sandy and John Troelstrup and their family of eight children. After the Dominican sisters who lived in the convent left the Chicago suburb, the parish sold the property to raise money for capital improvements needed at its school and church. According to Sandy Troelstrup, the stately, turn-of-the-century brick house suits them just fine. "We were under construction for eight months after moving in," she said. "We had to remove 150 feet of wall, because the small, cell-like rooms that served as the nuns' bedrooms weren't practical for us."

Outdoor Preaching Turns Golden For Appalachian Priest

LOUISA, Ky. (CNS) — Thousands of times the message has rung through the mountains: "My name is Father Beiting, and I'm here to talk about your best friend and mine — Jesus Christ." It's hard to say exactly how many times Msgr. Ralph Beiting, pastor of two parishes in the Diocese of Lexington and founder of the Christian Appalachian Project, has addressed a crowd in this way, and even harder to say how many people he has addressed. But when he sets up his loudspeaking equipment, anyone within a couple of miles is going to hear him, even if they can't see him. His first time at a microphone was 50 years ago, when, as a seminarian, Msgr. Beiting was assigned to spend a summer with Father Joseph Wimmers deep in the Appalachian region of Kentucky.

Just about every branch and holler in eastern Kentucky has been favored by Msgr. Beiting's message about the love of God. In 1987, he even cruised the Kentucky and Ohio rivers, as he took "Appalachia on Tour." There are folks trying to convince him to launch Year 51 of street preaching by going on the Internet.

country's post-communist health system, currently one of Europe's poorest. Father Franco Decaminid, a member of the Sons of the Immaculate Conception order, was given a medal by President Sali Berisha in recognition of his work in securing international support for infrastructure and equipment projects at Albania's hospitals and health clinics. Among other initiatives, Father Decaminid is founder and director of a church-run foundation, Our Lady of Good Counsel, which is building a Catholic hospital in the capital, Tirana.

Mother Teresa Released From Hospital, Returns Home To Rest

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa was released from the intensive care unit of Woodlands Nursing Home Sept. 6, still weak from her struggle with heart problems, malaria and pneumonia. The 86-year-old Nobel laureate and foundress of the Missionaries of Charity was moved by wheelchair, ambulance and stretcher to the order's headquarters in Calcutta. "We had a plan to release her on Saturday, but she was restless and wanted to go home today. We could not force her to stay one more day," said Dr. Sudipta Sen, director of the nursing home and one of six doctors who had treated Mother Teresa. "She is a little stronger but she needs lots of rest," he said. Once she arrived home, Mother Teresa was carried on a stretcher to the upstairs prayer room of the Missionaries of Charity motherhouse where she attended morning Mass, said a spokeswoman for the order.

"It's amazing when you start to understand what God wants for us on this earth; the plan is very simple." As she leads the teens towards evening prayers, she intersperses thought provoking tunes with scripture. Scally challenges the teens to wear their faith with pride, and reflect — not only on themselves — but on their peers. "A person of faith cares for you on the inside."

Youth Ministry Director Paul Kotlowski says a Tri-State youth rally was the off-shoot of the annual youth conference for Charlotte teens. "Youth Ministry Directors — from all our regional dioceses — share a desire for teens to share this experience with their peers."

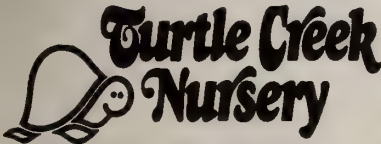

The two-day event brought teens first to the YMCA-owned Camp Thunderbird for evening festivities and overnight camping, and on to Carowinds theme park on Sunday. At Carowinds, teens began their day with Mass celebrated by Bishop William G. Curlin. In his homily, Bishop Curlin reminded teens, "The world is in your hands as long as God is alive in you."

ily one that changes significantly under scholarly scrutiny.

When the Gospels say Jesus "breathed his last" and died, for example, they mean just that, he died, even though scholars continue to uncover further profound messages underneath these and other parts of the Passion story.

In the same way, our tradition has accepted the words of the Lord at the Last Supper "literally" because massive evidence supports that interpretation.

The earliest Christians, including St. Paul himself, obviously took these words at face value. For them, the bread and cup shared in the celebration of the Lord's Supper were, with no ambiguity or shaded meaning, truly the body and blood of Jesus.

Christians will forget that fact, says Paul, only at great spiritual peril (1 Corinthians 11:23-34).

This belief of the first Christian generations is highly significant for us Catholics and many other Christians. The final interpreter of the Bible, especially the Christian Scriptures, is the living church, the assembly of believers in Jesus who produced those Scriptures in the first place under the inspiration of the Spirit.

As the above-mentioned document reminds us, it is the believing community that provides the truly adequate context for interpreting the words of Scripture.

Faith and the Holy Spirit enrich this study. And "church authority, exercised as a service of the community, must see to it that this interpretation remains faithful to the great tradition which has produced the texts" (I-C-1).

Diocesan Justice & Peace Office
Presents Bi-Annual Conference

BELMONT — The biannual diocesan Faith Doing Justice Conference is Oct. 18 and 19 at Belmont Abbey College.

The conference is for those who want to integrate the Church's social mission into their personal lives and parish ministries. Workshops teach content and skills that enhance parish ministries. There are sessions on Catholic social teaching, economic justice, parish social ministry, political responsibility, social justice education, integration of social ministry into parish life, and a model for multi-cultural youth service projects. In addition, there are special meetings for CHD, CRS and Voices for Justice parish coordinators.

Two keynote speakers will explore the social demands of faith in light of Scripture and Catholic social teaching as they relate to a consistent ethic of life. Also, the timely theme of the U.S. Bishops' 1996 Call to Political Responsibility will be highlighted. Sister Evelyn Mattern, widely published author and former member of the legislative staff at N.C. Council of Churches, will present "Sharing the Tradition: The Call to a Consistent Ethic of Life" with follow-up roundtable discussions on analyzing issues for social and moral dimensions.

Ronald Krietemeyer, nationally known speaker and director of the Office of Social Justice of the Archdiocese of St. Paul-Minneapolis and former director of the Department of Domestic Social Development at the United States Catholic Conference, will speak on applying the teaching of the U.S. Bishops' Call to Political Responsibility.

Christine Doby, Director of the Office of Peace and Justice and Respect Life of the Lansing Diocese, will present two workshops on parish social ministry. The first provides a variety of blueprints for building effective social ministry, while the second session covers methods for effective action, volunteer recruitment and organizing.

Exciting prayer experiences are featured with singing and movement from Kabaka intergenerational troupe of African and liturgical dancers and drummers, and from Sojourn liturgical music group. Bishop William G. Curlin will preside over the culminating liturgy at Belmont Abbey Church.

Parishes are invited to display exhibits of their social ministry activities.

The registration fee of $30 per person ($25 per person when four or more people from the same parish register together) includes Saturday continental breakfast and lunch.

The Faith Doing Justice conference is presented by the Office of Justice and Peace and co-sponsored by Belmont Abbey, Campaign for Human Development, Catholic Relief Services and Catholic Social Services. ## World And National News Briefs

Texas Diocese Launches Parish-Based Social Ministry Effort

AUSTIN, Texas (CNS) — While church leaders seem to have reached a clear consensus on the social mission of the church, the message has yet to get to those in the pews, priests of the Austin Diocese were told Aug. 29. The gathering of all priests working in the Austin Diocese, the first of its kind since Bishop John E. McCarthy came to the diocese more than 10 years ago, was used to launch a focus on parish social ministry throughout the diocese. The bishop asked the priests to commit to developing a structured outreach program in their parish, either with a paid staff person or a volunteer group to spearhead it. A parish's social outreach shouldn't be considered something peripheral, however, said John Carr, director of the Department of Social Development and World Peace at the U.S. Catholic Conference, in his keynote talk.

Charismatic 'Veterans' Must Help Attract Youth, Speaker Says

ANAHEIM, Calif. (CNS) — For the charismatic renewal to grow and flourish, the movement's "veterans" must reach out to youths and young adults, said a speaker at the 25th annual Southern California Renewal Communities Convention. "We can't be satisfied with prayer groups of primarily older people," said Divine Word Father Michael Manning in his workshop on "The Graying of the Charismatic Renewal." "We need a change of mentality; we need to start looking for young people and finding ways to bring Christ to them," he added. Father Manning, who has been involved in television ministry for the past 25 years, said efforts should particularly focus on those born between 1960 and 1980, the group known as Generation X. It is important to recall, Father Manning said, that "Jesus himself was a young adult speaking in the main to other young adults." The Aug. 16-18 convention attracted some 12,000 people to the Anaheim Convention Center.

Common Ground Initiative Continues To Draw Reaction

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Chicago Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin's launching of a Catholic Common Ground Project to end polarization among U.S. Catholics has continued to draw varied reaction from church officials. Several bishops who commented on it in their diocesan newspapers expressed support and a hope that Cardinal Bernardin could achieve his goal. Others, expressing concern that a dialogue on issues facing the church could become a forum for dissent, warned that truths of faith are non-negotiable and must be a presupposition for any common ground among Catholics. As a framework for his initiative Cardinal Bernardin released a statement, "Called to be Catholic," which described current divisions among U.S. Catholics as paralyzing the church's energies and threatening its future. It urged constructive, civil dialogue as a way to restore mutual understanding and a sense of mission and common purpose.

El Paso Statue Honoring Early Spanish Mission To be Unveiled

EL PASO, Texas (CNS) — No one really knows what Fray Garcia de San Francisco looked like. So sculptor John Houser had to take a different approach when he began to create a statue of the 17th-century Spanish Franciscan, founding father of El Paso and its twin across the Rio Grande, Ciudad Juarez, Mexico. "Since there were no pictures of him, I read as much as I could about his accomplishments and developed features to go along with him," Houser said. "I infused the spirit of what he did into his appearance." He tried to capture it especially in the face and eyes. "I modeled his head at eye level and put a lot of power into his eyes," he said. The 14-foot statue — the tallest bronze historical statue in Texas — is to be unveiled Sept. 26 at El Paso's Pioneer Plaza.

Vatican Reacts With Silence To U.S. Military Strikes Against Iraq

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican reacted with silence following U.S. military strikes against Iraq in early September. In previous years, Pope John Paul II and his top aides have criticized Western attacks on Iraq, noting the suffering of the civilian population and the missed opportunities for dialogue. This time, the situation was more complex, Vatican sources said after the bombings. The U.S. missile strikes and the extension of a no-fly zone over Iraq came in retaliation for an Iraqi attack on Kurdish targets in the northern part of the country. Iraqi soldiers were also said to have brutally executed 96 army defectors during the incursion. Vatican officials felt that a statement that was no more than a call to dialogue would have been too general. But a more specific Vatican statement would have been forced to raise the thorny Kurdish issue.

THE ACTIVISTS HAVE SPOKEN. THE POLITICIANS HAVE SPOKEN. MAY WE SAY SOMETHING?

The Physicians Ad Hoc Coalition for Truth (PHACT) was formed because we, as physicians, can no longer stand by while abortion advocates, the President of the United States, and newspapers and television shows continue to repeat false medical claims to members of Congress and to the public about partial-birth abortion.

A partial-birth abortion is the killing of an infant who has already been almost completely delivered vaginally outside of his or her mother's body.

Congress, the public—but most importantly women—need to know that partial-birth abortion is never medically indicated to protect a mother's health or her future fertility. On the contrary, this procedure—which has never been evaluated in mainstream, peer reviewed literature—can pose a significant threat to both her immediate health and future fertility.

MEDICALLY INDICATED?

When he vetoed the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act, President Clinton showcased the stories of five women who made the decision to have partial-birth abortions because, he said,

"their own lives, their health, and in some cases, their capacity to have children in the future were in danger" due to the conditions their unborn children suffered. The conditions cited included excessive cerebrospinal fluid in the head (hydrocephalus), inability to swallow leading to an excess of amniotic fluid collecting in the mother's womb (polyhydramnios), and genetic abnormalities characterized by an extra chromosome (trisomy).

We, and many other doctors across the United States, regularly treat women whose unborn children suffer these and other serious conditions. Never is the partial-birth procedure medically indicated. Rather, such infants are regularly and safely delivered live, vaginally, with no threat to the mother's health or fertility. Sometimes, as with hydrocephalus, it is first necessary to drain some of the fluid from the baby's head. And in some cases, a cesarean section is indicated. In no case is it medically necessary to partly deliver the child vaginally, and then terminate his or her life before completing the delivery.

MEDICALLY DANGEROUS.

In fact, partial-birth abortions can be dangerous and potentially life threatening to women. Forcibly dilating the cervix over several days risks creating an "incompetent cervix," a leading cause of future premature deliveries. It is also an invitation to infection, a major cause of subsequent infertility. Reaching into the womb to pull a child feet first out of the mother (internal podalic version) could risk tearing the uterus. Forcing scissors through the base of the skull is a partially "blind" procedure, done by feel, risking direct scissor injury to the uterus, and laceration of the cervix or lower uterine segment, resulting in immediate and massive bleeding, threatening shock or even death of the mother.

Now you know the facts.

We urge Congress to overturn President Clinton's veto of H.R. 1833.

St. Francis Of Assisi Church

FRANKLIN — A small group composed of eight people made up the first Catholic congregation to celebrate Mass in Franklin. During the early 1950s, these townsfolk gathered at the home of local residents to assist in the celebration of Mass with Father Lawrence Newman. Father Newman traveled more than 40 miles from his resident parish, St. John Church in Waynesville, to share the liturgy.

Newman met with Bishop Vincent Waters to discuss the building of a church in Franklin. They agreed on the need, and by 1953, the first St. Francis of Assisi Church had been constructed and deemed a mission of St. John Church. The same eight parishioners attended, although the church had a capacity for 108 people. The church community did begin to enlarge at a steady pace, however, and in 1955, St. Francis became a Glenmary parish.

Due to a growing Catholic population in Franklin as well as geographical considerations, Bishop Michael Begley in 1972 adjusted St. Francis parish boundaries to include most of Macon County. As such, it then included Our Lady of the Mountains in Highlands as a mission church.

Back home in Franklin, a larger congregation marked the need for expansion. The parish bought land and a house adjacent to the church property, the latter of which was utilized for the pastoral team staff, parish meetings, religious education classes and baby-sitting during Mass.

Soon parishioners again saw the need to expand, this time in terms of worship space. During the assessment period, the parish established a building fund. Although original plans, begun in 1976, centered on adding onto the existing church, other options arose. During the summer of 1977, a sizable contribution allowed the congregation to explore the possibility of building a new structure.

The next year, land was purchased on Maple Street, and plans were underway for the creation of a new church facility. A parish building commission was established, and construction on the new church began in January 1981. It housed its first Eucharistic Liturgy on Christmas Eve of that year. Meanwhile, St. Francis parish had made arrangements with the local Lutheran community, which was searching for a new church as well. The first church was sold to the Lutherans on December 31, 1981.

The St. Francis family continued to grow in the following years. At present, Father Richard McCue, pastor, and Father James Collins, parochial vicar, are happy to report that the parish is in the midst of a large expansion project targeted at improving its educational facilities. The center will feature classrooms for CCD and faith formation, a chapel and a pastor's office. The parish also hosts a monthly luncheon for senior citizens and has an active Knights of Columbus council noted for its support of schools, especially those for mentally handicapped persons. Father McCue continues his monthly outreach to diocesan seminarians with a letter apprising them of goings-on, and "Sergeant-Major Brown," better known as Brownie the dog, keeps watch over his parish as well. Father McCue also continues to celebrate Mass at the mission church in Highlands, and is a regular celebrant at St. Jude Church in Sapphire Valley, too.

Church life is vibrant in the mountain town of Franklin. From its early status as a small mission to today's ever-growing congregation, St. Francis of Assisi parish strives to meet the spiritual, educational and social needs of its community.

greatest letter writers who ever lived, used the written word to instruct, persuade and admonish the people of the churches he ministered to and to all who continue to read his letters centuries later. I wonder if St. Paul's epistles would be as compelling if they had been composed on an electronic laptop rather than on papyrus.

I wonder, too, if Lieutenant Madison Lewis' or Great-grandfather Carl's letters would have been as poignant if their writers could have communicated so directly and instantly. Through occasional visits and a pen that wouldn't quit, Great-grandfather Carl worked out the difficulties of distance with his young bride by taking a job as an inventor and engineer at Ingersoll Rand in Easton, Pennsylvania and Great-grandfather Carl and Great-grandmother Jeanette had a daughter who would one day be my Grandma Jean.

And what of Lieutenant Madison

Lewis? Four months after arriving in France, quite taken by the "bang-up good time" he was experiencing, the lieutenant was promoted to captain and received the Distinguished Service Cross. The citation reads, "Captain Madison H. Lewis, 302nd Engineers for extraordinary heroism in action near Ville-Savoy, France, on August 18, 1918. Under enemy fire, high explosives and gas, Captain Lewis plunged into the Vesle River to rescue some soldiers who had fallen into the water with full pack while crossing a footbridge and were in danger of drowning. In order to do this he removed his gas mask and as a result was severely gassed."

The wide-eyed soldier who began a thrilling journey across the Atlantic to fight in World War I started an inward journey just months later after experiencing the devastation and human suffering caused by war. How do I know? It's all in the letters left behind.

Graham Crusade Offers Opportunity For Renewal

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — If the Carolinas Billy Graham Crusade follows the historical pattern of other such gatherings dating back decades, it could cause a spiritual fire that will burn in Christians for the rest of their lives. Tens of thousands are expected Sept. 29 to represent dozens of denominations in a celebration of the joyful finale to the Crusade, Graham's fourth in the Carolinas since 1947.

Organizers project attendance exceeding a quarter million people at the Crusade, which begins Sept. 26 at 7:30 p.m. Special guests attending the event include country music legends, a former NFL head football coach and contemporary Christian musicians. A diverse amalgamation of folks — but they form a group gathering to illustrate a passion for their faith.

Scores of billboards, bumper stickers and newspaper ads promoting the event can already be seen throughout the area. Many Catholics, however, have yet to understand a connection with the Crusade and their own faith. Indeed, the last time Dr. Graham "returned home" for a Carolinas Crusade in 1972, the idea of Catholics attending would have been unthinkable. Yet Spiritan Father Ed Vilkauskas, director of evangelization for the Diocese of Charlotte and pastor at Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Monroe, says the connection is now a real and pressing one.

"In recent years, Graham has made an extraordinary ecumenical effort to send people to the churches where they will live out their way of life with Christ — rather than trying to bring them into his organization or to any particular church," he says.

Father Vilkauskas says that Dr. Graham, having grown up in a rural area of a state where even today Catholics make up just 3 percent of the Christian population, never really knew the Catholic faith. But, as a preacher who has long promoted conversion of heart, he grew to realize that Catholics do indeed profess faith in Christ and a belief in the Bible. Seminary training also helped him to understand Roman Catholic theology, especially since the Second Vatican Council.

The change, says Father Vilkauskas, was a monumental one. He calls the Crusade a uniquely advantageous opportunity for Carolina Catholics. "It allows us in a very concrete way to cooperate with other Christian churches, and to affirm our common faith in Jesus Christ and in the Bible as the source of God's inspired word," he says. "We cannot lose by our presence. Many of our neighbors misunderstand us, and our challenge as Catholics is to get the message out of who we are and what we believe."

Pope John Paul II has emphatically encouraged evangelization for years, especially as we approach the millennium. Bishop William G. Curlin has endorsed Catholic participation in the Crusade, adding that Graham has publicly voiced his admiration for the pope.

Lest Catholics see participation in the Crusade — which has long been deemed an expression of the Gospel that somewhat differs from Catholic teaching — as problematic, Father Vilkauskas reminds them of the true intent of the Crusade: to bring people back to Christ, to renew their faith, and to provide a spark in those who had previously left their faith in the background.

"For us, the process of conversion is part of a spiritual journey," he says. "Our way to Christ is an ongoing commitment for the rest of our lives. People will be seeking renewal and reconciliation. It couldn't be a more Catholic concept."

Answering The Call:

Bishops Urge Political Responsibility

By MARY COYNE WESSLING

This is the first of three articles about Catholics' obligation to political responsibility. The articles revolve around materials written by the American bishops and issued through the United States Catholic Conference. The current materials are titled, "Political Responsibility: Proclaiming the Gospel of Life, Protecting the Least Among Us, and Pursuing the Common Good." These materials were made available to every parish in the diocese.

This first article reviews the content and implications of the bishops' call to political responsibility.

POLITICS HAS BECOME SO COMPLICATED AND COMMERCIALIZED that many Americans are left wondering whether real issues count for anything anymore. If they do, where do people find out more about those issues?

For Catholics, the American bishops have some important news. Not only have they studied the issues that affect people's lives, but they have issued important position statements on many of them.

Lest you think this is another election year gimmick that will fade after November, know that the bishops have been shaping and promoting their positions on issues for centuries. As early as the 1700s, American bishops have spoken out on the issues of the day.

NOW, AMID THE CONFUSION, CATHOLICS ARE SCRAMBLING for this information. Although the bishops have made their political responsibility materials available since the mid-1970s, dioceses and parishes have a renewed interest in using them. Earlier this year Joanne Frazer attended the national meeting on Social Action, where thousands of the political responsibility packets were ordered.

When asked why the renewed interest, Frazer, director of the Diocese of Charlotte Peace and Justice Ministry, said, "People today are genuinely confused about the political climate and choices. The bishops are clear about our responsibility to participate in the voting process. They are equally clear about the Church's position on many issues. In the materials, they list the principles that can be used as a moral guide."

Frazer was quick to note that the American bishops do not favor religious political block voting. "Rather, they urge Catholics to analyze the moral dimensions of the issues of the day," she said.

SO WHAT ARE THE ISSUES THE BISHOPS ADDRESS? ABORTION — specifically the repeal of abortion laws — is first among the issues. But for too many American Catholics, it is among the few they can list. In fact, materials contain position statements on 20 issues. Other topics include: arms control; arms trade and disarmament; capital punishment; communications; discrimination and racism; the economy; education; environmental justice; euthanasia; families and children; food and agriculture; and health; AIDS; substance abuse; include: housing; human rights; immigration; international affairs and the United Nations; refugees; regional concerns; violence; and welfare reform. "Throughout the statements, you will find an emphasis on the consistent ethic of life," said Frazer.

The bishops refer to previously published documents and statements to underscore their position and reflect the Church's tradition of upholding human rights and dignity.

In an article in the September issue of Liguorian magazine, writer Mark E. Chopko explains why the bishops issue these materials. He writes: "Although the bishops leave the duty of evaluating the candidates to the individual voter, they exhort citizens to meet their responsibilities to register and vote, to understand issues and assess candidates' positions and qualifications; and to join others in advocating for the common good."

GIVEN THEIR STRONG POSITION ON ISSUES, SOME CATHOLICS wonder why the bishops don't take the extra step and endorse particular candidates. The bishops address this too by stating such endorsements "would be, in our view, pastorally inappropriate, theologically unsound and politically unwise."

Chopko writes that the importance of avoiding alliance with any political party or candidate is also mandated in the Vatican II documents. In those, the council members note that "the Church's work is strictly religious. It proclaims no distinctive secular, political role."

The author says the Church's autonomy allows it to serve as a moral beacon. "How could the Church maintain (a high moral) position if it were aligned with one or another political alliance? It would be relegated to a minor role or just another interest group. It would sacrifice part of its moral role."

LAST DECEMBER, THE OFFICE OF JUSTICE AND PEACE SENT THE packet of materials on political responsibility to each parish in the diocese. Pastors were urged to encourage their parishioners to study and discuss the materials and use them as a starting point for further activities promoting political responsibility.

In the next article, we will report on how parishes have used the packets and inspired fellow parishioners to "get involved."

For information about the bishops' materials or about the upcoming conference "Faith Doing Justice," which will further examine political responsibility, write to: Joanne Frazer, Office of Justice and Peace, 1524 E. Morehead St., Charlotte, N.C. 28207; or call her at (704) 331-1736.

tainly for the Catholic Church, to prepare in a common effort for the importance of Christ in our lives and in the world."

Thousands of people have joined or renewed the Catholic faith as a direct result of their attending past Crusades. The call for Catholics, says Father Vilkauskas, is not only to profess or return to their faith at the Crusade, but to prepare to welcome new or returning Catholics in the weeks after the event.

Father Vilkauskas is pleased with the prospect of renewed faith as an outcome of Graham's visit to Charlotte. Catholic readiness and response teams have been assembled to attend to people based on a variety of needs, and Bishop Curlin will lead a prayer service of welcome Oct. 11 at St. Matthew Church.

Father Vilkauskas asks that parishioners, priests and religious all take an active volunteer role in the aftermath. Telephone committees will be needed to contact those who submit commitment forms during the Crusade. Letters of welcome, hospitality efforts, and assistance and support at the parish level will all be important components of Catholics' message of welcome. Volunteers, the pastor says, will be needed to make it work.

"This is really what we're about," he adds. "It's forgiveness, it's reconciliation, it's outreach, it's mission. This is the heart of the matter. Like the story of the prodigal son, there will be people coming down the road back home."

For more information on volunteering for welcoming and hospitality efforts following the Crusade, call Spiritan Father Ed Vilkauskas, director of evangelization for the Diocese of Charlotte, (704) 289-2773.

Northern Region Gathers For Catechist Conference

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer
CLEMMONS — "Buenos días."
"How are you?" "Bienvenidos."

So began "Lighting the Fires of Faith," a catechetical conference at Holy Family Church Sept. 14. With more than 300 catechists in attendance, Fathers Fidel Melo and Frank O'Rourke of Holy Family parish offered a bilingual greeting and began a day of enrichment and education for those who share the knowledge and the relationship of the Catholic faith with others.

"Remember that you're following in the footsteps of the disciples," said Kathy Boyette, Northern Region coordinator for the diocesan office of faith formation, to the congregation. "You're carrying on a tradition that Jesus gave to His disciples when He asked them to go forth, share the faith and keep it alive."

Following an opening prayer session that included a meditation on the Canticle of Zechariah in both English and Spanish, catechists gathered in groups throughout the facility to discuss the components of faith formation as it exists in today's Church. Catechetical leaders from across the Northern Region led the presentations.

Participants also could choose to attend workshops for youth and Spanish ministries, which Boyette says are important extensions of faith formation.

"It's good that those of us who share in the catechetical ministry are able to work together," said Paul Kotlowski, diocesan director of youth ministry. "Events like this bring home the message that youth ministry is the catechetical process for our adolescents."

Boyette added that the Hispanic population is growing tremendously in the diocese. "We have to meet their needs," she said. "They are a very faith-filled community, and we need to educate the catechists so that they can help these people continue to grow in their Catholic community." A Hispanic ministry team from the Raleigh Diocese facilitated the sessions. Participants chose four sessions centering on skills and theory; sacrament; Scripture; prayer; and Catholic identification. The sessions were not only intended as instructional meetings, but as interactive and cooperative efforts to share ideas and to remind the catechists of their sense of mission and ministry.

Facilitators offered concrete examples of addressing matters of faith. Sisters of St. Joseph Sister Jeanne Morgan, coordinator of faith formation at St. Leo the Great Church in Winston-Salem, concentrated on theological concepts involved in Scripture. She explained that one way of understanding what God wants of us is through His revelation in the Bible — through the history, nature, ethics and culture described therein.

Jim McCullough, faith formation coordinator at Our Lady of Grace in Greensboro, stated in his session on the sacraments that the questions people raise about their Catholic faith can be answered in a number of resources. "One of the gifts the Catholic Church has is that if you want to know what the Church teaches and believes, there is a way you can actually find out," he said to one group, while holding a copy of the Catechism of the Catholic Church in his hand.

Faith formation leaders said they were inspired by the day's energy and the generous spirit of the catechists' volunteerism. Director of Faith Formation for the Diocese of Charlotte Dr. Cris Villapando told the catechists that they are "the single most important purveyors of the faith as the Church is structured right now. You are the delivery system."

"These catechists can actively and intimately engage the learner and really find out first-hand where people are in terms of faith," said Villapando earlier in the day. The closing ceremony included the conferral of certificates stating that those in attendance had participated in an introductory catechist formation program. Applause from parish members peppered the presentation, which recognized members from all 23 parishes and missions of the Northern Region, plus parishioners from as far west as Hickory and Charlotte.

Throughout a day during which participants were exposed to what Villapando called "vertical enrichment" and "horizontal experience" — the passing on of information from facilitator to catechist and the shared discoveries of the catechists themselves — the catechetical ministry was celebrated.

"This was a very rewarding experience," said Rosemary Chriscoe, a parishioner of St. Joseph Church in Asheboro. "I wish I had another day to capture the classes that I didn't get to attend today. It makes me feel that faith is still alive."

Pope Says Illiteracy Keeps People From Reaching Full Potential

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Illiteracy is a form of poverty that keeps people from reaching their full potential and participating in the life of society, Pope John Paul II said.

In a message to UNESCO’s Sept. 9 celebration of World Literacy Day, the pope praised the U.N. organization and all those working to help children and adults around the world learn to read.

The pope offered special thanks to those “who work so that children can benefit from an education and schooling that gives them a real chance to have a worthy existence and to be active participants in community life.”

“I encourage all people who with generosity and dedication participate in the formation of young people and adults to struggle against illiteracy, a form of poverty, and to allow everyone to take part in the life of their country,” the pope said.

Basic education and knowledge of culture, he said, “play a fundamental role in spiritual and personal development and in social promotion, offering each person the possibility to fully exercise his responsibilities as a citizen.”

Education and literacy programs, the pope said, should contribute to personal growth and family life, always with respect for basic moral, cultural and religious values.

Pope Calls Visit To Hungary An Ecumenical Advance

Dear brothers and sisters,

I wish today to thank all those who made possible my recent pastoral visit to Hungary, especially the bishops and the president of the republic and the civil authorities. My pilgrimage took me to the ancient abbey of Pannonhalma, founded 1,000 years ago and serving ever since as a spiritual and cultural beacon for the people of that part of Europe. Today it is also an important center of ecumenism, placed as it is between East and West.

I also visited the city of Győr, one of the oldest cities of Hungary, where a large crowd gathered for the concelebrated Mass, to invoke the loving mercy of Jesus the Good Shepherd. There I renewed the call to hope, pointing to the example of those who in the recent past have borne witness to their faith in Christ, even at the cost of their lives. In fact, the transformation of Hungarian society, especially in overcoming the negative consequences of past ideological and political systems, will depend on proclaiming once more the perennial truths of the Gospel, which guide and shape the freedom and solidarity to which all aspire. May the Blessed Virgin Mary protect the Hungarian people, and may they remain ever steadfast in their fidelity to Christ, the hope of the world.

May you always know the light of Christ and walk in his ways. Upon all of you I invoke joy and peace in the Lord Jesus.

School Uniforms: An Idea Whose Time Has Come

A new poll is telling us that school uniforms are gaining popularity.

Phi Delta Kappa surveys adults annually on a broad range of educational subjects. This year it put the school uniform question on the list and found that 53 percent of those polled favored uniforms for public school students.

When the subject of school uniforms re-emerged in the past couple of years, many were surprised to learn that President Bill Clinton was for them.

I admit I was surprised to read that he advocated uniforms in schools, since I often talk to youngsters who get apoplectic at the very thought of this. Many young people say that dressing alike robs them of their individuality.

I was the product of Catholic school education from first grade through college, and I wore school uniforms every year until I graduated from high school, with the exception of fourth grade. That year we moved from one area of the city to another, and it was too late for my mother to enroll me in a Catholic school. So she put me in public school, though I think she feared losing her soul for months after doing this.

Mostly I think my mother was endlessly annoyed — because she had a new job that year — seeing to it that I had proper dresses each day for class. I remember her buying material at 15 cents a yard and sewing four dresses for me.

Funny thing, though, I don’t ever remember any of my friends commenting on my homemade clothes, and I had a lot of friends. I bring this out because in scores of interviews I’ve done with youngsters in the past year I’ve heard, over and over, that clothing is a major concern.

All too many of them are afraid they will be criticized, made fun of and laughed at for having “nerdy” clothes, or wearing fashions that fall short of the current rage. That concern goes from head — notice the haircuts and hairstyles — to toe. The toe gets special attention. God help a kid who wears cheap sneakers.

It takes guts to go to school these days without the proper look that makes you fit in with your peer group. So much for individuality!

Last year at a school I saw girls wearing tops with wide necklines so that they could let the sleeve fall half way down their arm. And boys were wearing jeans purposely loose at the waist so that they fell down to their hips, exposing the tops of their under briefs. I doubt if this kind of disordered appearance lends itself to serious classroom learning.

These fads will probably die out, but what will the new ones be?

In the few schools already courageous enough to go for the “new look,” neatness via a dress code, educators and parents alike had had enough of dress competition. They wanted youth to focus on learning.

I think public schools ought to give school uniforms a try. If the uniforms lead to any new problems that can’t be resolved, the schools can always go back, eliminating the dress code.

But maybe educators and parents will find that school uniforms give them a new and better freedom: freedom from the daily need to conform to the dress standards of advertisers and peer groups; freedom from the ensuing competition and distractions in classrooms.

The Duty Of Autumn

"The melancholy days are here, the saddest of the year." William Cullen Bryant's poetic lament over the departure of summer and the advance of autumn strikes a sympathetic chord with those of us who experience the radical shift of seasons.

To us northerners especially, the look, the feel, the sounds and smells of autumn invite a certain sensitivity to the wonders of God's creation. When the white hot light of summer mellows to gold, we know that ahead of us is the cold silver of winter. Enjoy change or dread it, one way or another, it comes.

Each tree, each branch, each leaf, each blade of grass in its individual splendor is a living monument to the bottomless depths of God's creative genius.

What can we learn from the ordinary, commonplace wonder of God's ongoing creation? Indeed, sympathy with nature is part of a good person's religion. Tyron Edwards, a descendant of the Calvinist theologian Jonathan Edwards, observed: "Nature and Revelation are like God's books; each may have mysteries, but in each there are plain, practical lessons for every-day duty."

Duty.

One lesson I have gleaned from autumns past is that the laws of nature are the rules which mirror our own lives. Leaves fall when the fruit is ripened and the work is done. The summer of abundance has ended.

So the flurry of the last few leaves teaches this: Do your work well, while your health and spirit sustain you, and then be ready to depart when God shall call.

Is that all? The relentlessness of time and duty?

Dwelling on nature's moral lessons shouldn't bring on an attack of melancholy. Nature over-awes our little anxieties and doubts, and gives quiet to the soul. Nature is an effect whose cause is God and a friend to His truth.

The real miracle of each single moment is the beauty of both the fullness and surrender of life. Not one instant can be duplicated. Yet from dawn to dark to dawn again, the mysterious life of nature is often ignored by human beings intent on our own concerns and worries.

Jesus had an answer to that. In the Sermon on the Mount, He gave a reassuring argument for confidence in God based on the beauty of a flower. In the lilies of the field, the mustard seed, the reed blowing in the wind, Jesus let nature illuminate faith.

The heart that contemplates all that is sacred welcomes the lessons and loveliness of nature.

Every miracle of nature has sheathed within it a spiritual truth. Trees shake off acorns, shade for a blazing distant summer. For the person of faith, what is duty but hope alive?

Mormon Posthumous Baptism

Q. Earlier this year, in connection with genealogies, you mentioned the Mormon Family History Library as a possible resource.

I wrote to them. When my mother heard of it she was less than happy. She thinks this is the way Mormons get names for "posthumous baptism."

I have heard that, according to this religion, living people can be baptized for the dead. Is this true?

I have also heard that Christians did the same a long time ago.

As a baptized Christian, I do not want my name to go down in history as a Mormon. Can you enlighten us about any of this?

A. You ask a lot of heavy questions in a few words. Let's look first at the one about early Christians.

In his first letter to the Corinthians, St. Paul discusses at length the resurrection of Jesus. Against some who denied this belief, he strongly affirmed that if Christ has not been raised our whole religion is absurd.

At one point he uses a puzzling argument. If we are not raised from the dead, then "what will people accomplish by having themselves baptized for the dead? If the dead are not raised at all, then why are they having themselves baptized for them?" (15:29)

Understandably, this perplexing verse has provoked much speculation. One of today's most knowledgeable experts on the Corinthian letters says the practice of baptizing the living for the dead is so foreign to Paul's theology that Paul would never have used such a practice even as an argument. The expert then offered his own explanation of the passage.

The predominant interpretation, however, still seems to be that in those early days some living Christians did have themselves baptized for deceased non-Christians, which is not to say, of course, that Paul promoted or approved the practice.

Other interpretations end up being rather tortuous; but there's never been a thoroughly satisfactory explanation.

The Mormon practice of baptizing the living for the dead grows out of a theology of faith and salvation thoroughly alien to other Christians.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was founded, or "restored," in 1830 by the Prophet Joseph Smith, who according to his own testimony discovered a set of golden plates on a hill near Palmyra, N.Y.

His translation of the writing on these plates, accomplished, he claimed, with the help of certain mysterious stone glasses, is the Book of Mormon, one of the three or four books most honored by adherents of that faith.

To expand on these beliefs is not possible here. Briefly, there is not one God; there are several gods who, at the highest level of heavens and through numberless generations, generate numer

What Saints Do Best

Act as if everything depended on you, and pray as if everything depended on God. You probably have heard that truism before, but some problems are so severe you may feel powerless to act as though everything depended on you. It is then that you have to turn it all over to God and trust him.

With God's grace, all things are possible. Ask for a miracle, and expect one.

To understand more about this state of absolute trust, I turned to Blessed Julian of Norwich. She compared a mother's love to the love and service of Jesus.

A mother's service is completely dependable because it is the most loving and certainly the truest service we know. Since Jesus performs this loving service to an infinite degree, Julian referred to him as "Mother God." She wrote, "The Lord carried us within himself in love and pain when he suffered the sharpest thorns and the most daunting agony." We can trust the Lord.

If your trust is weak, don't be discouraged. One day he will give you the precious gift of a childlike spirit. "Ask and you will receive." When Jesus challenged us to put on a childlike spirit, he was encouraging us to be childlike, not childish. A childish person can be arrogant, demanding and inconsiderate.

When you approach God do not be childish. The childlike spirit is full of trust. Even the most unruly children do not worry about how their next meal will appear on the table. They trust their parents to take care of their basic needs, and in the same way God will take care of your needs. Trust him and be patient.

In discerning the meaning of a childlike spirit, the key word is "trust." Trust is the only thing that is uniquely ours to give. God gave us everything else we have. When Jesus asked us to become childlike, he wanted us to have absolute confidence in his love. This means we have to learn "to let go and let God."

Personally I find this difficult to do. I pray, but I often tend to carry the full weight of my burdens until I realize what I'm doing. Then I stop in my tracks and turn the problem over to him. I put my trust in his power and love.

Imagine giving a trustworthy friend a task to do for you and then worrying all night about whether or not it will be done. It just doesn't make sense.

Do you have to contend with a rebellious child or a difficult aging parent? Stop trying to engineer a solution. It is beyond your strength to change the personality of another human being. Only the other person can do that, and then only with the help of God's grace. The role of grace is the mysterious element in this process.

Once you turn the responsibility over to the Lord, all you can do is thank him for the graces he will send. Try not to demand immediate results. Wait and trust.

Patient endurance is what the saints do best.

A Natural Fit

WCU Director Serves In The Spirit Of Sport

By PAUL FREDETTE

Correspondent

CULLOWHEE — The experience of sport is as natural to Susan Brown as breathing. Originally from Wichita, Kan., she grew up in Florida, where her father coached little league. As a child, she enjoyed reaching into his bag and "putting on the catcher's equipment three sizes too big for me." She has been playing softball since the age of 11, but reluctantly admits playing more golf nowadays.

Since her sophomore year in high school, Brown knew she wanted a career involving sports. "I've always been a person who looked ahead and worked toward the future. Sports allows me to do that because it is always changing." As Brown sees it, "sport and society really go together." It is a view her own career certainly confirms.

Today, Susan Brown, Ph.D., is Director of Sport Management at Western Carolina University and a member of the small campus community that worships at the Catholic Student Center. Since 1986, she has been coordinator of officials and coaches for the U.S. Association for Blind Athletes. In this capacity, she has assisted coaches and referees become more skilled in the special techniques of working with visually impaired athletes. Brown has been especially involved with goalball, a sport specifically designed for visually impaired and blind athletes and relatively unknown outside their world. Similar to soccer, goalball is also unique to the Paralympic Games to which Dr. Brown was invited at Barcelona in 1988 and again this year in Atlanta.

"The motto for the Paralympics, Triumph of the Human Spirit, was very apparent in the opening ceremonies and throughout the games as well, but on the whole the Paralympics were pretty much neglected by the media," says Brown with obvious disappointment. Recalling the awe she experienced at crowds in Spain that packed every event in 1988, she described the marked contrast with the recent attendance in Atlanta: "In the U.S., we idolize athletes and we all have a favorite team, which is fine, but we don't enjoy sport for the sake of sport the way Europeans do. In Barcelona, it was standing-room-only everywhere and people were so supportive of all the sports."

That was not the case in Atlanta, nor did Brown expect it to be. "It doesn't happen that way in our society," she observed. "Unless you have a winning team, it's hard to sell tickets. If someone like Michael Jordan is playing, attendance is up. In the U.S. people go to see the winning team or go to see the star, but they don't go for the experience of sport itself."

With a Masters degree from Eastern Illinois University in Sport Administration and a Ph.D. from Ohio State in Sports Management, Brown's professional activity is focused on "educating individuals to work on the business side of sports: promotions, sales, marketing and finance. My students work in professional sports organizations, fitness management, recreational departments, etc." At one time her field might have been considered entrepreneurial, but not so now. "Sport Management," she indicates, "has not only become a commonly offered and recognized discipline, but has steadily grown in popularity as an up and coming field."

Brown was director of Recreational Sports Programs at St. Louis University in 1984 when the school won the bid to host the National Championships for the Blind. Unexpectedly, just one month prior to the championship, responsibility for running all the sports fell to Brown. It was her first experience of working with the visually impaired, and her introduction to goalball. She found it both enjoyable and instructive. "I learned that, apart from some of the differences in the population and being more attentive to the needs of the visually impaired, it was really no different than running any other sport program." Goalball, however, was all new and captured her interest.

That interest was sustained when the Missouri Chapter of the Association for Blind Athletes asked Brown to serve on their board and her involvement grew as an escort to the 1985 National Championships in New Jersey. "I've always enjoyed doing volunteer work and I've always enjoyed being involved in sports," she sums up her service in the way of a natural fit. "It was an opportunity for me to reach out and help. Athletes with disabilities don't want pity, they just want support and encouragement."

Brown, a lifelong Catholic, says her Christian faith has been deepened by her experience. "I wake up each day thanking God for the abilities that I have." By being involved for so long with people who focus not on their disabilities but their abilities, she is more convinced than ever that "we're all here to help one another."

"Hate" (1996)

Gritty French movie about 24 hours in the lives of three unemployed youths from a public housing project in a Paris suburb where they take drugs, argue and elude aggressive cops until inevitably a violent confrontation occurs. Writer-director Mathieu Kassovitz's stark, documentary-like portrait of dead-end youth pitted against brutal police takes a hard look at ghetto violence and despair. Subtitles. Intermittent violence, drug abuse, crude sexual references and incessant rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Robin and the Seven Hoods" (1964)

Uneven gangster spoof set in 1928 Chicago, where the top mob (headed by Peter Falk) tries to crush a smaller gang (led by Frank Sinatra) which gains public sympathy by donating its loot to charity. Directed by Gordon Douglas, the silly Robin Hood gimmick adds little to the sprawling comedy's hit-or-miss humor from a cast including Dean Martin, Sammy Davis Jr., Edward G. Robinson, Bing Crosby and Barbara Rush. Comic violence and underworld activities. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Quest" (1996)

While a skilled street fighter (Jean-Claude Van Damme) competes in a martial-arts championship in 1928 Tibet, his suave con-artist manager (Roger Moore) plots to steal the first prize — a solid gold dragon. Also directed by Van Damme, the result is little more than a series of bone-crunching bouts surrounded by a flimsy plot with one-dimensional characters. Recurring martial-arts violence and an instance of profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Birdcage" (1996)

The son of a gay Miami nightclub owner (Robin Williams) invites his fiancée and her ultraconservative parents (Gene Hackman and Dianne West) home for dinner and the gay man's lover (Nathan Lane) shows up in drag, pretending to be the son's mother in producer-director Mike Nichols' remake of "La Cage aux Folles" (1979). The comedy pokes fun at flamboyant homosexuals and those who shun them while stressing the vulnerability of both groups. Sympathetic depiction of the gay lifestyle, many sexual references and intermittent rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

What is the "genius" of women?

FAITH alive!

By Dolores R. Leckey
Catholic News Service

The church looks different than it did when I was growing up. Women are not only in the pews and teaching in the classroom. They are in the sanctuary, the seminary and the chancery.

In the parish, women are responsible for Bible study groups and prayer groups, religious education and pastoral counseling, and often the works of justice. In the area of liturgy women are lectors, altar servers, cantors and eucharistic ministers.

Women's leadership in parishes seems to develop naturally from their "at home" work where they not only exercised executive functions but were constantly striving for cooperation among members of the household.

In their new parish roles women strive for consensus and commitment, and for a sense of belonging on the part of all. Rose is a good example. A wife, a mother and now a grandmother, her spiritual ministry began in the 1960s when she and a few other women formed an experimental prayer group. None of the women had any experience with free-form, lay-led prayer, but it became over time a means of their continuing growth.

Rose's own spiritual path led her to the spiritual exercises of St. Ignatius of Loyola, the Jesuits' founder, and finally to a Jesuit parish. Eventually others sought her help, recognizing in her a woman knowledgeable about God's ways.

Today Rose is spiritual director to about 20 people. Some are men, a few are priests. Her directees include religious leaders with national responsibilities.

The giftedness of women like Rose was affirmed by the U.S. bishops in a 1994 pastoral reflection when they said: "Countless men and women ... seek to be in touch with God in the depths of their souls. We see so many women engaged in meeting these spiritual needs, and we thank God."

In the space of a generation since the end of Vatican Council II, women have joined the ranks of church leaders. Some see this as the feminization of ministry, not only in reference to the numbers of women in the ministerial pool but in terms of a style in ministry.

What is the style?

It is a highly relational form of ministry. The emphasis is on nurturing person-centered relationships: caring for teen-agers and the elderly, home visitation, bereavement counseling, community building.

Women leaders have introduced relationships and community as high priorities at every level of the church.

My work has introduced me to the richness of parish life in America. From coast to coast, and from urban centers to rural villages, I have seen the presence of women in what the bishops called servant leadership: "Leadership involves servanthood: We learn this from the example of the head of the church, Jesus Christ."

The bishops added that servant leadership means rejecting authoritarian conduct (not the same thing as rejecting authority). Also, they say, it means expending time and energy on community building.

Not only parishes, but dioceses too are drawing on women's experiences to build stronger, more caring communities. For example, Sister Ann Rehrauer was chancellor of a Mid-west diocese for a number of years. Previously, the Sister of St. Francis of the Holy Cross taught music, earned degrees in liturgy and canon law, and served as director of a diocesan office of worship.

Currently she is associate director of liturgy at the National Conference of Catholic Bishops in Washington. As she sees it, much of the work that liturgists do is centered on encouraging participation by the people in the church's central act: worship.

Too often, though, the participation has been in external terms. Now she sees the emphasis moving toward what she calls "internal participation," that is, the totality of keeping Sunday holy and, by implication, living a holy in mind when he urges us to ponder the "genius of women," namely, the capacity to balance efficiency and competence with an understanding of human needs.

Webster's dictionary links the word "genius" with spirit; in particular, the attentive spirit. That definition certainly seems to fit women in leadership positions who seek to create the qualities of home in their various spheres of ministry.

In the home one finds acceptance and understanding, as well as order. In the home, there is no need to be overly productive; simply "being" is sufficient.

Still, the home also prepares and restores people for engagement with the world. Today, with communities fragmented and more and more people displaced, it seems to me that home is a much needed balance to the life of competition and achievement that characterizes so much of society's life — and even church life.

Perhaps the new evangelization church leaders everywhere are calling for today will need the respite of home to enable Christians to cross the threshold of the new millennium with energy and hope. Women of the church can point the way.

life beyond Sunday worship.

The focus of Sister Rehrauer's work has been to deepen relationships: between clergy and laity, among disparate groups of lay people and ultimately between people and God.

Perhaps Pope John Paul II has this

As a woman and a leader in your parish, what do you do?

"I'm the director of religious education.... I like to see myself as the go-between for the teachers and the parents or the parents and the students. Because I'm available and ready to listen, I hope I can make ... religious education a positive experience and not just an obligation." — Cindy Hobgood, Pensacola, Fla.

"I coordinate the bereavement ministry program.... It's a one-on-one ministry program.... We contact recently bereaved people and see how they're doing. Some people need a lot of help; some won't accept any help.... This ministry is meant to help them understand these kinds of difficult losses in the light of our faith." — Rita Matuszak, Toledo, Ohio

"I am involved as a parish pro-life coordinator. I try to share with the parish the issues of the pro-life movement, encouraging action ... through phone chains and letter and postcard campaigns." — Sherry LeBlanc, Plattsmouth, Neb.

"I am president of the Sanctuary Society, which is the women's group.... We clean the altar, take care of the linens.... We (help sponsor) an annual baby shower for unwed mothers.... We help support a summer camp for underprivileged children." — Mary Jo Pfeiffer, Pensacola, Fla.

"I became involved with coordinating activities for the youth.... I want teens to develop a sense of connectedness to the parish beyond the parental connectedness. I help them plan activities that the teens can relate to on their own level, sacramentally and socially." — Cathy Cueni, Willoughby, Ohio

A chance to lead, a chance to listen

Florence Crawford, vice-chancellor of the Archdiocese of Louisville, Ky., feels her position requires dedication, service, compassion and the ability to listen.

When I asked Crawford about having been chosen for the position, she replied, "For me to have reached this position in the 1990s gives a degree of satisfaction not only to myself but for all women. In the past, chancery work was male-dominated."

Crawford serves as a liaison to the community, often handling difficult situations. She coordinates confirmations for more than 100 parishes each year, deals with requests for weddings that will take place outside a parish, maintains archdiocesan records.

The chancellor, Father Dale Cieslik, says there is no written job description for what Crawford does, but adds, "She's like me — the bottom line for whatever needs to be done."

policy issues. Chiles says, "In the work that we do, some of the best and most credible people on a state level who articulate the message are women. In that regard I am particularly pleased that I am able to do this work in a church that is often misunderstood in its treatment of women.... I look at what I do and realize I haven't seen the limits of what I am able to do."

I met Marti Jewell several years ago when I went through the archdiocese's two-year ministry formation program.

She views herself as a minister to ministers.

Jewell serves as director of the archdiocesan Office of Ministry Formation. She is also on the board of the National Association for Lay Ministry.

Her work involves both programming and support for people working to carry out the church's mission, whether they are paid employees or volunteers.

"It is work that I love and find very fulfilling since it combines my training in education and theology with my call to minister to ministers," Jewell says.

Jane Chiles, executive director of the Catholic Conference of Kentucky, says her work is all about serving. "It is important to recognize that I am here in service to the bishops of Kentucky, who see themselves in service to the Catholic community. This position is not Jane Chiles. It is being in service to a faith community with very rich social teachings."

"I bring an appreciation for serving and representing the broader Catholic community: an ability to listen, hear a need and assimilate some commonality. That is the strength."

Among its tasks, a state Catholic conference works at making the church's positions known on public-alive!

She notes that participating in the process of forming others for ministry is not only a source of joy for her, but of energy.

The position she holds is "not something I set out to achieve," Jewell explains. "It was the natural consequence of a series of decisions." She calls it "a gift" to do work in which she has "the potential to make an impact on the lives of people in our church."

Jewell adds that one reason she chose to work in church ministry is that she believes it is important for both men and women to have women in positions of responsibility in the church. "I am able as a woman to bring both voice and vision to my work, not because of my gender but in spite of it," Jewell says.

"I touch people's lives by the quality of presence I bring and by honoring the potential in each person I work with."

(Allison-Lewis lives in Louisville, Ky., and is the author of "Keeping Up Your Spirits Therapy" and other books by Abbey Press.)

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

No one knows the future, so I can't foresee what parish roles my daughters might play in the year 2020 or so. They may be called upon to fulfill roles I can't even imagine now.

That, anyway, seems to be Pope John Paul II's view. "The life of the church in the third millennium will certainly not be lacking in new and surprising manifestations of 'the feminine genius,'" he said in his 1995 Letter to Women prior to the U.N. World Conference on Women in Beijing.

On another 1995 occasion, the pope issued an appeal to the church on women's behalf: "I appeal to the women of the church today to assume new forms of leadership in service, and I appeal to all the institutions of the church to welcome this contribution of women," he wrote.

If women are not ordained to the priesthood, that doesn't mean they should not be real church leaders, the pope said on yet another occasion before the Beijing conference. And he asked:

"Who can imagine the great advantages to pastoral care and the new beauty that the church's face will assume when the feminine genius is fully involved in the various areas" of the church's life?

Chloe apparently was one of those generous women of the church's very early days who put their homes at the disposal of a local Christian community which met there.

In St. Paul's first letter to the Corinthians we read of him receiving a delegation from "Chloe's people" — from the community that met in her home — with news about the churches in Corinth (1:12).

Since her house was a center of "parish" activity, it is safe to presume she was actively involved in the community's affairs as one of its leaders, though we are given no details about what that leadership entailed.

Who were Euodia and Syntyche? Who were Phoebe, Prisca and Lydia? They too are women of the New Testament.

When Paul asked the Philippians to intervene in the affairs of two prominent women who had a disagreement, he wrote: "I urge Euodia and I urge Syntyche to come to a mutual understanding in the Lord. Yes, and I ask you also, my true yokemate, to help them, for they have struggled at my side in promoting the Gospel, along with Clement and my other co-workers, whose names are in the book of life" (4:2-3).

Clearly these two women were esteemed for their apostolic work — for sharing in the work of spreading the good news.

Then there was Phoebe.

The last chapter of the Letter to the Romans contains a list of greetings. Among them: "I commend to you Phoebe our sister, who is (also) a minister of the church at Cenchreae, that you may receive her in the Lord in a manner worthy of the holy ones, and help her in whatever she may need from you, for she has been a benefactor to many and to me as well."

And Prisca? Paul also asked the Romans to greet Prisca and her husband Aquila, his "co-workers in Christ Jesus." They "risked their necks for my life," Paul said. "Greet also the church at their house," he urged (16:1-6).

Finally, Lydia was one of Paul's first converts at Philippi. She was a businesswoman and a leader (Acts 16:13-15).

These are just a few of the many women who were actively involved in the early Christian communities. Their involvement was noteworthy in a broader culture where women generally were "kept in their place."

For Paul, these women of the Bible were esteemed, respected members of Christ's body. And in the Letter to the Galatians we read: "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free person, there is not male and female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus" (3:28).

FAITH IN ACTION

"Women's energy is a positive force for the good of church and society," the U.S. bishops said in a 1994 pastoral reflection on women's roles titled "Strengthening the Bonds of Peace" (U.S. Catholic Conference Office of Publishing and Promotion Services, 3211 Fourth St. N.E., Washington, D.C. 20017. Phone: 1-800-235-8722. Publication No. 034-6. $1.) "We commit ourselves to enhancing the participation of women in every possible aspect of church life," the bishops say. Their statement lists numerous church roles that women currently fulfill: presidents of Catholic colleges, universities; liturgical ministers; chief executives of Catholic hospitals; theologians; school superintendents; marriage tribunal members; spiritual directors and much more.

Reflection: "One recent study shows that 85 percent of non-ordained ministerial positions in parishes are now held by women," the bishops observe. They say: "Pope John Paul II emphasizes that '(the role of women) is of capital importance ... for the rediscovery by believers of the true face of the church.'"

Quadriplegic Says Willingness Is Key To Volunteering

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (CNS) — When it comes to volunteerism, it doesn't matter whether you're perfectly healthy or paralyzed from the neck down because the key component is the willingness to make the effort, says Bill White. White has been a quadriplegic for 29 years. Yet he has found the means to sell $800 worth of T-shirts in a fund-raising effort for St. Bridget's Church in Rochester. "Anybody can do this. People who think they're helpless aren't helpless," said White in an interview with the Catholic Courier, Rochester diocesan newspaper. He spoke from his hospital bed at Strong Memorial Hospital. The 47-year-old White has resided in the rehabilitation unit at the hospital since 1969. He was permanently paralyzed at age 18 in a mishap during a gymnastics routine.

Mother Teresa Attends First Event After Release From Hospital

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa attended the final profession of five Missionaries of Charity brothers in Calcutta Sept. 8, the first event she participated in since leaving the hospital two days earlier. Two days later she observed the beginning of the order's jubilee year to commemorate her inspiration on Sept. 10, 1946, when she says Jesus called her to serve the poorest of the poor. Mother Teresa's appearance at her usual place in the chapel of the Missionaries of Charity motherhouse Sept. 8 caused a slight commotion and made heads turn. She sat in a wheelchair, a service leaflet in her hands, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

Cardinal Bernardin: 'Each Life Is Of Infinite Value'

WASHINGTON (CNS) — "Each life is of infinite value," Chicago Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin said in a speech Sept. 9 at Georgetown University. He announced during the speech that he would join a Sept. 12 prayer vigil at the U.S. Capitol to urge a ban on partial-birth abortion sponsored by the U.S. bishops' Committee for Pro-Life Activities. The announcement was a departure from his prepared text. In his speech the cardinal insisted anew on the need to establish a "consistent ethic of life" and to bring religious values into the nation's culture.

Cardinal Hickey Celebrates 50 Years Of Priesthood

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Legislators, government officials, ambassadors and representatives of almost every parish in the Archdiocese of Washington gathered at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Cardinal James A. Hickey's ordination to the priesthood. "Looking at the past, I am filled with gratitude for all the Lord Jesus has done for me. Above all, I thank him for the gift of my priesthood and for the opportunity of being your bishop," he said in the homily at the Sept. 8 Mass.

Msgr. Peters Called One Of Century's Top Catholic Press Figures

PEORIA, Ill. (CNS) — Msgr. Robert G. Peters was remembered by a top Vatican official at his funeral Mass Sept. 10 as "one of the outstanding figures in the Catholic press this century." Msgr. Peters, a former president of the Catholic Press Association who guided the newspaper of the Diocese of Peoria for nearly five decades as editor and later publisher, died in Peoria Sept. 7 at the age of 79. The funeral Mass was Sept. 10 at St. Mary's Cathedral in Peoria, with Bishop John J. Myers of Peoria as principal celebrant. Bishop Myers read a letter of tribute to Msgr. Peters received that morning from Archbishop John P. Foley, president of the Pontifical Council for Social Communications at the Vatican.

Sponsor a child

at a Catholic mission for just $10 a month

This is Conchita. She lives in Guatemala in a one-room house with a tin roof, a dirt floor and no electricity. Only four years old, she must help her mother carry water for cooking and bathing. She gets very tired but finds little comfort on her stiff wooden bed with a straw mattress. Because her father earns only $25 per month as a day laborer, there is no money for playthings, and even basic necessities are a luxury to her family of six.

But there is hope!

You can help one very poor child like Conchita through Christian Foundation for Children and Aging (CFCA), a Catholic sponsorship program assisting needy children at Catholic mission sites around the world.

For as little as $10 a month, only 33 cents a day, you can help a poor child receive nourishing food, medical care, the chance to go to school and hope for a brighter future. You can literally change a life!

Through CFCA, you can sponsor a child with the amount you can afford. Ordinarily it takes $20 a month to provide a child with the life-changing benefits of sponsorship. But if this is not possible for you, we invite you to do what you can.

CFCA works hand-in-hand with dedicated, trusted Catholic missionaries and lay leaders who know their communities and labor tirelessly to improve conditions for needy children and their families. Your sponsorship dollars help them do the work Jesus has called us to do.

When you become a sponsor you receive a photo of your child, their personal family history, a description of the country where your child lives, and the CFCA newsletter. Your new friend will write you - and you may write them as often as you like. But most of all, you have the satisfaction of helping a child in need.

Please don't miss this opportunity to make a difference.

These gods, or Fathers, through a sort of sexual relationship with counterpart females, bring into existence beings, including Jesus and other inhabitants of our earth, who take earthly bodies after (for some of them at least) a pre-existence in heaven.

Those who reach the most "exalted state," what they envision as salvation, become, in their own right, gods or Fathers to others, "in and through the continuation of the family unit in eternity" (Doctrine and Covenants, 131-132).

For adherents "there is no salvation of this type outside the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints" (Mormon Doctrine, p. 670).

This explains the well-known Mormon interest in and promotion of the family, and why devout Mormons want their deceased ancestors to be baptized, even if by proxy. Ancestors entering the Mormon church in this way, it is believed, will have the opportunity to reach the "celestial" level of eternity.

It is critical to remember that words like "God," "savior," "heaven," "faith," even "morality," mean something vastly different to Mormons than they do to us.

Understanding them, or getting them to understand other Christians, is nearly impossible without a long, honest and arduous effort to state very clearly what exactly is meant by every word that is used. Not many on either side can overcome that hurdle.

A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about the sacrament of penance is available by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Questions should be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

African-American Affairs Ministry Hosts Fall Retreat

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

ASHEVILLE — Participants at the diocesan African-American Affairs Ministry's fall retreat gathered for one reason: to build up the Body of Christ.

"Evangelization is God's call telling us to do something, and it is our response," said Rev. Mr. Marvin Threatt, keynote speaker from the Diocese of San Diego, Calif. "Who Jesus is in your life determines who you are to everybody else."

As Christians we are called to do three things: to teach, sanctify and serve. "That is why the Church exists," he added.

The Sept. 13-14 retreat drew 44 people from throughout the diocese, and included Mass at St. Lawrence Basilica in Asheville.

A principal at Verbum Dei Catholic High School in south Los Angeles, and member of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops Committee on Liturgy, consortium of African-American High Schools and executive board of the National Black Clergy Caucus, Rev. Mr. Threatt is also program director of Genesis Foundation, a Christian leadership and management training organization.

The workshop focused on three areas of the African-American community: Vocations, Education and Family. The theme of the retreat was "One Spirit: Many Gifts."

Statistics provided by the National Black Catholic Congress in 1995 show the U.S. has 2 million African-American Catholics. That includes 350 priests, 1,500 Catholic sisters, 75 brothers, 446 deacons, 13 bishops and 150 seminarians. According to Rev. Mr. Threatt, African-American vocations were not allowed in the Catholic Church until recently.

Retreatants discussed ways to increase vocations in the African-American community. Some ideas included: maintaining a positive focus on vocations; showing respect to those who have taken on vocations as black priests, sisters and deacons; and identifying men and women to answer the call.

"Look for vocations among ordinary people; Try to find basic goodness in people," Rev. Mr. Threatt said. "God takes ordinary people and does extraordinary things with them."

Catholic schools play an important role, he added. "If we lose Catholic schools, we lose a tremendous edge for vocations."

Prayer should be included too. "Start a vocations candle at church, and have a different family take it home each week and pray for vocations," Rev. Mr. Threatt said.

The family faces an uphill struggle, said Rev. Mr. Threatt. Dysfunctional families outnumber functional families. Problems like physical abuse, sexual abuse, domestic violence, teen suicide, drug addiction, teen pregnancies and gang activity are not uncommon.

"Fifty-two percent of all black families are headed by a single parent," Rev. Mr. Threatt noted. "Forty percent of the jail population is African-American men. At this rate, by the year 2003, 50 percent (of the jail population) will be African-American men."

Of the solutions offered to combat the problems facing families, repairing the family structure is the most important, Rev. Threatt said. "If we don't get husbands and wives together, we have no future."

Education was another aspect discussed. The number one problem facing many blacks in school is lack of expectations, Rev. Mr. Threatt said. "If we expect children to learn, they will learn."

The principal said he structures his school around several things: Catholicity; parental involvement; academics that are college-oriented; athletics; extracurricular activities. All five are integral parts to his blueprint.

"The single most important factor that determines the success of a school is parental involvement," Rev. Mr. Threatt noted.

At Verbum Dei, the formula is working: Of the 92 graduates from the Class of 1996, 87 (or 95 percent) went on to two-or four-year colleges.

Alma Little-England, coordinator of African-American Affairs Ministry at Our Lady of the Assumption Church in Charlotte, said the retreat touched on many key aspects. "The topics were all things we're concerned about," she said. "We also started to embark upon what we can do to help the situation we're in."

Rev. Mr. Curtiss Todd, Vicar for African-American Affairs Ministry, agreed. "One of the primary purposes of this is to go back (to our parishes) and do something," he said.

Raleigh Works To Recover From Hurricane

By JOHN STRANGE and MATT DOYLE
NC Catholic Staff

A week after Hurricane Fran did its worst to eastern North Carolina, Diocese of Raleigh officials were counting their wounds and their blessings.

Few Catholic parishes and facilities received major damages in the Sept. 5 storm, which cut a path from Wilmington through the middle of the diocese and into Virginia.

Hardest hit were Infant of Prague Church in Jacksonville, St. Therese Church in Wrightsville Beach, the Christian Family Living Center on Topsail Beach, and St. Jude Church in Hampstead.

In the meantime, the diocese turns its attention to helping those hit hardest by the hurricane, with collections taking place in diocesan parishes the weekends of Sept. 14-15 and Sept. 21-22.

In addition, Bishop F. Gossman said that he has talked with Msgr. Dennis Schnurr, general secretary of the United States Catholic Conference, about a national collection that will benefit the North Carolina victims of Fran.

"Whatever we can get, we can use," Bishop Gossman said at a Raleigh Deanery meeting Sept. 12. While it is likely that the collection will be authorized by the USCC, Bishop Gossman said, it is not yet clear when the collection will be.

A $10,000 grant from Catholic Charities USA is being used for food and other basic needs, said Pam Denning, assistant director of Catholic Social Ministries in the diocese. The social services agency purchased gift certificates at a local grocery chain for distribution.

The hurricane left in its wake dozens of stories of charity and recovery across the diocese. In Castle Hayne, Conventual Father Doug Reed opened St. Stanislaus Kosta's parish hall to people who couldn't find public shelter because of their pets. "We had 16 people and six dogs," said Father Reed. "It was very Franciscan of us."

St. Stanislaus was a service site for the Red Cross, which served three meals a day, for the Federal Emergency Management Agency, which processed disaster relief applications, and for county social services personnel, who distributed food stamps.

In Wilmington, St. Mark Church opened its doors to 220 students from Wrightsville Beach Elementary School, which suffered major flood damage. The church's parish hall and kitchen are also being used for meals.

George Quinn, parish administrator, said that the arrangement is expected to continue for at least two months.

In the days immediately after the storm, details on damage to diocesan facilities were sketchy at best. Downed phone lines and the fact that residents and visitors alike were restricted from several coastal areas hampered efforts to find out how local parishes fared.

In Jacksonville, the hurricane toppled Infant of Prague Church's steeple onto its roof, and water poured into the hole left by the missing tower. Art Wesche, who coordinates property and construction for the diocese, said that the surrounding grounds were too muddy for a crane to get proper footing and that church's roof was too slick and steep for workers. As of Monday, Sept. 16, the steeple lay on top of the roof.

At St. Therese Church in Wrightsville Beach, said Wesche, "a section of brick veneer fell from the building, leaving wood sheeting exposed to the driving rain and leading to major flooding inside the church."

In Hampstead, the new church building for St. Jude the Apostle Parish, still under construction, lost 1,000 square feet in roof shingling, Wesche said. The parish is still shooting for an Oct. 27 dedication, he said.

Roof leaks at St. Michael the Archangel Church in Cary, which resulted in about a half-inch of water in parts of church, will not interfere with a Sept. 29 dedication, said Father John Wall, St. Michael's pastor.

In the Catholic Center, the headquarters of the Diocese of Raleigh Administration, the hurricane flooded the basement damaging or destroying dozens of files belonging to the Tribunal and to Catholic Social Ministries. Files from the old Nazareth Orphanage were also damaged.

At Topsail Beach, the Christian Family Living Center, a private retreat facility, was hit hard as a third of the top floor of its "kitchen building" was torn away, destroying several bedrooms. Jim Rider, a founding director of the center who lives next door to the facility, estimated that it took about $30,000 in damage. The center is expected to be closed for two months.

She was conscious and sitting up in a wheelchair when she arrived at the hospital.

Her injury was reported not serious, but she underwent a brain scan at the hospital and remained there for a checkup.

A hospital statement said: "Mother Teresa had a fall this morning and sustained a minor injury in her head. Her condition is not serious."

"Mother can see well and is keeping fine," Press Trust of India quoted a doctor as saying.

The Nobel laureate was released Sept. 6 from the same hospital after spending 18 days recovering from heart problems, a lung infection and malaria.

"She doesn't have any temperature but her cardiac irregularity continues," the Sept. 16 statement said.

Mother Teresa, 86, attended the final profession of five Missionaries of Charity brothers in Calcutta Sept. 8, the first event she participated in since leaving the hospital two days earlier.

On Sept. 10 she observed the beginning of the order's jubilee year to commemorate her inspiration Sept. 10, 1946, when she says God called her to serve the poorest of the poor.

Bishop Says Chemical Weapons 'Unworthy Of Humanity'

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Just days before Senate action on a global chemical weapons ban was postponed indefinitely, a U.S. bishop urged the lawmakers to ratify it because such weapons "are unworthy of humanity and may not be justified on any ethical ground." The Clinton administration Sept. 12 had to accept the indefinite postponement of Senate action on the Chemical Weapons Convention, as the treaty is called. In a Sept. 9 letter to the senators, Bishop Daniel P. Reilly of Worcester, Mass., called the convention "a remarkable achievement" that the Senate should approve "without crippling reservations or amendments." As chairman of the U.S. bishops' International Policy Committee, Bishop Reilly urged the United States to lead by example and "move forward the global process of implementing this landmark convention by promptly ratifying it."

Candidates Clinton, Dole Respond To USCC Questionnaire

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Responses to a U.S. Catholic Conference questionnaire by President Clinton and Bob Dole show sharp differences on abortion and immigration but also highlight some areas of agreement. The responses from the Democratic and Republican candidates for president were mailed to the U.S. bishops Sept. 6 and made available to Catholic News Service the following week. Reform Party candidate Ross Perot did not respond to the USCC questionnaire. In a memo to the bishops, Frank J. Monahan, director of the USCC Office of Government Liaison, said the answers were distributed "for possible use as voter education material during the remainder of this election campaign."

Nicaraguan Church Leaders Voice Concern Over Voting

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (CNS) — Church leaders in Nicaragua have expressed concern over preparations for October elections, in particular the lack of voting cards. "This is a very worrying situation.... People should have their voting cards in time for voting," Cardinal Miguel Obando Bravo of Managua said Sept. 12. Less than half of Nicaragua's 2.7 million voters have obtained their voting cards and might not do so in time for the general elections scheduled for Oct. 20, according to official observers of the Organization of American States.

Vatican Relying On Bishops To Invite Golden Jubilarians

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican has had to rely on local bishops to do the inviting to a four-day celebration of the 50th anniversary of Pope John Paul II's priestly ordination. The plan is that every diocesan or religious-order priest ordained in 1946 would be invited to participate in a Nov. 7-10 jubilee program of talks and sharing, Masses and prayer services, celebrations and sightseeing. But the Vatican does not have a mailing list for all the jubilarians, nor is it sure of how many men were ordained to the priesthood the same year as the then-26-year-old Karol Wojtyla, the current pope.

Vatican Newspaper Hails Passage Of Marriage Act

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican newspaper hailed U.S. congressional passage of the Defense of Marriage Act, saying it was a common-sense rejection of same-sex unions. "To pretend to raise homosexual unions to the level of matrimonial institution represents a challenge to good sense, reason and law," the newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano, said in an editorial Sept. 12. It said marriage between a man and a woman is divinely ordained, whereas homosexuality represents a moral deviation that should never be treated as a civil right.

KERNERSVILLE — Although Holy Cross Church's history only dates back to the late 1960s, the parish has enjoyed tremendous growth over time. Its very existence testifies to a Catholic desire to expand the Church, and while it found its beginnings as a mission of St. Benedict the Moor in Winston-Salem, it soon became established as a parish in its own right, with a growing congregation active in church and community life.

Father William Pharr, at that time pastor at St. Benedict, can be thanked for approaching Bishop Vincent Waters with the request to establish a mission in Kernersville. Local residents, including 41 children, signed a request for the church, and the bishop agreed, thereby establishing the mission in August 1969.

The first Mass was celebrated Sept. 7, 1969. The church, a former antique shop and residence, was furnished with pews, an organ and other items collected from other churches in the diocese.

The mission status continued until 1973, when Oblates of St. Francis de Sales Father Leon Bolich became resident pastor. The mission was elevated to a parish and in September was named Holy Cross Church.

The growing parish began plans for a new church facility in July 1974, when land was bought on Southern Street. The diocese received building plans for the church in January 1978. The parish held its ground-breaking ceremony in April of that year, and Bishop Michael Begley dedicated the new building, a multi-purpose structure complete with a 325-seat sanctuary, classrooms and other facilities, on Oct. 29.

By 1980, registered families numbered 140, and the congregation continued to grow by dozens each year. The need for more space again led to construction, and in October 1982, Bishop Begley blessed the newly expanded church area, which was reconstructed to accommodate 500 churchgoers.

More than 1300 people have joined the Holy Cross family since then, and the parish is currently involved in a number of ministries and programs, including faith formation, CYO, Cub Scouts, Boy Scouts, day care, Knights of Columbus, Columbiettes and Squires. An active Hispanic community enhances parish life, and some 300 Hispanics attend Spanish Mass, which is celebrated weekly. Holy Hour is observed in honor of the Sacred Heart the first Friday of every month as well.

Because it is situated between Winston-Salem and Greensboro, Kernersville itself has grown into a vibrant community. As such, the Catholic population has marked expansion, too, and Holy Cross Church stands as a reminder of the extension of the Church in North Carolina.

Asheville Catholic School Principal Encourages Teamwork, Fair Play

By PAUL FREDETTE
Correspondent

ASHEVILLE — Principal Judith Cavallo is behind in her paperwork. She won't get caught up today because she spent a good part of her afternoon helping a third grader explore alternative ways of dealing with his frustration. Starting a fight with bystanders is not an acceptable way of reacting when called "out" in a kickball game at Asheville Catholic School.

Earlier in the day Cavallo had missed lunch trying to elicit an acceptable level of cooperation from a tantrum-prone lad in Pre-K. "People have always been more important to me than paper," she says without an apology. "That's the thread in my life — the time I spend with people, helping them to better understand themselves, one another and life."

In Cavallo's view, not only students, but teachers and parents also are out there trying to win the game — getting angry when "he says I'm out, but I'm not." Cavallo believes her role is to ask: "Is it that important? Is this life and death? How could we act in a way that will keep the game going, having fun with each other, not hurting one another?"

"This is what being a principal is about and it takes time," says Cavallo, who has already spent 28 years in the classroom, both in parochial and public schools. She grew up in a large family on the east side of Detroit and was soaked since baptism in a Catholic educational experience that eventually led her to join the Sisters of Christian Charity in Wilmette, Ill., with whom she began her teaching career.

In our throw-away consumer society, Cavallo is preoccupied by what are we leaving behind — what will be our spiritual legacy for generations to come. The education of our children causes ripples through time, she believes, in the way that great writing lasts, which is why she majored in English literature at Loyola University of Chicago.

As a young teacher, Cavallo's goal was to become an administrator. "I always believed that a principal has a remarkable opportunity to create an atmosphere where teachers and students and parents can work together as a team." She also believes her role as principal is to guide, encourage and help a child grow. "We all fail, we all make mistakes; the real issue is what we have learned and how to go on." She describes herself as a person who reacts to negativity in a positive way. "I see a problem and think, we could change this around."

The harsh realities of the educational system, however, wore down some of the idealism of her early years. Eventually, she made the difficult decision to leave her religious community and put her career dreams on hold while raising her family. As a mother of two children, Cavallo believes that values are the most important gifts parents can give their children.

"I have always relied heavily on my faith and on prayer to create an atmosphere of understanding and an appreciation for individual uniqueness among people." Acceptance and respect, she says, have been recurring themes through the many changes in her life. She is proud that, whatever they may lack monetarily, "my son and daughter have caring hearts."

The emphasis society places on externals, Cavallo points out, is reflected in the some parents' reaction to the school facility, which is not brand new and lacks some of the latest innovations. "Some mothers come here and say it looks just like when they went to school here 30 years ago." But Cavallo knows that the building doesn't create the product. She taught in

Diocesan Teachers, Support Staff Gather For Day Of Reflection

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

CHARLOTTE — Catholic educators must journey with students down their "road to Emmaus" and nurture them, much like Jesus Christ did for His disciples nearly 2,000 years ago, said Bishop G. Patrick Ziemann, a member of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops Committee on Education.

"The first principle of Catholic education is we have to walk and listen with our kids, our students, our colleagues, and the question is: 'What are you discussing as you go your way? What's on your mind today?; What's in your heart today?; Talk to me, tell me,'" said Bishop Ziemann of Santa Rosa, Calif.

The bishop was the guest speaker at a "Day of Reflection" held Sept. 20 at Charlotte Catholic High School for teachers and support staff for Diocese of Charlotte Schools. Bishop Ziemann used the Emmaus passage from the Bible as a paradigm of what educators do in Catholic schools.

In the afternoon session of the daylong retreat, the bishop focused on Jesus' walk to Emmaus with His disciples after being raised from the dead. "The pair did not recognize Jesus until they invited Him to stay for the night. Jesus broke bread with them and then disappeared."

"That is the pivotal point of the story, when they invited Jesus to stay," an animated Bishop Ziemann noted. "If He didn't stay, they wouldn't have recognized Him. That is what Catholic education is all about: We, whether daily, weekly or monthly, invite Jesus to stay with us. That's very important. Catholic education is setting up that invitation from the person and asking Jesus to come into their life."

"We need to get kids to know Jesus Christ is their friend," he added.

Another role of teachers is to be talent scouts, Bishop Ziemann said. They must help students recognize and develop their skills. "There are three principles of happiness: I can only be happy if I grow in my talent areas; I don't know my talents until you tell me; I cannot grow in recognized talents until you help me," Bishop Ziemann said. "Kids don't see themselves until it gets reflected back by adults — parents, teachers, counselors."

Catholic Schools must also turn out more leaders and teach all students to pray, Bishop Ziemann added. "A leader is anyone who makes a difference for good," he said. "You don't have to be elected, nominated, selected, voted upon, popular, smart — anybody can be a leader."

Answering The Call:

Bishops Urge Political Responsibility

By MARY COYNE WESSLING

This is the second in a three-part series on political responsibility. This week we examine how parishes have made use of the American bishops' materials on political responsibility.

Our Lady of the Assumption

CHARLOTTE — On a bright, breezy fall Sunday after Mass, members of the Our Lady of the Assumption Church Community Life Committee gathered up voter registrations from fellow parishioners.

The call to political responsibility has echoed in parishes throughout the diocese all year long. In addition to organizing voter registration drives, parishes have sponsored discussions on current issues and the Church's position regarding them; urged members to send letters and postcards to Washington representatives calling for a repeal of the partial-birth abortion bill; and inspired members to get involved in local issues.

Assumption's voter registration drive went well, said David Reiser, a member of the parish Community Life Committee. "It was not a matter of wanting to know who they would vote for, but encouraging them to exercise their civic responsibility to vote," he said.

In addition to the drive, Assumption parishioners are offered excerpts of the bishops' statement on various issues in the weekly bulletin. The parish Community Life Committee went one step further and committed itself to a year-long promotion of four of the issues addressed by the bishops. Those are migrants, feeding the hungry, serving the needs of the elderly and the right to life.

While it's hard to assess the effect this educational effort has had on the parish, Reiser is hopeful that more people will take steps to help change current policies which may hurt people in need. He believes the large turnout last fall for the Justice and Peace Workshop at the parish is indication that people are ready to do more for others. Still, he remains conservative in his optimism.

"Right now we have small pockets of people getting involved. It's tough to mobilize a large parish on issues. Many people are still not aware or do not understand some of the issues."

St. Andrew the Apostle

MARS HILL — Excerpts of the bishops' statements have been running weekly in St. Andrew the Apostle parish bulletins since March. Former pastor Father Frank Reese, who was re-assigned this summer, said he hoped the excerpts helped raise awareness among the parishioners of the scope of issues which concern the Church. The parish also had a voter registration drive, sent postcards to Congress regarding late-term abortions and called for the closing of the U.S. Army School of the Americas, which trains military from third-world countries.

St. Andrew parishioners got a firsthand lesson in civic responsibility. Father Reese joined ministers in the area in protesting a local anti-gay resolution. While they did not prevent passage of the resolution, they were able to draw attention from the media. Father Reese said he received no negative feedback from his parishioners about his involvement but felt encouraged when people mentioned they had read the group's statement in the paper or watched the television coverage.

"One theologian recommends we work things in little ways. That's been my general practice," said Father Reese.

St. Michael

GASTONIA — St. Michael parish opted to examine the bishops' materials in discussion groups. Some 35 parishioners joined Father George Kloster in discussing about six of the 20 issues addressed by the bishops.

"We broke up into small groups with each group choosing a single issue," said Father Kloster. The process brought out interesting comments and insights. The groups focused on the strengths and weaknesses of the bishops' statements, as well as their personal views. Father Kloster said many participants were surprised by the number and scope of issues the bishops had addressed.

In addition, St. Michael Church plans to have a voter registration drive and a meeting of People Against the Death Penalty.

St. Paul the Apostle

GREENSBORO — A pamphlet and a brochure summarizing the bishops' materials will be sent to every family in the parish of St. Paul the Apostle in October. Bill O'Malley, a member of the parish Community Life Committee, said he hopes families will read the materials and use them as "points of reference in deciding how they will vote."

The St. Paul weekly parish bulletin will continue to carry excerpts of the bishops' statements up to election time.

Francis of Assisi

Francis, hearing God's call, put on the clothes of a poor shepherd and began to preach. He took 12 followers to Rome, and the pope gave him permission to start a new religious order, the Franciscans. He also helped St. Clare start the Poor Clares. The wounds of Jesus were left in his hands, feet and sides. When Francis was very ill, he prayed, "O Lord, I thank you for the pains which I suffer." His feast is Oct. 4.

© 1996 CNS Graphics

The Community Life Committee is also making the bishops' booklet, which contains the complete statements on all 20 issues, available to fellow parishioners, particularly to those active in adult education classes.

When asked why political responsibility is important, O'Malley gave this layman's perspective: "A lot of people see what they do in the everyday world and what they do in church as two different worlds. Getting involved in the political process would bridge those two worlds. Catholics find they can have an impact on issues affecting everyone."

O'Malley sees the bishops' call to responsibility as more a call to social action rather than political action. "I find people hesitate when we talk about politics, but social action includes being involved in government and how it treats these issues. People need to get involved not just in the causes but have a responsibility to make known their stand through the political realm."

The Community Life Committee is offering materials and programs which promote a general awareness of the issues of the day. In the coming months, they hope to move from a global perspective to a local one. "We'd like to bring in local experts who can address these issues as they effect us and discuss the Church's stand on them," he said.

Another way the committee promotes political responsibility is by providing the funds for 10 parishioners to attend "Faith Doing Justice," an Oct. 18-19 conference sponsored by the Diocesan Office of Justice and Peace at Belmont Abbey College.

WINSTON-SALEM — Pamphlets offering the bishops' guidelines regarding political responsibility were distributed after Mass recently to parishioners at Our Lady of Mercy Church.

"It can be upsetting when people speak about one issue and don't see the big picture," said Katie Ess, a member of the parish Community Life Committee. "You've got to see all the issues. The bishops encourage us to do that."

The pamphlet to which Ess refers accompanies the bishops' statements on the issues. Do's and don'ts for Catholic institutions are spelled out, and principles and issues guidelines are listed.

Besides distributing the pamphlet, an adult education class featured Pamela Kinlaw leading a discussion on the bishops' statements. Future classes focus on specific issues addressed by the bishops such as welfare reform. The parish also had a voter registration drive as it has done in past election years.

Ess is uncertain if the political responsibility materials will have an effect on how her fellow parishioners vote. "But it's always worth the try," she said.

"Fulfilling The Master's Plan": St. Gabriel Church Campaigns For New Building, Renovations

CHARLOTTE — This week St. Gabriel Parish kicked off a new capital campaign called "Fulfilling the Master's Plan." The campaign's goal is $2.5 million to build a new ministry center, improve the parking areas and renovate a youth center.

"Our campaign is about more than just bricks and mortar," says Father Ed Sheridan, pastor of St. Gabriel. "It's about fulfilling the Lord's plan for a faith community. St. Gabriel Church is blessed with many active, involved people, but they are often impeded by inadequate facilities. We want to give them the space they need and also provide for our future growth as a parish."

Founded in 1957, St. Gabriel has been faced with enormous growth over the years. Due mainly to increasing population in surrounding southeast Charlotte, the parish has grown from 175 registered families to nearly 3,500. To cope with this growth, the parish adopted a "master plan" in 1981 to address the need for facilities. The first project was an 1,100-seat church which was completed in 1986 at a cost of $2 million.

Realizing the need for additional meeting space, as well as educational, fellowship and social needs, a Parish Center was built in 1993 at a cost of $4.7 million. The Parish Center serves more than 500 Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools elementary students.

The growing needs of the parish are forcing St. Gabriel to bring the "master plan" to completion. "Our parish today has over 100 ministries, committees and outreach groups competing for space," says Dick Tomlinson, Capital Campaign Chairman. "Last year there were over 1,000 meetings at St. Gabriel. This put a strain on our existing facilities. Quite often, there is simply no place to meet." Therefore, the parish is proposing a 20,000 square foot ministry center on the site of the original church, which is still standing.

The new ministry center will serve many purposes including nursery space for up to 90 children during Masses and group meetings; meeting space for parish committees; offices for the parish staff; private areas for pastoral and bereavement counseling (about 1,000 counseling sessions per year take place at St. Gabriel); space for marriage preparation and large gatherings; facilities for receptions that follow wakes and funerals; meeting space for community groups using St. Gabriel's facilities, such as Alcoholics Anonymous, Overeaters Anonymous and Alzheimer Support; and a library and a kitchen.

The capital campaign also includes funds necessary to demolish the old church and parish office to create 90 additional parking spaces and safer, more efficient traffic flow. There are plans to make interior renovations to the current St. Michael's Center (old school) as well, making it more suitable for Boy Scout, Girl Scout and other youth activities.

The Pope Speaks

Pope Says Mary's Example Invites All To Respond To The Lord's Grace

Dear brothers and sisters,

In our catechesis today, we consider the Blessed Virgin Mary as the new Eve. In her response to the angel at the Annunciation, Mary was free in accepting her role in the divine plan of salvation. Before the great mystery of the Incarnation took place, she pronounced her "yes" and expressed her complete acceptance of God's will. Thus, just as a woman, Eve, had a role in bringing death to humanity, so too did a woman, Mary, contribute to bringing life (cf. "Lumen Gentium," 56).

In this, Mary is a model for us all. For we, too, must accept the role which is ours in the divine plan of salvation. This means nothing more or less than "hearing the word of God and keeping it" (cf. Lk 11:28), which, as Jesus himself explained, was the source of Mary's own blessedness. Mary's example invites all Christians to respond generously to the Lord's grace. Her complete dedication to the person and the work of Christ in his victory over sin and death makes her truly "mother of the living," the "new Eve." Her motherhood, freely accepted in obedience to the divine will, has become the font of life for all of humanity.

I am pleased to offer greetings to Cardinal Wamala and the cathedral choir members from the Archdiocese of Kampala. A special greeting goes also to the new seminarians of the Venerable English College accompanied by their rector, and to the monks, students and seminarians from St. Vincent Archabbey in Latrobe, Pa., accompanied by their archabbot. Upon all the English-speaking pilgrims, especially those from England, Ireland, Denmark, Finland, Lithuania, Uganda, Australia, the Philippines, Japan and the United States, I invoke the grace and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Pope Arrives In France For Visit Of Personal, Historical Value

TOURS, France (CNS) — Pope John Paul II arrived in France Sept. 19 for a pastoral visit to historic sites. "I come as a pilgrim in order to meet the Catholics of France and to join with them in prayer in those places that are important to the religious history of their country and of Europe itself, in order to strengthen their faith and their Christian life," the pope said.

Pope Urges French To Keep Church Teachings, Spiritual Commitment

SAINTE-ANNE-D'AURAY, France (CNS) — Pope John Paul II urged French faithful to remain true to church teachings and to renew their spiritual commitment. In an outdoor morning Mass Sept. 20, and again at a meeting with young French families, he pointed to examples of people in the Bible and in French history who kept their faith despite all odds. "This faith, which is your common heritage, is met with numerous problems," the pope acknowledged in his homily. "For sure the causes to worry are numerous. Thus we see develop a climate of indifference and of individualism: Some cannot accept others in their differences, others give up hope in the face of the evil of the world."

Education and Religion To Achieve Real Values

The words education (Latin: Educere — to bring up) and religion (Latin: Religare — to tie back) have something in common: the human person on earth. We will not need education or religion in Heaven. Only human beings can read and write and express their ideas.

We are people shaping tomorrow's world today. Society was established because people have a purpose in life. They take risks and exercise control, solve problems rather than place blame, care about quality and share expertise.

Success is defined in terms of a process rather than a dream. Education and religion are powerful means of achieving "real" values. If you think education and religion are expensive and involve sacrifice, try ignorance and unbelief! In any learning process, we detect a need, decide to do something about it, set a reachable goal and persevere until the goal is met.

In our religious and educational journey, we are not really spectators of the game of life, we are the players. How do we play the game? Here are a few hints:

- More to improve, fewer to disapprove
- More "doers", fewer "talkers"
- More to say "It can be done," fewer to say, "It can't be done"
- More to get into the thick of things and do something about it, fewer to keep harping on what's wrong

• More to be interested in lighting candles, fewer in blowing them out — and speaking of candles remember, a candle doesn't lose power by lighting another candle.

As true Christians, we learn every day. We know that God created everything and it was good. Let us then continue God's work.

You are the light of the world. A city on a hill cannot be hidden. Neither do people light a lamp and put it under a bowl. Instead they put it on its stand and it gives light to everyone in the house. (Mt. 5: 14-15)

Self-confidence is the way; excellence is the result. Let us not stress what we can't do, but what we can do. I remember the dialogue which I had with a teenager. Here is the end of it: "To gain self confidence, you must avoid negative words, such as can't and not. Do you think you could do that?" I asked. She replied, "Well, I can't see why not."

Your message to others is: "I love you not only for what you are, but for what I am. I love you not only for what you have made of yourself, but for what you are making of me."

AIDS: Exile And Faith

"Why should people with the AIDS virus be treated any differently than those with another illness?" That was the question a friend hurled at me this past summer during one of the most wrenching experiences I have had as a priest.

A married couple I had never met phoned to ask if I would talk with them about going back to church and to ask if I would baptize their three-month daughter who was born with AIDS.

After hanging up the phone, I was beset by an array of questions. They may be the same question you're asking right now: How did the baby get the virus? What about the parents? Was the father gay? The mother promiscuous? What happened? And who was to blame?

I am not happy to admit that I was engaged in that kind of judgmental thinking. I knew I had to short-circuit my suspicions and concentrate on what mattered: They are sick and I must love them.

When we first met, the couple, professionals in their late thirties, found themselves isolated at work, in their neighborhood and, most painfully, among family and friends. Unlike Tom Hanks' character in the movie "Philadelphia," they found no warm acceptance and support.

The disease had not only invaded their bodies, but had unraveled any meaning they had in their lives. Religion had had little relevance for them before the diagnosis. Now they were frantic for a spiritual dimension that could provide the comfort and hope that had been stripped from their lives.

Throughout the summer I grew to discern this grieving couple's search for a spiritual answer to their crisis. They felt guilty about their baby's illness and wanted God's forgiveness.

It's been said that faith is theology on its knees. Before theology could illuminate this tragedy, it would first have to drop to its knees before the Christ whose message is clear: All persons, no matter how outcast in the eyes of society, are loved and accepted by God. We knelt and prayed together the words of promise in Isaiah: "Fear not, for I am with you...and I will help you."

I also came across an article by M. Jeanne Wirpsa in "Nation" that spoke to them: "Our acts of faith do not require answers to questions such as why we suffer. We do not need explanations to be restored to wholeness, but we need to know we've not been abandoned. We need to be embraced by communion with God and one another, a communion that allows us to acknowledge our pain and suffering — and our rage."

In giving me permission to tell you their story, this couple wants you to know that in returning to the Church they have rediscovered God as the One who never abandons us. Each day they are increasingly at peace with themselves and others. And there is good news. At least some relatives and friends are starting to show the compassion everybody needs sometime in life.

I am still wrestling with questions. If you can't find God's love in your own loved ones and your own community, where can you find it? And, if God is for us, who can be against us?

Question Box

Father John Dietzen

Impotence And The Validity Of Marriage

Q. Your column has always been clear and helpful until a recent one that concerned reversing a vasectomy.

In your answer was the statement, "Physical or emotional inability to have sexual relations with one's partner invalidates a marriage union between them."

That part disturbs me. After 46 years of marriage, a physical impediment of that kind is not one to end a marriage.

Sometimes these conditions occur later in life. Or medication might have an effect. I would like some clarification.

A. Since you're one of several who were bothered, I probably should have been more clear.

When we speak of a marriage being invalid, that always means it was invalid from the beginning; it was never a real, true marriage.

As I have explained more fully a number of times in past years, the reason for a marriage being invalid may only be discovered some years later. But whatever the reason, it means that some circumstance existed from the start of the marriage that made a genuine community of life, which we believe marriage to be, impossible for that couple.

In other words, according to our Catholic understanding of marriage, a true, valid marriage, once it exists, does not "become invalid" later on.

This seems clearly to be the situation of your marriage, and of countless others in which, for one reason or another, partial or total impotence becomes a problem.

As you correctly indicate, if and when that happens, it certainly does not end the marriage.

Q. My question concerns your column on impotence and invalidity of marriage.

May a widower who is impotent as a result of surgery contract a valid marriage? The prospective bride is an unbaptized divorcee. Is this marriage possible?

A. Let's take the impotence question first. For impotence to be an impediment to marriage, the condition must be absolutely permanent, with no hope of any rehabilitation that might make intercourse possible in the future (Canon law 1084).

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

More Than A Cliché

Lately, the African proverb, "It takes a village to raise a child," has been used, misused and refused by many. Our experience tells us that this simple phrase is indeed true in our lives. We have found that not only is the involvement of the community needed in the raising of children, it is also essential to the sustenance of marriage and family life. At the risk of adding to making a cliché of sage wisdom, we offer personal testimony to the importance of the "village" in defining, sustaining and nurturing family life.

Early in our marriage, the idea of having children frightened us. Call it lack of faith, lack of confidence, or just plain selfishness, we're not sure what it was. We are sure that we were scared. No one in our close circle of friends who had children seemed to be having a good time. There seemed to be more problems, more arguments, less free time and less money. We certainly didn't want any of that. But, there was also something sacred about bringing new life that we didn't feel worthy of.

Our circle of friends expanded when we joined a Marriage Encounter monthly sharing group. And it grew even more when we became part of St. Sabina Parish on Chicago's south side. These communities — our village — affirmed and nurtured us so that we found in ourselves a new definition of family. With the encouragement of our village we found the confidence to accept the gift of new life. When our first pregnancy ended in miscarriage, our village rallied around us with support and encouragement. Both our children entered the world with great celebration by our village. We continue to live our lives and raise our children in confidence, knowing that we aren't alone.

Among the worst enemies of marriage and family are the pervading senses of isolation and alienation. Too often a marriage's challenges are exacerbated by a couple's perception of being alone in their struggles. Families experiencing difficulties with transitions throughout the various stages of life too often become broken in despair because they feel alone in their plights.

Connections to a supportive community raise their perspective so they may see themselves in a workable situation, or that there is hope. They may better see that they are not alone in their struggles.

Our values, practices and rituals are formed not by individuals nor even individual families; they are formed in the community that raises us. As we face the challenges of marriage and family life, as we journey through the life cycle, we rely on the guidance, encouragement and support of social networks, i.e., our parish, extended family, friends, neighbors and social institutions.

We are blessed to have had so many wonderful people "imposing" on our lives. Through these relationships we have experienced newness of life in ourselves and with our children. We have come to see ourselves more wholly and more holy. The proverb, though perhaps overused, is so true. It really does take a village!

disABILITY Ministry Looks Ahead, Hosts Conference

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — At St. Gabriel Church, seven new electric doors allow easier access for disabled parishioners. Wireless headphone devices let those with hearing difficulties actively participate in Mass. Two parents can now watch their physically handicapped son receive the sacrament of the Eucharist for the first time.

For the parishioners of the Charlotte church who comprise the disABILITY ministry, episodes like these have become a staple of their work. The project was initiated in April 1995 to increase accessibility for every parishioner. Since then, the ministry team members have seen their efforts recognized not only in their parish, but at other churches in town and across the diocese.

"We've accomplished a lot," says Pat Shay, pastoral council liaison for the group. "The ministry has grown quite a bit as far as team membership. We also have been able to get two additional ministries started (in Charlotte), at St. John Neumann and St. Matthew."

Mary Kennedy, who tends to the administrative tasks of the group, says that the intent of disABILITY is not necessarily to establish a diocesan-wide ministry based at St. Gabriel Church. Rather, her team hopes to continue working with other churches in forming outreach groups at the parish level.

A key factor in that outreach endeavor is the 2nd Annual disABILITY Workshop Oct. 12 at St. Gabriel's Fellowship Hall. The event, conducted by Jack Green, executive director of the Schott Center for Persons Deaf or Disabled, provides an interactive means of assessing efforts of the past and developing plans for the future. By making it a diocesan workshop, disABILITY team members say the networking will allow greater opportunities to learn which areas need to be more intensively addressed within particular parishes.

"It's really good that other parishes from throughout the diocese will be attending," adds Kathy Tetu, chairman of the ministry team at St. Matthew. "Not only can we share what's going on here and in other parishes throughout the city; they can also share what they're doing. We can learn from them as well as teach them."

In an open letter to pastors in the diocese, ministry chairman Terry Utterback adds to that sentiment, saying that "we encourage each parish to send representatives to develop their own 'Action Plan' to assist those who face the everyday challenge of life with a disability."

Although the ministry has thus far focused on the needs of the physically disabled, team members hope to incorporate those with mental handicaps in their outreach mission as well. The workshop includes discussion of fostering such inclusion.

As executive director of the Schott Center in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., Green returns to Charlotte to facilitate his second consecutive workshop with more than 12 years of experience in establishing disability ministries throughout the country. Since his involvement with the Charlotte disABILITY team began last year, Green has helped the ministry assess their needs, strive for certain goals, and focus and expand their efforts so as to include as many people as possible.

The disABILITY team members attribute "word of mouth" and cooperation from parishioners as key factors in the success of the program thus far. "I think awareness amongst everybody — not only pastors — is a necessity," adds Tetu. She says it is of great importance that congregations keep themselves apprised of current needs and to remain focused on including the disabled.

Utterback looks forward to welcoming Green for a second visit, and is optimistic that disABILITY ministries across the diocese will continue to improve the opportunities for the disabled. "We realize the tremendous benefit of someone like Jack Green's leadership, presence and experience," he says. "He knows where we need to be based on where we are, and he can really help formulate a plan."

The 2nd Annual disABILITY Workshop is Oct. 12 at St. Gabriel Church Fellowship Hall in Charlotte from 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. Cost, which includes lunch, is $5. For information or to register, contact B.J. Dengler, (704) 362-5047, ext. 212 or Terry Utterback, (704) 364-8504.

Stewardship Profile

Using Our Gifts To Serve God

By MARK AND THEA SINCLAIR

God, our heavenly Father, has made a commitment of time, talent, and treasure to each of us. He has given these things to us. Now is the time to examine how we are utilizing these gifts.

When you think about it, time is our most precious asset: We have time because we have life. God has gifted us with life and asks that we utilize it wisely. There are 168 hours in a week. How we use that time says a great deal about our priorities. We spend about 126 hours each week working, sleeping, eating and driving. That leaves about 40 hours each week of discretionary time. Stewardship is about returning some of that time to God in thanksgiving for all He has given us.

An important aspect of stewardship is the sense of joy and fulfillment that we receive as a result of our stewardship of time. We set aside 30 minutes every morning for prayer. Some of our stewardship activities include lecturing, playing in a folk group and visiting and playing music at a local nursing home. We believe that stewardship involves scheduled, planned activities — it's not haphazard. We all have "disposable" time and our challenge is to think of creative ways to utilize the gift of time to serve God both in the parish and the community.

Likewise, God has given each of us talents and asks that we utilize them in His service. We share our talents with others in the church and community in the form of music ministry and as a catechist in faith formation. It has been satisfying to know that we are using the talents God has given us to help others praise Him and learn about Him.

With regard to stewardship of treasure, we were brought up to believe that we should give 10 percent of our money to the Church. We both have jobs and incomes and feel we have a strong responsibility to give a significant portion of our income to people less fortunate than ourselves. When it's time to pay the bills, we can honestly say that the first check we write is to St. Aloysius Church. Stewardship is about giving of our "first fruits," not the left-overs. The Lord comes first in the stewardship of our resources. We take what is left and we have never gone without the things we really need.

A final key point about stewardship: God will never be outdone in generosity. Our giving to God comes from our need to give thanks for God's blessings in our lives. By giving a significant portion of our time, talent and treasure back to God, we have learned a discipline that has helped us grow as disciples of our Lord.

Big Night

Film Offers Viewers A Cinematic Change Of Diet

NEW YORK (CNS) — Viewers are in for a treat. "Big Night" (Goldwyn) is a gourmet film compared to the diet of fast-food flicks in overabundance at cinemas currently.

The story tells of two Italian immigrant brothers struggling to make a go of their modest Jersey shore restaurant in the 1950s.

Brooding older brother Primo (Tony Shalhoub) cares only that they serve authentic Italian cuisine he cooks to perfection. The trouble is he cooks to fewer customers than the thriving but mediocre Italian eatery across the street run by wily businessman Pascal (Ian Holm). Nor can bashful Primo screw up the courage to ask the local florist, Ann (Allison Janney), for a date.

Primo's younger brother, Secondo (Stanley Tucci), is the pragmatic one, ambitiously pursuing the American dream and not one but two women, good-hearted Phyllis (Minnie Driver) and Pascal's mistress, Gabriella (Isabella Rossellini).

The brothers' Paradise restaurant is almost belly-up when friendly rival Pascal offers to invite musical celebrity Louis Prima to eat there. With all the attendant publicity, it would put the Paradise on the map — but the brothers would have to risk their last dime to put on such a lavish spread. They go for it.

During the course (and many courses) of the big night of the title, family, friendship and romance will flourish and wither in equal measure as the diners discover a paradise on earth.

Actor Tucci makes a smooth co-directorial debut with Campbell Scott, who also plays a crafty Caddy salesman in this big-hearted film.

Tucci also co-wrote the script with his cousin, Joseph Tropiano, and their affection for family and fine Italian food certainly shows.

As a relationship movie it rings true, observing in fine detail the brothers who are so different but bound by blood and respectful of that significance. It also explores the age-old conflict the brothers represent between going for the gold or staying true to one's art.

Each new course presented is a visual delight and similarly it is pleasurable to see the gradual unfolding of the story and the solid performances that bring the characters to life.

The closing scene, set the morning after the big night, is remarkable: It is virtually silent yet so much is said. We don't know where precisely the brothers will go from here, but we know exactly where they are coming from.

In the gourmet tradition of "Babette's Feast" and "Eat Drink Man Woman," viewers are warned not to attend "Big Night" on an empty stomach — at the risk of producing embarrassing drool.

With its richly textured narrative and insightful character study, "Big Night" deserves a big welcome on the big screen.

Due to an implied affair, sporadic rough language and minimal profanity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Videos

"Bottle Rocket" (1996)

Failed comedy in which a bungling thief (Owen C. Wilson) persuades his equally dense buddies (Luke Wilson and Stephen Dignan) to attempt an ill-fated armed robbery. Writer-director Wes Anderson's unrelentingly stupid characters are as tiresome as their penny-ante antics. Benign view of theft, some minor violence, implied sexual encounter, recurring profanity and some rough language.

"If Lucy Fell" (1996)

Vapid romantic comedy about two socially inept roommates (Sarah Jessica Parker and Eric Schaeffer) who have made a pact to kill themselves if they haven't found true love by age 30. Also written and directed by Schaeffer, the premise is embarrassingly dumb but the charmless characters are dumber still, with some crude humor making matters even worse. Sexual innuendo, vulgarity, profanity and rough language.

"Oliver and Company" (1988)

Disney animated musical updating Charles Dickens' "Oliver Twist" to New York, where an orphaned kitten named Oliver (voice of Joey Lawrence) gets caught up in the shenanigans of a human con artist (voice of Dom DeLuise) and his thieving band of rogue dogs, including the terrier Dodger (voice of Billy Joel). Directed by George Scribner, it's a children's movie that parents can enjoy, with just the right balance between pathos, action, comedy and music. Some cartoon menace.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences.

"Once Upon a Time ... When We Were Colored" (1996)

Growing up in rural Mississippi after World War II, a black youth is nourished by the love and support of an extended family and, despite all the injustices of a segregated society, never loses pride in his race or hope in the American dream of equality. Director Tim Reid gets fine performances from a seasoned cast (headed by Al Freeman Jr.) in depicting a closely knit black community taking care of its own in the face of social exclusion and economic exploitation just before the struggle for civil rights becomes a national issue in the 1960s. Racial tensions, some stylized violence and sexual references including a childbirth scene.

"Strange Bedfellows" (1964)

Thin but frantic romantic comedy in which a London-based oil executive (Rock Hudson) reconciles with his flighty estranged wife (Gina Lollobrigida) in order to get a promotion in his staid company, then she insists on playing Lady Godiva in a left-wing protest at the American Embassy. Directed by Melvin Frank, the sour comedy falls flat on all counts except for the scenes with Terry Thomas as an undertaker. Sexual situations and innuendo.

"Without Reservations" (1946)

Slight but amusing romantic comedy in which a novelist (Claudette Colbert) meets a Marine pilot (John Wayne) on a cross-country train journey, decides he'd be perfect as the hero in the movie version of her best-seller but hides her identity because he hated the book. Director Mervyn LeRoy gets the story off to a bright start but has trouble sustaining the contrived plot to its predictable conclusion, though the travelers' wacky misadventures provide laughs along the way and there are some droll jabs directed at Hollywood. Romantic situations.

Anna Paquin, Dana Delaney and Jeff Daniels star in "Fly Away Home," which the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting calls "a tribute to the creative spirit." The USCC classification is A-II — adults and adolescents, and the Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

The commitments of ordinary life

FAITH alive!

By Father W. Thomas Faucher
Catholic News Service

The priest, an old-before-his-time man suffering from alcoholism, was sent to teach philosophy in the seminary college. But there were rare moments of brilliance left in him, and one came in response to a question about how a person can know who he is:

"You are a combination of all the things you have committed yourself to and the effort you put into living out those commitments." He went on to show by example after example how baptism, family, love, dedication, marriage, good, bad, sin, evil, life and anything else fit into that definition.

To understand what commitment is, it helps to remember that it is of the human being's essence to change, to become different each moment, each day, each year. The ideal, the hope, is that this change will be improvement — growth rather than disintegration. But whether we are changing for the better or worse, we are changing.

Commitments are what enable us to change for the better.

We create our personalities by the choices we make about who we will be — choices revealed through our commitments — and by the effort we put into fulfilling those commitments.

There are many types of commitments.

There are commitments we choose to make. Our reputation in the eyes of others is established by living up to those commitments, or not living up to them.

People who go through the formalities of making commitments but don't mean them or don't live up to them are often people who have a low sense of their own worth.

And people who commit themselves to nothing are lost people. "I'm free, no ties, no commitments, no obligations" usually translates into "I'm very lonely and very unhappy."

The major commitments we are invited to make are those that define who we are, such as marriage, ordination, confirmation, parenthood or career.

Thus, when a person asks "Who am I?" the answer is "I am a Roman Catholic," "I am a parent," "I am a priest," "I am a teacher," etc.

If we change those commitments, it means a foundational change in who we are.

"This action is consistent with my commitments" or "That action is inconsistent with my commitments."

—A married person should not abuse his or her spouse. That is inconsistent with the commitment of matrimony.

Part of my commitment to be a priest is to grow more and more as a priest. I am required by that commitment to read, study, pray, consult, seek guidance and come to understand the description of a priest in church teaching and church law.

Sometimes that is easy, sometimes it is difficult. But that is what I agreed to when I accepted ordination.

The same is true when dealing with an aging parent, a spendthrift spouse or a rebellious child. The question to ask is: "What is my commitment here? How do I fulfill that commitment?"

If, habitually, we have lived by integrity, we will be able to recognize the right thing to do or not do.

Commitment is self-defining. It is the making of our personhood.

So commitment is a way we participate in God's continuing creation. Our ability to make commitments is among the most splendid and awesome of God's gifts to the human family.

Even the less fundamental commitments I make are self-defining — such as, "I am a Westerner, I am a writer." These aspects of my life could change without totally reversing things, but while I am committed to them, they tell me who I am right now.

We seek out certain commitments, such as marriage or ordination. Others are thrust upon us, such as who our parents and siblings are. In the latter instances, we must make a decision to accept the commitment of a relationship with these people and determine what that relationship will be. Most of the time it is fairly clear, such as the norm that adult children take care of aging parents.

The ability to fulfill a commitment comes from personal integrity. It is not always easy to live up to our commitments. When a difficult time comes and we are tempted not to fulfill a commitment, what enables us to make the right choice is integrity. This comes from knowing who we are due to the commitments we have made.

We develop integrity by habitually living up to our commitments. We don't rethink our commitments each day; we make them and then live them out.

When we are faced with a question about what to do in a particularly difficult situation, the answer could be, —An employee should not steal from the company. That is inconsistent with the trust in which an employee's commitment to a job is held.

—A student should not cheat on an exam. That is inconsistent with the commitment of being a student.

Commitments do not guide us to see what we should not do; they guide us to understand what we must do to

How did a loss or disappointment become your gain?

"We lost our son in a car accident June 9, 1993. In something so heartbreaking, it's difficult to find something good, but we've continued with a strong faith and a strong marriage.... We established a scholarship in our son's name.... We've also both experienced cancer.... We've come to realize as never before that our family and friends and our faith in God are the sustaining parts of our lives." — Ragan and Janell Nelson, Alexandria, La.

"I remember praying on the way to the hospital, 'If you must take my father, Lord, please don't let him suffer.' My father died very soon thereafter ... and somehow in realizing God had answered my prayer, although not the way I would have preferred, I realized it's God who's in control and that I can rest my faith in him." — Natalie Ghekiere, Chester, Mont.

"Fifteen years ago ... my husband died of cancer.... I was left without income or much insurance or a job. It became my faith community, neighborhood, ... friends and family who ... filled my life and the lives of my (four) children with kindness that helped me accept the difficulties." — Barbara Pawlak, Merrillville, Ind.

"When my father died, I moved in with my mother to take care of her, and I had to give up my ministry (as a residential child-care worker). But once I was here, the local pastor approached me with an opportunity for pastoral ministry. It turns out that what I had considered a deep loss ... has been transformed into a life-giving opportunity." — Sister Michele Fisher, CSFN, Hamburg, Pa.

Hal's story: the context of commitment

tumors, tests or other trials. Each time we've faced some new hurdle, we have been spared the worst.

We count our blessings like beads on some quiet rosary, prayed mostly by rote: his kidneys are fine, the tumors are small, his vision is good, the scan is clean, he rides a tricycle. Sorrowful! Joyful! Glorious!

Grace came unexpectedly when he was 10 months old, the diagnosis first

Among the prayers of a new parent is this secret plea: "Please God, do not test my faith by hurting this child. Do not test my commitment to a positive view of life, to joy, to faith — to you."

Parents often believe they can bear anything but the suffering or loss of a beloved son or daughter. Why? Perhaps because the commitment to a child becomes part of the parent's very identity. Some parents cannot even imagine life without this particular commitment.

How can faith survive when a child suffers?

My youngest child is not terminally ill, but he may one day be diagnosed with a rare neurological disorder whose most cruel form includes disfigurement, retardation and sometimes death.

At 3 he looks blessedly normal: sturdy legs, clear blue eyes and a shock of yellow hair. A casual observer will not notice three-inch scars left by two kidney surgeries before his first birthday. The many small aberrations on his optic nerves which may eventually be tumors are only visible on magnetic resonance imaging.

Despite frequent visits to many caring and able health professionals, our life is ordinary. Meals and carpool, lessons and gardening, prayers and soccer.

Living devours time so effectively that weeks pass without speaking of broached. After many nights of holding sleeping Hal with my husband's arms around us, both of us too heartsick to sleep, I suddenly felt flooded with comfort. I knew all would be well.

It is not God's will that any should suffer. What God wills is that we not be alone with suffering. That is God's commitment to us, kept faithfully.

I can see Mary holding her son and know that she understood from bitter experience a child's pain and the loss of a child.

"Know my suffering!" we cry out in pain. "I do," says the Lord.

In our neighborhood, parish, school and workplaces are people facing financial hardship, desiring children, fighting loneliness, caring for frail parents, struggling with truculent teens, hoping for renewal in marriage: These are ordinary problems; to maintain faith and happiness and a positive view of life despite them requires extraordinary commitment.

It is not an isolated, solitary decision to remain committed that accomplishes this, however. It is commitment in a context: the context of God's own commitment to be with us.

I could so easily cast faith aside. But somehow faith finds me. Perhaps in weariness I yield to faith, and something firm and lasting takes root.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

How can I find out what I'm committed to?

A possible approach is to examine what consumes my time or money, I suppose. But what if I find out I'm committed to TV viewing or eating, for example? That might startle me.

Maybe it would startle me right into some serious thinking—and personal renewal. One problem with a word like "commitment" is that it is a complex challenge.

—For some, commitment mainly conjures up the notion of duty. I am committed to the things I must do.

—For some, commitment and vocation are virtually synonymous. The emphasis is on becoming more fully the sort of person I have chosen to be (Catholic-Christian; husband; father; editor).

—For some, commitments are limits, boundaries. To be committed is to be clear—and courageous—about the directions I've chosen not to take in life.

—For some, commitments are openings, involvements. To be committed is to be clear—and engaged in—the direction I've chosen to take in life.

Naturally, an individual's notion of commitment could encompass more than one of these points of emphasis.

But what is worth recognizing is that my commitments tell a lot about me.

What are you committed to?

Commitment's blessings in disguise

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

It was not easy for Jairus to approach Jesus and publicly ask his help. Jairus was a man of standing, a synagogue official, and the religious establishment was openly hostile to this upstart Galilean peasant named Jesus.

But Jairus was first of all a distraught father whose daughter was critically ill. He would do anything to save her from death, even if it meant humiliating himself.

Jesus acceded to Jairus' request. Along the way to Jairus' house, Jesus cured a woman with a persistent and apparently incurable hemorrhage. Jairus' hopes soared, but precisely at this point news of his daughter's death reached him.

Hope evaporated.

Jesus, however, insisted that Jairus "just have faith" (Mark 5:36). Apparently Jairus did, and Jesus raised the little girl to life and vibrant health.

Bitter disappointment turned to inexpressible joy.

Jairus' commitment, tentative as it may have been, paid off richly.

It was similar for Mary Magdalen.

When she came to Jesus' tomb, "it was still dark" (John 20:1). Even if "the sun had risen" (Mark 16:2), it was still dark as far as Mary was concerned. The light had gone out of her life; Jesus lay buried.

She sought solace in being close to his remains, but even this was denied her. The tomb was inexplicably empty.

Mary Magdalen thought someone had played a cruel joke by stealing the body. She "stayed outside the tomb weeping" (John 20:11). Love does not give up on its commitment, even when all seems lost.

Her persistence was rewarded when Jesus, whom she took for the gardener, ignored her tearful questions and spoke her name: "Mary!" The agony of disappointment turned to ecstasy, and Jesus made known that a different, more wonderful, time was beginning.

A third scriptural story conveys a similar message—a message not only for biblical times but for ours. The dividends of commitment are great, though it may not immediately feel that way. Living in a committed way may exact a cost along the way.

The little community at Jerusalem was growing by leaps and bounds. The future looked bright. But persecution broke out, and Greek-speaking Jewish Christians were scattered abroad. It looked like the end of what had seemed so promising, but the disappointment was a blessing in disguise.

For the disciples' scattering became the occasion for spreading the good news to wider circles. At Antioch some of them "began to speak to the Greeks as well, proclaiming the Lord Jesus ... and a great number ... turned to the Lord."

It was "in Antioch that the disciples were first called Christians" (Acts 11:20-21, 26).

It can be darkest just before the dawn.

FAITH IN ACTION

"One of the hardest things for any of us to do today is to make a permanent commitment of any sort, especially when it pertains to love.... What is at the root of this?... Our incapacity to accept the limits of our own lives.... To choose one thing is always to renounce many others," writes Oblate Father Ronald Rolheiser in Against an Infinite Horizon, The Finger of God in Our Everyday Lives (Crossroad Publishing Co., 370 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017. 1996. Paperback, $14.95). But the renunciation commitment involves "has the potential to healthily ground us in reality," the author says.

Reflection: Father Rolheiser observes: "We all have had the experience of being within certain commitments (a marriage, a family, a church) where, at times, our heads and our hearts are not—but we are!... We remain there, held by something ... beyond what we can explain or feel. This is where faith lives, and this is what faith means."

He died Aug. 17 at St. Paul Hospital in Hsinchu Diocese, Taiwan, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand. ### Cardinal Bernardin Prays With Death-Row Inmate Before Execution

JOLIET, Ill. (CNS) — Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago prayed and talked with death-row inmate Raymond Lee Stewart Sept. 17, just hours before the convicted multiple murderer was executed at Stateville Correctional Center in Joliet. Stewart's lawyer, Joshua Sachs, said the condemned man had asked to see Cardinal Bernardin because he wanted to be with someone who was also facing death. The cardinal, who had surgery for pancreatic cancer last year, announced Aug. 30 that the cancer has recurred in his liver and he has less than a year to live. Advantages,

Advantages, Limitations Exist In Seminary Education

YONKERS, N.Y. (CNS) — Jesuit Father Avery Dulles, addressing a seminary audience, said seminaries had advantages over universities as places for theological study, but also limitations. "In the present situation one may hope for a more vital interaction between the two types of institution," he said. Father Dulles said seminaries relied on university theologians, interacting with other disciplines, to "address new and complex questions and to engage in creative research." But universities need seminaries to "maintain a deeper ecclesial sense and a firmer pastoral commitment," he said.

Speculation Increases About Mother Teresa's Successor

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa's ill health has increased speculation about her possible successor as head of the Missionaries of Charity. Mother Teresa has declared that she will not be a contender for the post. She expressed a similar wish before the last election, but agreed to stay on as head of the order after an appeal by Pope John Paul II. Sources who declined to be identified said Missionaries of Charity nuns still want Mother Teresa to head the congregation she founded in 1950 and has led ever since. The congregation's headquarters confirmed that the chapter and the election of a superior general, originally set for Oct. 7, will take place at year-end or early next year.

Bishops, Others Laud House Override Of Partial-Birth Abortion Veto

By MARK PATTISON
WASHINGTON (CNS) — Bishops and other pro-lifers praised the House vote to override President Clinton's veto of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act and called on the Senate to follow the House example.

"I am very pleased," said a statement from Cardinal Anthony J. Bevilacqua of Philadelphia. "This vote is a significant step toward replacing our culture of death with one which values life."

He expressed "my sincere appreciation to the legislators who supported the override effort" and urged senators "to follow the lead of their colleagues in the House and the will of the people and vote to ban this procedure which is so close to infanticide."

"I congratulate the House of Representatives for its moral and civic leadership today by voting to overturn President Clinton's veto," said a statement from Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston, chairman of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities.

"The practice of partial-birth abortion must stop if we are to be a civilized nation," the cardinal said. "No decent society can long endure lethal callousness toward any human beings, especially those who are very little or very sick."

The House override vote Sept. 19 was 285-137. A two-thirds majority is needed in each chamber to override the veto. The Senate override vote was expected to be held before Congress adjourns at the end of September.

The Senate approved the ban, 54-44, last December, well short of the two-thirds margin needed to override. The U.S. bishops launched a postcard campaign at Catholic churches nationwide over the summer to urge Senate and House members to override the veto.

The bill contains an exception to save the life of the mother. Clinton said he vetoed it because it lacked a provision that would have given exceptions for health reasons.

Bishop Edward J. O'Donnell of Lafayette, La., gave his congratulations to the House in a statement.

"In the House, Democrats joined with Republicans and a number of people who usually vote pro-choice voted instead for the override," he said.

"We pray that the Senate will follow the example of the House of Representatives in hearing the concerns of their constituents."

"The House has rejected aborting babies in the fifth month or later — most of them perfectly healthy — by pulling them feet-first alive from the womb, puncturing the skull, and removing their brains," said National Right to Life Committee federal legislative director Douglas Johnson in a statement that described the procedure.

"Few of the House's actions are as significant as this one," said a statement from Father Frank Pavone, national director of Priests for Life. "When the brutal killing of a baby is put forward as a 'medical procedure,' then it is time for the government to stop it."

Michael Ferguson, executive director of the Catholic Campaign for America, in lauding the override, said in a statement, "The hierarchy of the Catholic Church has been at the forefront of the campaign to educate American citizens about the medical facts of this heinous procedure, and their leadership has been unfailing."

Ferguson added, "Catholic Americans can be proud of the positive impact the Catholic Church has had on this pressing moral issue."

"Americans on both sides of the life debate have joined together to say that this cruel procedure goes too far," said a statement by Family Research Council president Gary Bauer.

Bauer added, "When the political elite use the bully pulpit to argue that life has no value unless it's healthy, planned and desired, society's weakest members become vulnerable."

Rep. Charles T. Canady, R-Fla., who sponsored the House version of the original bill, said in a statement, "A humane society has an obligation to stop this barbaric act which kills babies as they emerge from the womb. We have taken a critical step to stop this insanity and protect our children."

Dissenting was Kate Michelman, president of the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League.

Michelman, in a statement, derided the timing of the Sept. 19 vote — five months after Clinton's veto but six weeks before the election — and "the unprecedented intrusion by Congress into medical practice.... It is simply unacceptable for Congress to be practicing medicine."

Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston speaks at the U.S. Capitol Sept. 12 against a backdrop of boxes of postcards against the veto of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act, as Cardinal James A. Hickey of Washington applauds.

Faith Formation Office Introduces New Process For Catechist Certification

HICKORY — The Faith Formation Office has launched one of the most unique and radical programs in catechist certification. The Charlotte Catechist Recognition Process invites the community to call forth catechists and to endorse them to the pastor. After discussing candidates with his faith formation director, the pastor presents the catechists to the community. Energized by this public affirmation, the catechists then take part in a 12-hour formation program under the aegis of the Faith Formation Office consisting of five training modules: Skills and Theory, Scripture, Sacraments, Creed and Morality.

"The process is radically innovative," remarked Dr. Cris Villapando, diocesan director of Faith Formation, "because it consciously patterns itself after the catechumenate, incorporating elements such as 'a call by the community,' 'discernment,' 'presentation,' and 'commissioning.' It also symbolically places the pastor at the center of the catechetical ministry. In addition, it is competency-based. The catechist is expected to achieve the necessary competencies to midwife the faith."

"Fifty-two parish leaders endorsed this (program) with very strong consensus," said Dr. Villapando. "Bishop Curlin, Father Hawker, and Father West have been very supportive in allowing us to find a creative solution," he added.

Candidates Clinton, Dole Respond To USCC Questionnaire

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Responses to a U.S. Catholic Conference questionnaire by President Clinton and Bob Dole show sharp differences on abortion and immigration but also highlight some areas of agreement.

The responses from the Democratic and Republican candidates for president were mailed to the U.S. bishops Sept. 6 and made available to Catholic News Service the following week. Reform Party candidate Ross Perot did not respond to the USCC questionnaire.

In a memo to the bishops, Frank J. Monahan, director of the USCC Office of Government Liaison, said the answers were distributed "for possible use as voter education material during the remainder of this election campaign."

The USCC office asked the candidates 28 questions on 13 topics drawn from the bishops' 1995 statement, "Political Responsibility: Proclaiming the Gospel of Life, Protecting the Least Among Us, and Pursuing the Common Good."

The candidates were asked to respond to each question with "support,"

A billboard outside St. Aidan's Church in Williston Park, N.Y., urges passers-by to study the issues, register and vote.

"no position" or "oppose," and were allowed to include brief comments on each question.

Clinton and Dole gave opposite answers on three abortion-related questions, on a comprehensive nuclear test ban, on school choice that includes religious schools, and on several questions related to immigration.

The candidates agreed, however, in their support for civil rights, defense of human rights, environmental protection and capital punishment, and their opposition to laws that would permit assisted suicide.

In the opinion of the best medical authorities available, such absolutely irreversible impotence is increasingly rare today. Rehabilitative techniques and correction of some physical disorders that can cause impotence apparently are possible in the vast majority of cases.

When some such hope of reversal exists, the impotence is legally doubtful, the impediment therefore is not present and the couple have the right to marry.

Dealing with the fact that the prospective bride was previously married may or may not be so easy. Talk with a priest in your community, explain the circumstances and ask him to help you take the necessary steps.

A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about cremation and other funeral regulations and customs is available by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Questions should be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

public schools that had all the bells and whistles and experienced first-hand how hard it is to produce excellence in education.

"In Catholic schools we discuss Christian values and we can pray," says Cavallo, who sees a direct link between behavioral problems in the public schools and the inability to convey Christian values explicitly. She is convinced that the clarity of the commitment to teach Christian values gives Catholic schools a solid edge in education excellence. She works to foster a Christian family atmosphere.

"I want to make sure that this school is solidly centered on Christian values. That's not just a word we talk about," she insists, "but the way we live."

For Cavallo, the way of living at Asheville Catholic involves being "a place where the faculty is empowered to be the best they can be, where the parents are empowered to participate in this educational venture, and where the students are empowered to actually grow."

"They go through our system and do not learn how to pray," Bishop Ziemann continued. "I've seen too many graduates who don't pray. Teach them to pray."

Richard Martinez, principal at St. Michael School in Gastonia, felt "refreshed and alive" after taking part in Bishop Ziemann's "Emmaus Experience." "It brought absolute life to what we're doing as ministers in education. It set us on fire," Martinez said.

Capuchin Father Stephen Hoyt, chaplain at Charlotte Catholic High School, agreed. "Bishop Ziemann is able to energize educators and help them bring the Good News to students," he said. "He knows a lot about education, specifically Catholic Christian education, and he is able to convey that."

Bishop G. Patrick Ziemann was the guest speaker at the "Day of Reflection" for teachers and support staff Sept. 20

One Body: Sister Church Ministry Fosters Unity

KERNERSVILLE — After returning seven years ago to his native country of India, Father Thomas Selvaraj recently visited Holy Cross Church, where in 1989 he had spent several months as substitute pastor.

Father Selvaraj and Holy Cross pastor Father Thomas Fitzpatrick have established the Church to Church Ministry, through which Holy Cross became a sister parish to Father Selvaraj's church in India. Besides prayer and support, Holy Cross has sent some $14,000 to India thanks to a sponsorship-and-contribution program begun in 1989.

With the funding, Father Selvaraj has provided school uniforms, books and educational opportunities for 250 children and allowed four students to enroll in college.

Because the people of India depend on agriculture for survival and are at the mercy of the weather, Father Selvaraj is currently helping establish a hammock business and has taught as sewing, brick making and typing to provide alternative means of earning wages.

To ensure the continuation of such efforts, contributions are always needed. For information on sponsoring or making donations to the Church to Church Ministry, call Barbara Baretto, (910) 993-2019. Send tax-deductible donations to Holy Cross Catholic Church, 616 S. Cherry St., Kernersville, N.C. 27284. Make checks payable to Holy Cross, noting "Church to Church" in the memo.

Sisters Celebrate Anniversary Of Order

Twelve Sisters of the Society of the Holy Child Jesus are honored with a special service.

By STEVE UZZELL

MINT HILL — Some 150 friends and parishioners joined a dozen Sisters of the Society of the Holy Child Jesus Sept. 15 for a celebration at St. Luke Church. A commemorative Mass honored the order of sisters, which for 150 years has focused on education — teaching which often transcends the classroom.

"Education has taken on so many forms today that we're not always in the schools," said Sister Joan O'Neill, a visitor from Florida, who pointed out that instruction also includes such efforts as CCD, church history, and peace and justice. "It is a different type of education," she added, "but it is training the minds and hearts of the people."

Within the Diocese of Charlotte live two Sisters of the Society of the Holy Child Jesus. Sisters Veronica Grover and Jay McCann serve the parish of St. Luke, and Father Mulligan calls them "outstanding models" of courage. Sister Alma Cornelly, also a member of the Society who lived in Charlotte, passed away in 1995.

The Society of the Holy Child Jesus honors its founder, Cornelia Connelly, who devoted her life to teaching. She took an active role in the Church in 1846 by forming a community dedicated to educating English female converts. After Connelly's death in 1879, the society continued its apostolate of education. Today, sisters serve on four continents.

"Cornelia Connelly was a bold style of woman when 'bold' was not fashionable or encouraged," said Father Joseph Mulligan, pastor of St. Luke Church. "These women have also stepped forward and shown a source of great power by their boldness."

The commemorative Mass began with a procession of Father Mulligan and the sisters, who were led to honorary seats and assisted at the Mass as lectors and Eucharistic ministers. Bagpipe music accompanied the entrance.

Sister Mary Urban Houghton, from Florida, enjoyed Father Mulligan's comments on the courage of the women in the order. "Leaving home was the boldest thing I ever did," she said. "I was the first one to leave. After that, I did whatever God told me to do."

The Charlotte ceremony was one of many that the Sisters of the Society of the Holy Child Jesus have observed during their 150th Jubilee celebration, which began in October 1995. In addition to commemorations in its American headquarters city, Rosemount, Penn., the Society has held observances throughout the nation. More than a half-dozen countries worldwide are celebrating the order's anniversary as well.

Following the Sept. 15 Mass, the celebration continued with dancing, music and a banquet. The "Rince Na'Heireann" Charlotte Irish Dancers team entertained the crowd, and singer-songwriter Thomas Rorie, along with musician Randy Jenkins, performed a self-penned tune which thanked the women for their "one call, many voices — all over the world."

Election Rhetoric Asks Wrong Question, Says Charities Head

CLEVELAND (CNS) — The election-year question that asks "Are you better off than you were four years ago?" emphasizes selfish interests and speaks poorly of national priorities, the president of Catholic Charities USA said in a Cleveland speech. "The answer is, 'Wrong question,'" said Jesuit Father Fred Kammer in a Sept. 20 address to the City Club. "The appropriate question is, 'How are we doing as a people, as a nation?' Too much of our politics is a rank appeal to our selfishness." Father Kammer's speech to the civic group preceded the annual meeting of Catholic Charities USA held in Cleveland Sept. 20-23.

Lay Spirituality Is Key Issue In Catholic Schools, Says Survey

DAYTON, Ohio (CNS) — In an age when fewer brothers, priests and nuns are teaching in parochial school classrooms, Catholic school superintendents around the country say their top concern is preparing an almost exclusive lay staff to be strong spiritual leaders. That's the major result from a national survey conducted for the University of Dayton's Center for Catholic Education. Finding qualified applicants for center-city schools was also on the educators' list of concerns. Superintendents listed technology training, strategic planning, marketing and fund raising as other top priorities.

Oklahoma City Archdiocese Sells All Of Its Disney Stock

OKLAHOMA CITY (CNS) — The Archdiocese of Oklahoma City has sold all of its stock in the Walt Disney Corp., citing the movie "Priest" and a fantasy wedding pavilion at the Walt Disney World theme park as its prime objections. Disney stock closed at $61.125 on the New York Stock Exchange on Sept. 17, when the archdiocese sold its 3,400 shares. Father Edward J. Weisenburger, vicar general for the archdiocese, told Catholic News Service Sept. 18 that the approximately $200,000 the archdiocese received from the sale would be "reinvested in other, appropriate funds."

Ohio Bishops Say Riverboat Casinos Not In Citizens' Best Interest

zens of our state," Ohio's Catholic bishops said in a statement Sept. 16. The bishops did not directly condemn riverboat gambling, but urged voters to consider the issue from economic and ethical perspectives. Citizens will vote on the amendment, "State Issue 1," in the general election Nov. 5, unless a petition challenge to block it succeeds.

Bishop Urges Unification Of Catholic Church In China

HONG KONG (CNS) — A clandestinely ordained Catholic bishop has circulated a letter urging unification of the "open" and "underground" churches, but both sides see major obstacles. Bishop Andrew Han Jingtao told a Catholic source that he had sent a letter to the bishops in the underground and the government-approved, or open, churches calling for unification. Bishop Han spoke with the source Aug. 15 in Changchun, capital of Jilin province. His remarks were reported Sept. 18 by UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand. In a letter May 26, Pentecost Sunday, Bishop Han urged all bishops in China not to review rights and wrongs but to act "to be one flock with one shepherd."

Cardinal Hume Calls Celibacy Valuable, Despite Losing Priests

LONDON (CNS) — Although the Roman Catholic Church has lost some potentially excellent priests because of mandatory celibacy, the discipline has value and should be preserved, said Cardinal George Basil Hume of Westminster. "I believe celibacy is the right answer for the church," the primate of England told The Daily Telegraph in a Sept. 18 interview distributed by the bishops' Catholic Media Office. "It brings important value, and in a society which is preoccupied by sex, it serves as a fine witness to love. It is a value we have to preserve," the cardinal told the London daily newspaper

Somalia Disasters Of Biblical Proportions, Says Official

MOGADISHU, Somalia (CNS) — People of the Jubba Valley are experiencing disasters of biblical proportions, said Msgr. George Bertin, apostolic administrator of the Diocese of Mogadishu. It began with two years of drought. Then in May, heavy rains in Ethiopia caused the Jubba and Shabeelle rivers to flood, drowning what few parched crops remained. According to Msgr. Bertin, renewed fighting among warlords has meant killing and looting. Food has become scarce, and some children have starved. In six weeks in late summer, more than 9,000 hungry people fled the port of Kismayu and went toward Kenya.

Court Rules Against Ordering Treatment For Pregnant Woman

OTTAWA (CNS) — The Manitoba Court of Appeal has ruled courts do not have the authority to order a pregnant woman to undergo medical treatment, even if it is necessary to protect the fetus. The appellate court overturned a lower court's decision from August that ordered a 22-year-old, solvent-sniffing addict from Winnipeg to undergo treatment for her addiction.

Vatican Prepares Document On World Hunger, Urges Greater Charity

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican will publish a major document on hunger this fall, just in time for a World Food Summit. Vatican officials said Sept. 20 that the lengthy document, several years in preparation, will be unveiled in late October. The U.N.-sponsored food summit is slated for mid-November in Rome.

Our Lady Of The Annunciation Church

ALBEMARLE — The dedication of Our Lady of the Annunciation Church took place in 1934 with nine Catholic families composing the congregation. However, the first Catholic residents in the area arrived back in 1887, when the Ewing family relocated to Albemarle from Richmond, Va.

Visiting priests sporadically celebrated Mass in the area, or families traveled by train to Salisbury for Sunday services. That changed in 1934, when Father James Cowan, originally from New York, worked to establish a church in the South. Father Cowan celebrated Mass in the living room of the rectory until a gift from Our Lady of the Annunciation parish in New York made construction of a church building possible.

The new structure was dedicated on Sept. 4, 1934.

By the mid-1940s, 35 families made up the parish family, and the textile industry began to yield an even larger Catholic population in the area. A rectory was built in 1941, and Our Lady of the Annunciation began to experience its first significant growth. By the time of the parish's 25th anniversary in 1959, some 75 families called the Albemarle church their spiritual home.

Sustained needs for additional space marked the following years. The congregation saw a parish hall constructed in 1966 to provide room for their religious education classes and social events. Father Anthony Kovacic, a native of Bijelsko, Yugoslavia, presided as parish administrator at the time — Father Cowan passed away that year — and became pastor in January 1969.

After the 1967 dedication of the hall, Father Kovacic turned attentions to building a new church, as the parish community grew to more than 100 families by decade's end. A sizable donation from the estate of Father Cowan and his mother led to the construction of a new facility, and on July 31, 1971, Bishop Vincent Waters said the first Mass at the new, 380-seat Our Lady of the Annunciation Church. Msgr. Michael J. Begley, soon to become the Charlotte Diocese's founding bishop, preached the homily.

Several diocesan priests have served the parish since Father Kovacic was appointed pastor to a Charlotte parish in 1973. During this time, the parish enhanced its participation in a number of community and ecclesial projects, such as Meals on Wheels, campus ministry, charismatic prayer and youth ministry.

On March 25, 1984, Our Lady of the Annunciation parish gathered to celebrate its Golden Jubilee Liturgy. Fathers Kovacic, Joseph Kelleher and Carl T. Del Guidice — all pastors of the Albemarle church at different points — joined Bishop Begley in celebrating the Mass for the more than 200 families who were then registered at the parish.

In May 1990, Bishop Begley dedicated a newly built Family Life Center to mark the continued physical expansion in the parish. Spiritual growth goes on as well, and many remain active in a host of ministries and community efforts. In addition to an ongoing youth ministry and participation in Meals on Wheels, parishioners give of their time to other projects, including a program for the elderly called OASIS, Knights of Columbus, pregnancy crisis outreach, and a morning prayer group which meets daily for rosary recitation and devotions. The church also has gone beyond parish boundaries by establishing Our Lady of the Americas in Biscoe as a mission.

The parish population of Our Lady of the Annunciation Church now consists of more than 250 families. The parish is one of the largest in the Albemarle Vicariate, and by its active stance in church and civic life, it makes a strong statement of devotion in this Stanly County town.

Crusade Draws More Than 1,000 To Altar Calls

By JIMMY ROSTAR

CHARLOTTE — Some 336,100 people came in faith to Ericsson Stadium during the Carolinas Billy Graham Crusade Sept. 26-29. Of those, more than 22,000 made commitments of rededication — more frequently referred to as altar calls. The group included an excess of 1,000 who expressed interest in taking their spiritual journey by way of the Catholic Church.

For Graham, a native of the Charlotte area, the event was a homecoming. For the more than 1,000 people indicating an interest in Catholicism, it was a spiritual return as well.

"The real work begins now," says Bishop William G. Curlin of the Diocese of Charlotte. "The real work is trying to help these people deepen their faith in Jesus and live a Christian life." Commitment sheets were being processed by diocesan staff mid-week following Billy Graham's fourth Charlotte Crusade since 1947.

Bishop Curlin, who endorsed the Crusade and attended several of the prayer services, calls Graham "a man of extraordinary faith in Jesus." The bishop's respect for the evangelist and his message echoes a maturing relationship between Graham and Catholics, which did not exist 30 years ago.

"I've been told that there's never been such a unity of churches in Charlotte in history as there has been for this Crusade," said Graham to an applauding audience Sunday evening.

The Graham — and Catholic — approach to ecumenical ministry during the past three decades has nurtured the

Bishop Responds:

U.S. Senate Fails To Override Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Veto

The Most Reverend William G. Curlin, bishop of the 46-county Diocese of Charlotte issued the following statement in response to the senate vote on the partial-birth abortion veto:

I am gravely disappointed by the action of some members of the U.S. Senate in their bold defense of the partial-birth abortion act. These elected officials have turned their backs upon humanity, ignored the voices of their constituency, and proceeded to endorse the most inhumane procedure of our generation.

Tragically, some senators and representatives have been falsely led to believe that partial-birth abortion is necessary to preserve a woman's life. Yet, this flies in the face of reality. Obstetricians, gynecologists and perinatologists are emphatic in their denunciation of the partial-birth abortion by stating this procedure is never necessary to save a woman's life, health or fertility. Former Surgeon General Dr. C. Everett Koop has stated publicly that this procedure is never medically necessary and charitably suggested that President Clinton was misinformed by his medical advisors. As leaders in the field of medicine have testified, such a horrendous procedure poses its own risk to a woman's health and fertility.

I plead with all women and men who seek to defend the sanctity of life, to raise their voices in protest against this action. Seventy one percent of Americans say they oppose partial-birth abortions, including 65 percent of those who call themselves pro-choice. Regrettably, 41 senators did not take this into account. We deserve better representation than this.

The issue of partial-birth abortion is of such weight that people should keep this in mind when they choose their representatives. We cannot and dare not let our country continue on a path of ever-increasing disregard for the sanctity of life.

The partial-birth abortion act is infanticide. It is time for us to speak up in defense of the truth.

Answering The Call:

Bishops Urge Political Responsibility

This is last of three articles about the Catholic obligation to political responsibility. The articles revolve around materials written by the American bishops and issued through the United States Catholic Conference. The current materials are titled, "Political Responsibility: Proclaiming the Gospel of Life, Protecting the Least Among Us, and Pursuing the Common Good." These materials were made available to every parish in the diocese through Catholic Social Services Office of Justice and Peace.

By MARY COYNE WESSLING

It is the role of Christian communities to analyze the situation in their own country, to reflect upon the meaning of the Gospel, and to draw norms of judgment and plans of action from the teaching of the Church and their own experience.

These words are from Pope Paul VI's document A Call to Action. The American bishops use it and other Church documents as the foundation of their call to Catholics to get involved in the governing process.

Their approach is far from subtle. Nor is it a mere request. The American bishops have, for the past 20 years, issued a rallying cry to fellow Americans to effect the changes in their communities. They refer to this as an obligation to political responsibility. For some that may mean a trip to the voting booth every few years. But the bishops call us to much more.

"People have to be committed to learning about the issues. They have to be willing to study and debate the substantive issues of the day," said Ron Krietemeyer, director for the Office of Social Justice in the Archdiocese of St. Paul-Minneapolis.

Learning the ins and outs of complex issues is not easy. But Krietemeyer believes the more Catholics expose themselves to the issues and institutions affected by them, the more they will understand them.

Jesuit Father Eugene McCreesh, a community activist in Charlotte, said studying issues is not enough.

"There are five types of conversion we are called to: God, prayer, community, working for the poor, and justice. The last, justice, is the most difficult because it is calling us to be countercultural," he said. "If we are people committed to justice we must first go through the teachings of the Church. We must know them, study them and take them to heart."

Armed with an understanding of Church teachings sheds light on where people of faith are called to stand. But Catholics should not judge issues with a sense of moral superiority, warns Krietemeyer. They are still obligated to get the facts.

"Being a religious-based organization does not exempt us from being competent with the facts," he said.

Once armed with this competency, Krietemeyer says the next step is getting involved in advocacy groups that deal with these issues. He suggests starting on the local level where people have greater influence in causing changes.

"One pastor told me he would like to see each member of his parish become an active participant in some community effort," said Krietemeyer. "Everyone ought to be involved in the public arena. I'm not talking about charity. We Catholics are good about doing charitable works. I am talking about getting involved in activities that effect change in the structure of our community. We should have as many volunteers working to change what's wrong with the structure as we have volunteers doing charity work."

Krietemeyer said community activism takes an individual beyond his own self interests and into a realm of building a better community for all people. It is an attitude, he said, that parents need to instill in their children, pastors need to emphasize for their parishioners, and Catholics need to remain faithful to throughout their lives.

Krietemeyer also recommends Catholics get involved in the political process. "They should seriously consider running for office, working for a candidate or party. If they are concerned about the shallowness and hassles apparent in politics today, they should do something to make it better. I say, 'Don't agonize. Organize.' A lot of people whine about the dirty game of politics but few do what it takes to clean it up."

Rather than condemn the ills of politics, the bishops urge Catholics to embrace the process as a tool for effective and righteous change. They write: "As religious leaders and pastors, our intention is to reflect our concern that politics receive its rightful importance and attention and that it become an effective forum for the achievement of common good."

Charlotte Catholic Schools Help in Hurricane Relief

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — As the ill effects of Hurricane Fran are still being felt in the Diocese of Raleigh, children and youth of Charlotte's Catholic schools came together in service to aid the storm's victims by helping to collect close to 4,000 non-perishable food and household items.

Joe Marinello, president of the diocesan school board and co-manager of the Dilworth Harris Teeter on East Boulevard, came to Diocese of Charlotte Schools Superintendent Dr. Michael Skube with the idea of the schools' getting involved in the Harris Teeter food drive. Harris Teeter stores began the two-week drive Sept. 13, and the schools began their collection shortly after.

Although some of the children are too young to remember the destruction Hurricane Hugo caused in Charlotte in 1989, they were aware of the needs of people faced with disaster now. "There were some bottles of water in my garage," explained Sydney Humbert, a first-grader at St. Gabriel School, "and my mom and me brought 'em to school,

'cause the people were thirsty."

While Mecklenburg County Harris Teeters had already set up displays in the stores, Marinello said that MACS' participation helped the project far exceed expectations. Students brought the items to their respective schools — Charlotte Catholic High School, Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School, St. Ann, St. Gabriel, All Saints, St. Patrick, and Our Lady of the Assumption — which later turned the food over to the store nearest to the parishes. Working in conjunction with Metrolina Food Bank to give the food to the Raleigh Diocese, Harris Teeter assisted in the storage and transport of the goods after the drive had ended.

Marinello, who called their enthusiasm for the project "awe inspiring," said the students seized the chance assist others. "Giving is an act of love," he said, "and I think that's a lesson these children learned, when they had the opportunity to give to someone else."

The Wedding Feast

"The kingdom of heaven may be likened to a king who gave a wedding feast for his son. (Mt 22:2) ... When the king came in to meet the guests he saw a man there not dressed in a wedding garment. He said to him, 'My friend, how is it that you came in here without a wedding garment?' But he was reduced to silence. Then the king said to his attendants, 'Bind his hands and feet and cast him into the darkness outside....' Many are invited, but few are chosen." (Mt 22:11-14)

October 4, 1996

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ:

The Holy Father is frequently recognized as the "greatest voice for truth in today's society." This is especially evident in Pope John Paul's strong defense of the sanctity of human life.

In Evangelium Vitae, The Gospel of Life, the Holy Father states: "To all members of the Church, the people of life and for life, I make this most urgent appeal that we may offer this world of ours new signs of hope and work to ensure that justice and solidarity will increase and that a new culture of human life will be affirmed for the building of an authentic civilization of truth and love."

Daily we are reminded of the loss of respect for human life. Crime, family violence and an erosion of morals leave little doubt that the world is not always a safe harbor. The recent acceptance by some elected officials of the Partial Birth Procedure remains a frightening indictment of their leadership. You and I must work to prevent these assaults on the sanctity of life from becoming accepted values. We must become beacons of hope and light. We must say that there is a better way to deal with problems in today's society. Modern men and women must strive to hear the true message of Jesus.

A woman experiencing an unplanned pregnancy deserves the message of Christ's love, not the "quick fix" offered by an abortionist. The terminally ill person needs to feel the comforting hand of Christ through our loving touch and not the hand of the Doctor of Death.

Rather than adopt a view that sees the teachings of the Church as restrictive, let us defend the moral leadership of the Church that promotes authentic freedom. During every Sunday Mass we profess our belief in everlasting life. The attacks on our belief demand a response in defense of the sanctity of life.

I invite you to join with me in returning to a holy tradition of refraining from eating meat on all Fridays of the year. (Today we observe this holy custom on Ash Wednesday and all Fridays during Lent.) We are mindful of the Lord's promise that more is accomplished through prayer and penance than this world dreams possible. May this personal penance be a strong source of grace in our defense of human life.

Begging God to bless you for all that you do on behalf of the sanctity of life, I am as always,

Prayerfully in the Lord,

Most Rev. William G. Curlin

Pro-Life Effort To End Partial-Birth Abortions To Continue

By NANCY FRAZIER O'BRIEN

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The effort to end partial-birth abortions is not dead, church and pro-life leaders agreed after the U.S. Senate failed to override President Clinton's veto of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act.

As Cardinal Anthony J. Bevilacqua of Philadelphia and other religious leaders prayed in the Senate gallery Sept. 26, the Senate voted 57-41 to override the veto. That was nine votes short of the two-thirds majority needed.

"Contrary to what pro-abortion forces may believe, we are not discouraged or disheartened by what happened today," said Father Frank Pavone, national director of Priests for Life, in a Sept. 26 statement.

"It is not a black day for the pro-life movement," he added. "Indeed it is a day of victory. For we have never been as galvanized, as unified, and as energized as we are at this moment."

A week before the Senate vote, the House of Representatives had voted to override the veto, 285-137.

The legislation vetoed by Clinton in April would have banned a procedure used in late-term abortions in which the unborn child is partially delivered before surgical scissors are stabbed into the base of the infant's head. The child's brain is then removed by suction, allowing for easier delivery of the rest of the body.

"No nation, no civilization that abandons its moral foundations by legally destroying its own children through such a barbaric procedure can possibly survive," said Cardinal Bevilacqua after the Senate vote.

The cardinal and other Catholics joined Protestant and Jewish leaders in a prayer breakfast on Capitol Hill before the Senate vote.

When it became clear that there were not enough votes to override the veto, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi changed his "yes" vote to "no" so that he would be able, under Senate rules, to bring the issue to a vote again before adjournment.

Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston, chairman of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities, pledged that the bishops would "intensify our educational efforts until there is no one left in this nation who does not know what a partial-birth abortion is and why it ought never to be allowed in any humane society."

Cardinal James A. Hickey of Washington noted in a statement that the three House members and two senators who represent parts of Maryland that are in his archdiocese had voted against the veto override.

"They ignored clear evidence from the medical community that this brutal procedure has no medical purpose whatsoever. They also ignored the will of hundreds of thousands of their constituents," Cardinal Hickey said. "Thoughtful citizens should keep this in mind as they ponder their choices on election day."

Rep. Charles T. Canady, the Florida Republican who was chief sponsor of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act, said he would reintroduce the legislation next year in the 105th Congress.

"With the groundwork that has been laid, I am hopeful that we will be able to pass this legislation next year and put a stop to the atrocity of partial-birth abortion once and for all," he said. The day before the vote, Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York joined in a telephone conference call with Republican vice-presidential candidate Jack Kemp and others to drum up support for the override.

In a sermon during Sunday Mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral Sept. 29, Cardinal O'Connor criticized Catholic members of Congress who voted against the veto override.

The cardinal said they "either do not understand our teachings or fail to accept them. We pray for their souls. We pray they will be enlightened."

"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," he added.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Expresses Gratitude For French Catholics' Faithful Witness

Dear brothers and sisters,

Having just completed my sixth pastoral visit to France, I wish to thank Divine Providence for enabling me to travel the roads of that country's past and present history. A particular word of appreciation goes to all those who made my pilgrimage possible, especially the bishops and the president of the republic and other civil authorities. I am deeply grateful to the Catholics of France who, by their presence, fervent prayer and countless gestures of solidarity, bore unmistakable witness to their faith and to their communion with the successor of Peter.

The Christian roots of France date back to the second century, and my visit coincided with the inauguration of a year dedicated to St. Martin of Tours, on the 1,600th anniversary of his death. My visit also commemorated the baptism of Clovis, king of the Franks. In fact, the central theme of my visit was the mystery of baptism, the sacrament of new life which initiates us into the faith and calls us to commit ourselves to the task of proclaiming the Gospel in every circumstance of our daily lives. The whole church has benefited from the more than 1,500 years of Christianity in France. Let us thank the Lord for the example of St. Martin and for the baptism of Clovis, and may each one of us respond ever more fully to the grace which we have received in this sacrament.

I am pleased to greet the new students of the Pontifical Beda College who have come to Rome to begin their formation for the priesthood. Upon all the English-speaking pilgrims, especially those from England, Scotland, Denmark, Sweden, Belarus, Australia, Singapore, Indonesia, Malaysia, Japan, Canada and the United States, I invoke the grace and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Pope's Schedule Cleared For Appendectomy

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II cleared his schedule during the second week in October for an expected appendectomy.

The Vatican said all official papal activities were suspended as of Oct. 7. The 76-year-old pontiff was expected to lead a beatification ceremony at the Vatican Oct. 6 before checking into Rome's Gemelli Hospital for the surgery.

Papal doctors said in September that the pope's recent bouts with fever and nausea were provoked by a periodically inflamed appendix. They recommended it be removed, and the pope agreed.

The Vatican has not said how long a recovery period is expected. The pope had no major events planned at the Vatican until early November, but the surgery will cause him to cancel or postpone a number of private meetings, "ad limina" visits and group talks for at least several days.

The pope, speaking to visitors at his summer residence in Castel Gandolfo Sept. 29, looked and sounded tired. A Vatican spokesman has said the pope is also suffering from nervous system disturbances.

At the Gemelli Hospital, the pope's 10th-floor suite of rooms was reportedly being prepared. The complex includes a chapel, a sitting room, a small kitchen and a place for a few aides to work.

It will be his seventh stay in the hospital since his election in 1978.

Vocations Update

Father Frank O'Rourke

Vocations and College: Opportunities Do Exist

Greetings and peace!

If you are a junior or senior in high school or are currently enrolled in college, I hope you will give careful consideration to exploring the possibility of your being called to priesthood.

College seminaries today allow young men to explore a vocation to priesthood in an environment which offers opportunities for personal development and growth. Within the group of 22 seminarians of the Diocese of Charlotte this year, we are blessed with three college-age men preparing for priesthood.

Matthew Ritter is completing his final year at Belmont Abbey College. Also, Brandon Schmitz and Matthew Buettner, seminarians at St. Charles Borromeo Seminary in Wynnewood, Pa., have begun their journey to priesthood in their studies at the seminary's college division. The three men say that they feel a strong desire to serve, especially in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Numerous requests for information by young men of college age — along with current vocational literature — speaks of a renewed interest in beginning studies for priesthood during college years. I appeal to high school juniors and seniors and those already in college who hear a call to priesthood to recognize that vocational opportunities do exist in college settings.

I welcome your inquiries and will keep you informed in this column of "Come and See" weekends, which are especially tailored to provide college-age men with an introductory experience of seminary life.

uled for this year include: Oct. 12-14, Nov. 23-25, and Dec. 14-16 at St. Meinrad Seminary in Indiana; Dec. 6-8 at St. Charles Seminary's college division in Wynnewood, Pa.; and Nov. 7-10 at Pontifical College Josephinum in Columbus, Ohio. A Palm Sunday weekend (March 21-23) session is planned at St. Joseph Seminary in St. Benedict, La., next year, although weekends in late October and mid-November are also possibilities.

The Church is in great need of generous men to offer their lives in service as priests. Please look within your families and church communities for young men who you believe possess these special gifts. Encourage them to contact the priest in their parish, community or school. I am also always available to meet with young people who are in the process of discerning their future.

Father Frank O'Rourke, pastor of Holy Family Church in Clemmons, is the director of vocations for the Diocese of Charlotte. For more information on vocations, contact him at P.O. Box 130, Clemmons, N.C. 27012, (910) 766-1882.

St. Thérèse: Making Sanctity Real

The first of October marks the start of a year-long centennial celebration of St. Thérèse of Lisieux. It's a good reason to rediscover the reason for Thérèse's meteoric rise to fame which Pius XI called a "hurricane of glory."

The larger world was introduced to this Carmelite nun through her own words. I encourage you to read her autobiography, "The Story of A Soul," published just one year after her death at the age of 24.

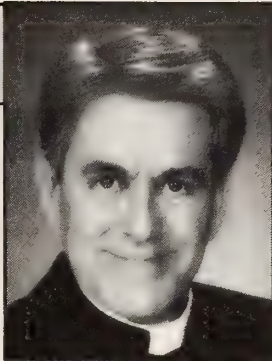

Benedict XV found in her writings "the secret of sanctity for the entire world." Her style is sentimental by today's standards. But her intimate candor in articulating her "Little Way" of approaching God through life's most ordinary moments makes the memoirs compelling. Thérèse was a woman in search of authenticity. And in the realm of the everyday she triumphed.

Her revelations even caught the cinematic eye of French director Alan Cavalier. His controversial film "Thérèse" captured several international film awards as well as Time Magazine's list of top ten films of 1986. What attracted Cavalier and so many others to this young French nun's life over the last century was her realness, her enthusiastic belief in the love of Jesus as the centerpiece of her wholeness.

"My vocation is love," she wrote. Perhaps this is what makes her so lovable.

Sister Thérèse of the Child Jesus could also improvise on the spirit of the Holy Rule of the Carmelites in deliberate acts of individuality that still engage us. She embroidered a cattail in scarlet in the center of her white pinafore. It was a symbol of ointment made from the marsh plant that was used to dress soldiers' wounds. She wrote a drama about Joan of Arc for her community, then covered her brown habit with full costume complete with wig and played the lead.

Thérèse's tuberculosis in the last years of her life caused physical suffering even as she wrestled to preserve faith in the face of doubt. The bouquet of roses piously associated with her may seem almost thornless. Not when you read Thérèse's last letter to her sister, Marie Martin:

"Did not Jesus cry out, 'Father remove this chalice from me?' Are you not ready to suffer all that God wills? Assuredly! And so, if you want to know joy and to love suffering, you are really seeking your own consolation, because once we love, all suffering disappears!"

It has been rumored among ecclesiastical circles that Pope John Paul II will name Thérèse a "Doctor of the Church," a title given to certain writers on account of the great advantage the Church has gained from their doctrine. Only two other women, St. Teresa of Avila and St. Catherine of Siena have been named Doctors because of the influence of their spiritual teaching. Yet the rumor is tantalizing. If Thérèse were to join them, the writings of other great women of the Church might receive the careful examination they richly deserve.

With or without the title, what could be more real than a life so consumed with loving God that she embraced His children — not only her beloved family and Sisters and those of her lifetime, but of time to come? With total trust in God, she could proclaim, "I will spend my heaven in doing good on earth."

Promising To Baptize A Child Catholic

Q. One of our sons, when he was married to a non-Catholic, said in the papers he signed that he would continue his Catholic faith, and would do everything he could to raise his children Catholic also.

A few years ago, however, he joined another church, the Methodists, with his wife. Recently their child, our grandson, was baptized in their church.

Our priest has been a great help in many ways, but we haven't received a solid answer to one matter that concerns us. According to Catholic teaching, is our grandchild really baptized? Can you explain, and give us something we can tell our son and our other children?

A. In a word, the answer is yes. The Catholic Church clearly recognizes the validity of baptisms in many other Christian churches.

There's nothing brand new about this. Thirty years ago, Vatican Council II referred to baptism as one of the sacramental bonds that link us with other Christian churches."

In one place, the council says, "the Christian way of life of these (Protestant) brethren is nourished by faith in Christ. It is strengthened by the grace of baptism and the hearing of God's word." (Decree on Ecumenism, n. 2)

About 20 years before that the church explicitly mentioned Lutherans, Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists and Disciples of Christ as among those who should not be baptized again if they convert to the Catholic faith.

The reason is that there is no reason to doubt the validity of the baptism they received in the church they belonged to previously.

As you imply the promise or affirmation made when your son was married added nothing to the responsibilities any believing and committed Catholic has as she or he enters marriage.

Those who take their religious commitments seriously (and for Catholics this would include their beliefs concerning the church, the Eucharist, the sacraments, etc.) have a serious responsibility to do everything they can for their own faith, and to provide their children an opportunity for that same relationship with God.

Sometimes, however, even the best efforts and intentions do not work out, and it's impossible for us to get into anyone else's conscience to know their relationship to God in these matters.

This is why the affirmation made by a Catholic before an interfaith marriage is worded as you stated: He or she will do everything within their power to share their Catholic faith with their children, and hold onto it themselves.

Your son's experience is one more evidence of how seriously couples should take their religious convictions at the time of marriage.

One of the primary purposes of the church's requirements before marriage is to bring the couple to a serious dialog about how they will keep and respect their own and each other's consciences in their religious lives.

Love the Daughter, Not Her Lifestyle

A few days ago a letter came to me in response to my radio ministry:

"Bless you for all your help to us. I am so lost, confused, hurt and in need of guidance. I found out my daughter is a lesbian. She has a beautiful little child whom I love deeply, though she has never been married. She is living with a woman. I tried to talk to her about her sin but she refused to listen. I cannot and will not accept this sin from her. When I talk to them we end up fighting. I get very angry when she tells me she will raise this child outside the Church. She feels there isn't anything wrong with her life. Am I wrong? Should I accept the other person? If I do, I feel I will approve her lifestyle. Please help."

This was a difficult one. I thought and prayed about it before answering. When in doubt about any issue, I always consult the Bible first. On the morning I was planning to write her, the Gospel for the day's Mass was taken from Luke 6:37. It gave me the opening I needed:

"Be compassionate, as your Father is compassionate. Do not judge, and you will not be judged. Do not condemn and you will not be condemned. Pardon, and you shall be pardoned. Give, and it shall be given to you.... For the measure you measure with will be measured back to you."

There are many levels of law that we need to observe, but above them all is the supreme law of love. To obey that law we sometimes have to close one eye to other things that are happening around us. When Jesus walked and talked with prostitutes, he wasn't thereby approving their lifestyle. Even though he knew he would be condemned by hypocrites for it, he chose to be kind and understanding to them nevertheless.

I think Jesus would want this woman to put the moral issue in perspective. Family support and love is important. You can accept the person without accepting the sin, and you can be kind in the process. It is enough to express disapproval of the relationship, but striving for peace and harmony after that is also a moral value. I encouraged her to speak more to God about her daughter, than to her daughter about God.

Respecting the conscience of another is a delicate matter. There is much that we do not know about the human psyche. When someone close is doing the best he or she can do in order to be a good person, I think it's best to live and let live. "Do not do to another what you would not want them to do to you."

Immaculata Gift Targeted for Catholic Education

By MIKE KROKOS

HENDERSONVILLE — Mary Spinks has fond memories of her Catholic schools days. As a youngster in Greenville, N.J., Spinks and both her brothers attended parochial schools. In fact, nearly everyone in her neighborhood went to Catholic schools. "In those days, Catholic schools didn't have to worry about students — they got them. Things have changed though."

Those changes mean not only less students but tighter budgets for many Catholic schools — Immaculata School (pre-K through 8th grade) being no exception. With her love of Catholic education in mind, Spinks recently donated $130,000 to the parochial school for a computer networking project.

For the past 10 years, Spinks has settled in as a parishioner at Immaculate Conception Church, and her bond to the church goes beyond attending Mass. She has also grown fond of Immaculata School, which has served families in the area since 1926.

According to Sister of Holy Cross Judith McKenna, principal, Spinks' gift allowed the school to purchase four computers and a printer for each classroom in grades 1-8, plus a TV and VCR. A computer was also purchased for the pre-Immaculata students at new computer stations.

K class. "What we had outlined in a five-year plan we were able to do in one year thanks to Mrs. Spinks' generosity," Sister Judith noted. Three computers in each classroom were earmarked for students' use, while the fourth was purchased for the teacher. The school will also soon be getting a digital camera, and a color printer for the library. Thanks to Spinks, the new computers are all on the same network as well. In addition, the gift includes teacher training, maintenance and purchase of additional software over the next five years.

An initial gift of $108,000 was provided to Immaculata for the project, but when monies were needed for wiring, tables and chairs, Spinks donated an additional $22,000. Sister Judith said Spinks' attorney approached her about the gift this past spring. "It was a magnificent surprise," she said.

While school officials and the attorney worked out the details, students and teachers returned to school in late August to find new computers.

Spinks, who splits her time between Florida and the North Carolina mountains, said she had been considering the gift for quite some time. "I have always felt education is so very important and I think more emphasis should be put on it," she said. "They need to run schools to the best of their ability."

"More and more Catholics who have the capacity to make significant gifts like Mrs. Spinks are doing so to support our schools, parishes and agencies," said Jim Kelley, director of development for the diocese who worked with Spinks on the gift. "Their stewardship of treasure will help secure the financial future of our Catholic organizations."

Sister Judith said the gift will serve Immaculata students well beyond the millennium. "It's a dream-come-true," she said. "Mrs. Spinks wanted to do something that would make a difference in the lives of children for years to come, and she certainly has."

realization of and focus on Catholics' belief in Christ as Lord and in the Bible as God's inspired Word.

That message — of accepting and believing in the providence of Jesus and the Bible — was conveyed in a variety of ways through the immense stadium in each of the services. The Rev. Billy Graham preached. Country music legends Johnny Cash and June Carter Cash sang. Former NFL coach Joe Gibbs drew comparisons between football and the "game of life." Contemporary Christian musicians dc Talk and Michael W. Smith rocked.

After asking the congregations whether they were trying to live their lives without meaning, Graham summarized his message in four words: "The answer is Christ."

At the services, Graham urged the crowds to try to find that answer through a public display of rededication to the Lord. The thousands who came forward included the faithful, the baptized, the devoted who sought renewal. The throng also comprised the unchurched, the confused, the unfulfilled. Bishop Curlin says the Church needs to ready itself to accept all of these people looking to find the way to Christ through Catholicism.

"They came forth. Will we come forth to help? That's going to be the great proof of whether the Crusade is a success: the follow-up. It's vitally important that men and women, religious and laity, commit ourselves to assisting those who have reached out and said, 'I need Christ in my life.' We have to do our part now," the bishop says.

Hospitality efforts already are underway as commitment cards, which inquirers completed during the altar calls, are processed. Telephone committees are being formed, letters of welcome are being sent, and a meeting for parish evangelical representatives to discuss further follow-up efforts has been scheduled.

Perhaps most important to the initial welcoming phase for those who committed themselves to the Catholic faith is an Oct. 11 prayer service and reception at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte. With Bishop Curlin presiding, the service is intended as a celebration of recommitment to Christ.

Spiritual Father Ed Vilkauskas, diocesan director of evangelization and pastor at Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Monroe, expresses excitement at the prospect of helping "these 'travelers' take the second step of their chosen journey."

"We cannot force them," he adds, "We cannot push them and we cannot drive them. We can only make the path a little easier to travel."

Father Vilkauskas says that the Oct. 11 service, which begins at 7 p.m., is not only a celebration for the renewed. It will also thank the numerous people who helped prepare for Catholic involvement in the Crusade. In addition, it will call on the members of the Catholic community who will encourage those beginning a new life in the Catholic Church.

From that point, Father Vilkauskas and his volunteer staff will help physically and spiritually place those inquirers, who reside in the Charlotte Diocese and beyond, into parishes. Programs intended to further the journey of people who responded have been established as well, and both Father Vilkauskas and Bishop Curlin — and, indeed, Billy Graham — plead that parishioners will assume the responsibility to meet with, counsel and support their brothers and sisters.

"I'm going to ask you to come and say, 'Yes' to Christ," said Graham during Sunday evening's altar call. Repeating an invitation he had conveyed throughout the event, he urged those who made their way to the field to read the Bible daily, pray, serve as Christian witnesses, and find a church.

Bishop Curlin says that the more than 1,000 people who reached out to the Catholic Church after the Crusade serve as reminders for all Catholics to continue their own renewal of faith. "I was moved each night to recommit my life as a priest and a bishop," he adds. "The faith demonstrated by those persons going down to the field and reaching out to Jesus stirred up in me a desire to know Him even more in my life. It was a time for all of us to reach out and touch the welcoming, reconciling embrace of Christ. I pray that God will continue in our ministry the good work He has begun through the Carolinas Crusade."

50 Years As Priest:

ABC-TV Special To Focus On Pope

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Pope John Paul II's 50th anniversary as a priest will be celebrated in "John Paul II: A Light for the Nations," an hour-long documentary produced by the Catholic Communication Campaign for the ABC-TV network.

Karol Wojtyla was ordained a priest Nov. 1, 1946, for the Archdiocese of Krakow, Poland, where he served first as a parish priest, then as an auxiliary bishop, and finally as archbishop of the Polish see. In 1978 he was elected pope, becoming the first non-Italian pope in over 400 years and the first one from Poland.

The program will be distributed to ABC affiliates on Sunday, Oct. 13.

Viewers should contact local stations for date and time of broadcast.

The documentary includes interviews of a boyhood friend of the pope, the U.S. ambassador to the Vatican and others who give insights into the pope as priest, world citizen and statesman. The profile also looks at his influence on communism and its eventual downfall in Eastern Europe.

"John Paul II: A Light for the Nations" is the second of the four-part "Vision and Values" series offered annually to ABC-TV stations by the Interfaith Broadcasting Commission. The commission is a consortium of Christian and Jewish faith organizations that produces religious documentaries for distribution to TV stations.

Ellen McCloskey of the Catholic Communication Campaign, which funds media projects to promote Gospel and family values, is the show's executive producer, and Paulist Father John Geaney is its producer.

The campaign, which also operates a toll-free movie review line and a public service campaign called "Good Values Make Great Kids," is funded through an annual collection taken up in parishes nationwide.

Video copies of "John Paul II: A Light for the Nations" and an accompanying study guide are available for purchase by calling (800) 235-8722, the U.S. Catholic Conference, after Oct. 13.

Given their cultural heritage, the Greeks in Athens just couldn't make sense of the message when St. Paul attempted to preach the Gospel to them.

Realizing this, Paul observed their culture more closely. What he discovered is that these Greeks paid honor to an unknown god from it and the confidence that God is working through it. Before I was ordained, I worked for a summer in Appalachia. There I discovered that clogging to a fiddle and banjo can seem just as suitable for an entrance at Mass as a stately procession with organ music.

Vatican Council II encouraged the path of inculturation in its Decree on the Missionary Activity of the Church wide range of activities. They may be grouped under at least three headings.

1. Translation. This refers to all the ways people from a visiting culture may convert their expressions of faith into the language of a host culture. Did you know that instead of reciting the word "amen," some tribes in Africa would express the meaning of the word more naturally by stomping the present incidents from their ministry to a group of other students and their supervisor for analysis and critique.

However, one student, a Filipino, was having a difficult time in the course. For, in his culture people did not share their feelings as readily as we expected, and no one ever criticized another person in public.

As a group we had to adapt our methodology so this student could participate in the group without violating his cultural values.

3. Construction. The third form of inculturation is the most demanding. Unlike translation and adaptation where one's own cultural expression remains the norm, construction means letting a host culture — in a foreign nation, perhaps — be the norm.

For missionaries this can mean discovering how the host culture can help to express what we believe. This requires greater openness, while trusting that each culture has its own unique, God-given power of expression.

Among the Masai people in Tanzania grass is a sign of peace. When a certain missionary came to a Masai village for Mass, he would offer some grass to the elders, and it would be passed among the villagers. If anyone refused it, it meant that reconciliation was needed first. Only then could Mass be celebrated.

This liturgy reflected the custom of the people.

Similarly, the village life of many people in Latin and South America has launched the movement of small Christian communities that is energizing the church throughout the world.

No matter what form it takes, inculturation is a way of respecting the richness of human diversity and acknowledging that God uses all human expressions to share divine life with us because the whole world is God's.

(Father Kinast is the director of the Center for Theological Reflection, Indian Rocks Beach, Fla.)

"People often assume ... that their cultural expressions of faith should be the norm.... But ... inculturation requires respect for a different culture, the humility to learn from it and the confidence that God is working through it."

ground, and some Indonesian groups would whistle?

The most obvious example here involves the translation of the Bible, hymns or catechism into the language of the local people. More is involved than just a word-for-word translation. The idioms and customs of the host culture also play a part.

2. Adaptation. A second aspect of inculturation is adaptation. In this case people modify their own preferred forms of expression. Instead of traditional European hymns, for example, African or Indian chants may be used.

And, in terms of education, adaptation might mean that catechists replace a straightforward, logical presentation of Christian beliefs to Japanese students with a series of paradoxical statements similar to a Buddhist "koan."

I faced the challenge of cultural adaptation a few years ago when I was teaching a course on ministry. The usual practice was for students to — their way of acknowledging that God is beyond human comprehension (Acts 17:16-34).

So Paul utilized this element from their culture to help make his God known to them. In modern terminology he was "inculturating" the Gospel.

"Inculturation" is a recent term that refers to the creative process by which the Christian faith comes to be expressed in a variety of cultures.

People are often unaware of the ways their understanding and experience of faith is shaped by their own cultural environment. This is perhaps most evident in religious art.

I, for example, grew up taking it for granted that Jesus must have had fair skin, light hair and blue eyes. Only later did I realize how Jesus would look to an Oriental, African or Indian Christian.

People often assume also that their cultural expressions of faith should be the norm for everyone else. Take kneeling, for example. It may be a sign of humility for people accustomed to exercising power. But does it have the same significance for people accustomed to oppression?

Inculturation requires respect for a different culture, the humility to learn (Ch. 2). Pope Paul VI advocated it in his apostolic exhortation on evangelization (1975). And Pope John Paul II has reinforced it in his encyclical on The Mission of the Redeemer (1991) and his apostolic exhortation titled The Church in Africa (1995).

The actual work of inculturation, led by modern missionaries, covers a

How do you benefit from the presence in your parish of people of other cultural backgrounds?

"We have an international festival here at the parish in the beginning of summer that celebrates each cultural group.... There are Hispanics, Filipinos and Vietnamese. We share different foods and the Filipino/Hawaiian group has dances, as do the Hispanics. Too often ignorance of another's cultural background leads to an atmosphere of fear, but here, the festival promotes a family atmosphere." — Gina Steele, Sacramento, Calif.

"I feel my horizons are widened. I become more aware that the world is a global village and that there are other people in the world who are unlike me but still part of my society. That realization enhances my vision of the world." — Jose A. Colon-Berdecia, Boston, Mass.

"It gives me a chance to understand how people of different cultures worship God. In Columbus here there are a lot of Mexican-American people, and seeing how dedicated they are to the faith and their affinity to the Virgin Mary has enhanced my own appreciation for devotion to the mother of God." — Gordon Green, Columbus, Neb.

"The differences between cultures and the ways different people worship God can really enliven our faith if each person is comfortable with his or her own culture and spiritual background so you feel you're contributing to the mix and not being overtaken by it." — Brother Tyrone Davis, CFC, Harlem, N.Y.

Factoring friendship into community diversity

By Father Eugene LaVerdiere, SSS
Catholic News Service

"Inculturation" is a big word. The reality can be very simple. It can also be very complicated. Much depends on our attitude.

At bottom, inculturation is a matter of incarnation. The greatest act of inculturation took place 2,000 years ago when the personal Word of God became flesh in the person of Jesus.

Everyone is born in a particular culture. Jesus became flesh in the Jewish culture of Galilee.

Inculturation also is a matter of communication. The second greatest act of inculturation took place over a period of many years when the spoken word of God became Scripture in the Old and New Testaments. In the Bible, the word of God became Scripture in Hebrew, Aramaic and Greek cultural expressions.

For little children, inculturation comes naturally. I remember when my brother Peter was no more than 3. Peter spoke only French. One day a Slovak family moved onto our street. One of their children was about Peter's age.

For my brother and our new neighbor that was no problem. They became fast friends. One spoke in French, the other in Slovak. To everyone's amazement they understood each other.

CNS illustration by Robert F. McGovern children from different cultures becoming fast friends.

In the liturgy, inculturation is not just putting on a show or having a bit of cultural entertainment. It is a matter of being really catholic — really universal.

True inculturation requires sensitivity to one another. Liturgical inculturation means entering into one another's liturgical life, like two children playing together.

If the parish includes people from various parts of the world, the liturgy should show that, in the prayer intentions, for example, and in the hymns.

A second thing we learn is that inculturation asks that we appreciate, not just tolerate, what various cultures uniquely represent.

If we think of ourselves as "in Christ," the converse is also true: Christ is in us. Christ is in each of us, as well as in our various cultures. That means that each of us and each culture shows a particular facet of the features of Christ.

It takes all of us together to present the fullness of Christ's features to the world.

When many cultural groups are present in a parish, just being together is a great value, even when people do not actually do anything. But many of us do not find too much value in just being together — do not recognize the value. Perhaps that is why it often is a struggle to build up community in our parishes.

At bottom, inculturation is a matter of grace, enjoying the new life each of us has in Christ. As a matter of grace, it is also a matter of peace.

(Father LaVerdiere is a Scripture scholar and senior editor of Emmanuel magazine.)

"Liturgical inculturation means entering into one another's liturgical life, like two children playing together."

Their communication went beyond words. It was very personal. They entered into one another's life.

Whenever two or more cultural backgrounds are involved, inculturation is a mutual process of cross-inculturation. Each one enters into the other's culture and makes himself or herself at home.

We can learn a lot about inculturation by watching children.

The first thing we learn is that inculturation cannot be forced. It has to come naturally.

In a parish, for example, inculturation does not mean just accommodating people who come from different cultural backgrounds. It is a matter of actively reaching out to people and welcoming them as fellow Christians and Catholics. It is a matter of friendship, like two

Scripture mirrors heaven, but the world's cultures too

By Father John J. Castelot

Christianity did not develop in a vacuum. Right from the beginning it was influenced by various cultures.

Take a look at John's Gospel. Early on, Samaritans had been brought into the Christian community where this fourth Gospel was produced.

The Samaritans tended to think of a Messiah as a Moses figure — one who comes down from a mountain on high to reveal his message. Not surprisingly, this Gospel's starting point for telling the Messiah's story becomes not his birth, but his pre-existence as divine Word of God.

In the beginning the dominant culture for Christianity was Judaism. Jesus and his immediate disciples were all observant Jews. But in reaching out to gentiles, preachers of the good news had to embrace other ways of communicating.

By welcoming gentiles to Christianity, St. Paul brought about a situation that was painful for many Jewish Christians, who had identified Christianity with their own culture. But Paul stood firm. Wisely adaptable, he "became all things to all, to save at least some" (1 Corinthians 9:22).

It was not that Christianity's essential message was constantly changing. It remained always the same. But the terms in which faith was expressed and the worship that flowed from it reflected the people's cultural circumstances.

Gentiles simply could not think and pray in the same way as Jews, just as today Afro-Christians are quite different culturally from Euro-Christians.

FAITH IN ACTION

"To prevent isolation and encourage communion" in a culturally diverse church setting, "there need to be periodic (not, however, weekly) celebrations of diversity," writes Father David Power, OMI, in The Multicultural Church, A New Landscape in U.S. Theologies, edited by William Cenkner (Paulist Press, 997 Macarthur Blvd., Mahwah, NJ 07430. 1996. Paperback, $14.95). The celebrations encouraged by the author "are intercultural rituals that are designed as such, when the church celebrates its manifold richness and its liberating eschatological hope. Such celebration, for example, might very well mark the feast of Pentecost or the common celebration of saints who have become popular across cultures."

Reflection: "Hospitality to all comers has to be the practice of Catholic liturgy," says Father Power. But, he says, this means "to receive the other as other and to let others see us as other." It is not, he says, "reducible to the bonhomie of meeting visitors at the door and inviting them to stand up and announce their names."

Cultural adaptations are reflected in many ways in the New Testament. The biblical guidelines for family relationships — husband and wife, parents and children — reflect the accepted family structures of the day. These guidelines echo the "household codes" devised by several Greek philosophers. The author of Colossians 3:18-22 — with specific exhortations for wives, husbands, children and fathers too — was clearly influenced by one such "code," even though he "Christianized" it.

Even some ways of structuring the early Christian community's life were borrowed in various ways from surrounding cultures. At first some of these were modeled on the Jewish synagogue.

Our Liturgy of the Word — the part of the Mass that includes the readings and homily — reflects the order of the worship service in the synagogue. And our Eucharistic Prayer has undergone many cultural adaptations over time.

All such adaptations were necessary if Christianity was to be a "living" religion. Had Christianity been wedded indissolubly to just one culture, it would have had little meaning for people of other cultures, or it could have died with the death of any given culture in which it had thrived.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

I can't imagine how cultural diversity will challenge the grandchildren I may someday have and who, some 35 years from now, will still be young parents. After all, I'm sure that when I was a child, my grandfather couldn't fathom the world of cultural diversity in which my family and I live and travel daily.

I'd like to predict that in the year 2026 or so things will go smoothly among people who are culturally different due to race, nationality, ethnicity or place of birth — and that in parishes people always will welcome each other and make each other feel at home.

But do you think I should take this for granted?

I suspect it's a good idea to take seriously one of Pope John Paul II's recent proposals. As part of preparations for celebrating the year 2000, he suggested that we spend time reflecting on certain "challenges of our time," among them "the difficulties of dialogue between different cultures."

You know, when he visited the United Nations in 1995, the pope said that, "unhappily," the world "has yet to learn to live with diversity." A key reason, he indicated, is that we fear each other. Clearly he considered our fear our loss.

Injuries Were 'Part Of God's Plan,' Says Green Bay Tight End

Green Bay Packer Mark Chmura says faith has helped him through the rocky times in football when injuries hampered his play. Now on top of the NFL world, the tight end credits God for his talents.

By TONY STALEY

GREEN BAY, Wis. (CNS) — Two seasons ago, Mark Chmura looked like he'd be lucky to still be playing football today. But not only is he a starter for the Green Bay Packers, he's a Pro Bowl player and one of the highest-paid tight ends in the game.

Much has changed for Chmura since the Boston College All-American was drafted in 1992 by the Packers. But one thing that hasn't changed is his strong Catholic faith.

"I grew up in a very religious family. Both my parents are devoted Catholics. My four brothers and I were all altar boys. Sometimes four of us were all serving at the same time," said Chmura, who served Mass for 10 years at St. James Church in South Deerfield, Mass.

"Mark is one of the best," said Father Julius Jutt, pastor at St. James, where Chmura also mowed the lawn. "Mark is an excellent model for the younger kids. They just love him here."

"Everything that happens to me is because of God," Chmura said. "He has a plan for me. I wouldn't be here today without Him. Sometimes people at this level forget that. But there were times for me when it was rocky. I was almost out of the game, now I'm at the top. I attribute that to my faith and belief in God."

Back when injuries hobbled him, "I thought about quitting at times," Chmura said. "I think it was a test that is part of God's plan."

Chmura volunteers with charities. He appears with his wife, Lynda and their son, Dylan, in an NFL-United Way public service announcement that will air during games. He often donates equipment to charity auctions. The family is active at Nativity Parish in Ashwaubenon.

"A man only needs so much money. I try to help those who are less fortunate," he said.

Chmura has worn a scapular since 10th grade. Father Jutt frequently sends him a new supply because Chmura, wears out several each season because of heavy perspiration during games.

He also attends Mass before games and said, "If I don't see Father John Blaha going around blessing the Catholics before a game, I panic until I find him."

Mother Teresa Released From Hospital; Doctors Order Rest

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa was released Sept. 25 from Woodlands Nursing Home, where she had been hospitalized for 10 days after injuring her head when she fell from a chair.

She arrived at the Missionaries of Charity motherhouse in Calcutta lying on a stretcher because of persistent back pain that was not due to the effects of her fall, a doctor said.

Her doctors ordered two weeks of complete bed rest for the Nobel laureate, who was hospitalized Aug. 18 to Sept. 6 in the same hospital for cardiac problems, malaria and a lung infection.

Doctors discovered a black spot during an initial brain scan after Mother Teresa was admitted to the hospital Sept. 16. They said the spot could be a hemorrhage or be from an earlier injury.

"We've found nothing abnormal in a brain scan," said Mother Teresa's personal physician, Dr. A.K. Bardhan. "Her reflexes are normal now, but her irregular heartbeat continues to be a cause of worry."

Upon her arrival at the Missionaries of Charity house, nuns greeted her with applause. As a chapel bell rang, about 30 nuns gathered around her, singing and dancing before Mother Teresa was taken inside for prayer.

Mother Teresa was later taken into her room, wearing her white and blue-trimmed sari, and was examined by a doctor.

"...We prayed to God to make her stronger so that she can lead us in our work for the poor ... for many more years," Sister Priscilla Lewis told Reuters, the British news agency.

Faith-Healing Archbishop Says He Prays Daily For Pope

ROME (CNS) — Faith-healing African Archbishop Emmanuel Milingo said he was praying daily for the health of Pope John Paul II. "We're all concerned because we can see he continues to suffer physically. But we never forget to ask for the prolongation of the life of the Holy Father," the controversial archbishop said Sept. 27. The 76-year-old pope is expected to undergo an appendectomy in October, and the Vatican said he has some nervous system disturbances as well. Archbishop Milingo, whose popular faith-healing sessions have been restricted by Italian church officials following objections by local bishops, said he and his congregations pray for the pope every day at Mass.

Cardinal Bernardin Discusses Cancer With Pope

CASTEL GANDOLFO (CNS) — Chicago Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin discussed his battle with cancer with Pope John Paul II during a private meeting at the pontiff's villa outside Rome. The encounter Sept. 27 lasted about a half-hour, and the two discussed Cardinal Bernardin's health, his "spiritual journey" and the state of the Chicago Archdiocese, said Msgr. Kenneth Velo, who traveled with the cardinal.

Governor Awards Outstanding Volunteers

Caring Hearts AIDS Ministry Team of St. Joan of Arc with Father C. Morris Boyd, pastor.

By PAUL FREDETTE
ASHEVILLE — To anyone who has ever looked in vain for a volunteer, the packed auditorium of Asheville High School Sept. 16 would have seemed unbelievable. The 177 recipients of this year's Governor's Awards for Outstanding Volunteer Service were gathered with friends and supporters to be recognized for their contributions in seven categories of service to their community: arts and culture, environment, public safety, education and literacy, health, social service and special events.

The recipients filed onto the stage one at a time to accept their awards and be greeted personally by Governor and Mrs. Hunt. The governor expressed his gratitude for their example which is "shaping the quality and care and the kind of people we are in North Carolina." Some of the volunteers he commended for contributing time and talent were relatively young, but most were middle aged or older. Many were obviously people who "have the time now" to devote to service clubs and civic organizations, and church associations.

Available hours alone, however, don't account for the generosity of retirees like Catherine Kelly of St. Joseph Church in Bryson City. Now 69, Kelly, "Cass" to friends, ignores disabilities she has endured since suffering a brain stem injury in 1979 to serve as a member of the parish council's family life commission, a lector, an Eucharist minister and after Mass refreshment coordinator. An average week for Cass usually includes two days staffing the parish thrift shop, working at the food pantry and helping at SAFE, a shelter for victims of domestic violence. She is a bit embarrassed by all the attention and reluctant to be singled out for credit she feels others deserve. "There are so many people involved," she says anxiously, concerned that the appreciation will include all those who have been supportive.

Cass's friend and fellow parishioner at St. Joseph, Mary C. Rose, also a 1996 recipient, was unable to attend the awards ceremony because of illness. Although legally blind, Mary, now 70, still walks the mile-and-a-half from her home without a white cane (unless the local constabulary catches her) to Cherokee Elementary School where she is a foster grandparent. Over the years her love of books and literature has involved her in countless hours spent helping children to overcome reading difficulties.

There were also volunteers whose "outstanding contributions" could have hardly resulted from having lots of time. For some, like Caring Hearts AIDS Ministry of St. Joan of Arc Parish, time itself is critical in responding to the urgent needs of those affected by HIV/AIDS. "I am so proud of our folks for living up to their names (Caring Hearts)," said Father Morris Boyd, pastor of St. Joan of Arc, who received the award on behalf of the team.

In Father Boyd's view, these care teams are examples of putting others first. "When Caring Hearts was organized 3 years ago, the very mention of care teams scared some people," said Father Boyd. Those initial fears have since diminished, making room for compassion and growth.

announces the recipients of its 1996 leadership awards:*

The National Pro-Vita Award: Miss Nellie Gray, President of the National March for Life. A graduate of Texas Women's University and Georgetown University Law Center, Nellie worked at the U.S. Departments of State and Labor before resigning in June 1973 to start the National March for Life, a non-profit, non-sectarian corporation working to restore legal protection to pre-born children from the moment of fertilization. Hundreds of thousands of pro-lifers gather each January 22, the anniversary of the infamous Roe v. Wade decision, to encourage elected officials to recognize this paramount right to life. March for Life works year-round to educate Americans about life issues. In 1979, Pope John Paul II conferred on Nellie the PRO ECCLESIA ET PONTIFICE, which was presented to her in Washington, D.C. by his eminence, William Cardinal Baum.

Sen. Thomas

The Mary Corinne Nussbaum Award: State Senators Thomas B. Sawyer and Wendell H. Sawyer. Few North Carolina families have committed themselves to the pro-life cause as strongly as the Sawyer family. After serving in the N.C. House of Representatives in the 1970s, Tom returned to the legislature in 1994 as a state senator, where he served until his death earlier this year. His son, Wendell, also a state senator, earned a reputation as a loyal friend of the unborn and of persons with disabilities. Both families have been involved in the pro-life movement as leaders and foot soldiers from the early seventies.

Miss Nellie Gray

Sen. Wendell

Fr. Dennis Kuhn

The Monsignor William Wellein Award: Father Dennis Kuhn. Father Dennis, a convert from the Episcopal Church where he served as a priest for nine years, has been tirelessly involved in the pro-life movement for years. As chaplain at Charlotte Catholic High School, he worked with young people to develop a strong pro-life witness of faith, especially with the student group, Voices of Life. Currently, he is Associate Pastor at Saint Gabriel Church. Until recently, he served as Associate Pastor at Saint Ann Church. From the classroom, the sidewalk and the pulpit, Father Dennis has provided bold and courageous leadership in the fight for life.

Religious Ed Curriculum Developed For Mentally Retarded

PITTSBURGH (CNS) — A comprehensive religious education curriculum for children and adults with mental retardation has been developed for nationwide distribution. The curriculum has the approval of Bishop Donald W. Wuerl of Pittsburgh and the enthusiastic support of Eunice Shriver, founder of the Special Olympics and executive vice president of the Joseph P. Kennedy Jr. Foundation in Washington. The Pittsburgh Diocese's Department for Persons with Disabilities guided the curriculum's preparation.

Judge Won't Try Covenant House Suit Against Glue Maker

NEW YORK (CNS) — A federal judge ruled Sept. 23 that his court did not have jurisdiction to try a case supported by Covenant House against the H.B. Fuller Company, a Minnesota manufacturer of glue and other products. The suit charged the company, which has headquarters in St. Paul, with responsibility for the death of a Guatemalan youth, Joel de Jesus Linares Polanco, who allegedly died as a result of sniffing glue produced and sold by a Fuller subsidiary. But U.S. District Judge Michael J. Davis of St. Paul said the case was "immutably Guatemalan," and he would not accept it.

USCC, Other Groups File Brief In Taped Confession Case

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Catholic Conference and other religious organizations filed a joint friend-of-the-court brief urging the destruction of a secretly taped recording of an Oregon prisoner's sacramental confession and the transcript of it. The brief has been filed in an appeal of a lower court ruling brought to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by Archbishop Francis E. George of Portland, Ore., and Father Timothy Mockaitis, who heard the confession, in another attempt to have the recording and its transcript destroyed. Their appeal, filed Aug. 23, followed a ruling Aug. 12 by a U.S. district court judge that the tape's role in a murder case outweighed the Catholic Church's religious liberty interest in having it destroyed.

Bishops Lobby For Conscience Vote On Abortion Bill

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (CNS) — South African bishops are lobbying the government to allow members of Parliament to vote according to individual conscience on the Termination of Pregnancy Bill. The bill would allow abortion on demand up to 14 weeks of pregnancy and under "broadly specified circumstances" up to 24 weeks. The bill needs a simple majority in Parliament's two houses to become law. The bishops are also preparing to fight the legislation in the Constitutional Court if the bill is passed. The ruling ANC's national executive committee recently decided that its members must vote in line with the party's policy of abortion on demand.

Patriarch Sabbah, Christian Leaders Condemn Violence

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Latin-rite Patriarch Michel Sabbah and other Christian religious leaders condemned the new outbreak of violence between Israelis and Palestinians and called for calm on both sides, urging them to continue to move forward toward peace, in spite of the grave situation. "We express our condolences to all who have lost their loved ones," said the patriarch in a statement issued with other Christian religious leaders. "We express our solidarity and share all the sufferings of the people in the Palestinian territories. We urge the authorities, Israeli and Palestinian, to take the steps necessary to alleviate these sufferings ... and to reactivate the peace process with new determination."

Cardinal Says Proposed Law Worse Than Under Communism

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — The head of the Catholic Church in Belarus warned that a proposed religious law would impose "even worse restrictions" on Catholic activities than under communism. "When I worked here by myself, my parish stretched from the Baltic to the Pacific Ocean, since I was told I had a right to travel around the whole Soviet Union, visiting the sick and conducting funerals," said Cardinal Kazimierz Swiatek of Minsk-Mogilev. "But under the new law, I must obtain the authorities' consent to assign a priest to a parish and must consult with them again if I wish to move him," he said.

"It is proposed that parish priests will not even be able to celebrate Mass elsewhere in their diocese."

ASHEVILLE — Father John Barry visited Asheville in 1840, thereby marking the first time — according to written records, at least — Mass was celebrated for the Catholics living in that mountainous area. The priest, who would later become Bishop of Savannah, made history, although it took nearly a half-century before Asheville had its first resident pastor.

Father James White held that distinction in 1887, which marked decades of work to bring the Catholic Church, both in spiritual and physical terms, to the mountain town. Before then, missionary priests had celebrated Mass for the few Catholics there. One such priest, Father Thomas Price, was a North Carolina native who later co-founded the Maryknoll Mission Society.

Plans for building a church in Asheville came to fruition in 1868, when Bishop James Gibbons visited the village. He arranged to purchase land on which to build, and within two years dedicated the new structure.

Seventeen years passed before Father White was appointed resident pastor of the church. In 1888, he found a more accessible site to build a new church on. Father White remained in Asheville until 1895, when ill health forced him to retire.

The new, albeit modest, wooden structure was only half-filled with the year-round congregation. However, during summer months visitors and tourists joined with the locals, thereby overflowing the church each week.

One visitor was the famous architect Rafael Guastavino, from Valencia, Spain, who was in town in 1908 working at the Biltmore House. After being unable to find a seat at Mass, he approached the pastor, Father Peter Marion, with the statement that each Catholic church should be large enough to take care of guests. During that fateful occasion, he offered to design plans for a new church and to donate a dome for the structure.

With the permission of Bishop Leo Haid, construction began and in October 1909, St. Lawrence Church was dedicated. Eleven years later, the church became the first in the North Carolina Vicariate to be consecrated. Construction of the rectory was completed in 1929.

Through the decades following, St. Lawrence has been a spiritual harbor for residents and visitors of the western Carolina town.

St. Lawrence has marked the historical changes in the Church as well. In keeping with the spirit of Vatican II, the church underwent major renovations in 1968: Part of the altar was moved to the middle of the sanctuary, and the fresco of the Last Supper and the side panels were moved and topped with a block of marble. This allowed priests to celebrate Mass while facing the congregation. Lay committees and the parish council were established soon thereafter.

Another addition to the property came during Father Justin Pechilus' residence as pastor, from 1977 to 1983. A building across from the church was bought and renovated, and has been used for religious education and other church activities. Named St. Justin Center in honor of Father Pechilus' patron saint, the building is also furnished with a parish hall and kitchen. In 1994, a fund drive for and subsequent purchase of several parking lots near the church expanded the facility as well.

A monumental page in St. Lawrence's history book was written in 1993, when in April of that year Pope John Paul II designated the church as a basilica. Since then, with its unique history, architecture, art, and place as a significant center of worship, the Basilica of St. Lawrence has had a special relationship with the Holy Father. Considered the mother church of western North Carolina, the structure is an important landmark of the expansion of the Catholic Church in the Tarheel state.

At present, the church is actively promoting lay ministry and evangelization. Special inner-city, ecumenical ministries have been established which St. Lawrence is actively involved in. In addition, St. Lawrence has hosted daily adoration of the Blessed Sacrament since 1989, the lengthiest period of time for such devotion in the diocese.

Msgr. John J. McSweeney, former chancellor of the Diocese of Charlotte and the first priest ordained to the diocese, is currently pastor at the basilica. Remembering Rafael Guastavino's plea for the Church's need to accommodate visitors, he emphasizes that the basilica is a sanctuary for all, both residents and visitors. He welcomes everyone to share in the history of the Catholic Church in North Carolina by visiting the basilica, the only church of its kind in the Carolinas.

...The Little Flower Has Blossomed!

Named in honor of Saint Thérèse of Lisieux, The Little Flower recently opened as the first Catholic-oriented assisted living residence in the Diocese of Charlotte. The residence, with its wrap-around porch, courtyard and chapel, caters to senior adults who seek to maintain their independence in a residential setting.

The Little Flower owners, Keith Adams and Sharon Mayfield, believe that "Respect for Life" encompasses not only new life at conception, but life that has grown in wisdom through the passage of time as well. The residence serves seniors that, although they can no longer live as comfortably or as safely on their own as they would like, do not require the 24-hour medical care provided at a nursing home.

In Thanksgiving...

To our Lord, Jesus Christ — May we always be worthy of His blessings.

To the following individuals without whom The Little Flower would not have been possible:

- ♦ Bishop William G. Curlin
- ♦ Reverend Mauricio West, Chancellor
- ♦ Msgr. William Wellein, Resident Chaplain
- ♦ Our families and friends for their prayerful support and patience
- ♦ The Little Flower residents and their families

Permanent Diaconate Retreat Celebrates Ministry

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

HICKORY — By definition, they compose the first of three ranks of ordained ministry in the Catholic Church. Their beginnings date back to scriptural times, and since the Vatican II council they have been restored as active ministers of the Church.

They are deacons, more than 60 of whom serve the Diocese of Charlotte. From Oct. 4-6, they, along with their wives, gathered together at the Catholic Conference Center to focus on their life's calling.

"I think it is good to share with other deacons what we're doing in our ministry," said Rev. Mr. Jos Vandermeer, regional vicar and permanent deacon serving St. Eugene Church in Asheville, of the retreat. "It's really invigorating and beautiful to see that the faith is at work."

Throughout the weekend, retreat master Franciscan Father Paul Williams, from St. Anthony of Padua Church in Greenville, S.C., reminded the deacons to be Christ-like to all whom they serve.

The diaconate as it exists in today's Catholic Church is made up of two components. Permanent deacons — such as those who attended the retreat in Hickory — receive holy orders and remain deacons for life. Transitional deacons are ordained as a step toward the priesthood. In both cases, they are ordained ministers of service to the Church.

Historically, the permanent diaconate was suppressed between the fifth century up to the second Vatican council. Between then, the Western Church generally ordained deacons only as a measure preceding priesthood. Since Pope Paul VI's restoration of the permanent diaconate, however, the ministry has experienced a rebirth.

In biblical times, the apostles appointed seven men "full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom," as is explained in

Little Flower Assisted Living Home Blossoms

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

CHARLOTTE — For some, it is the new friends they've made. Others talk of the care used to prepare each meal. Many enjoy the countless activities, including line dancing the macarena. These amenities are indeed a part of the environment at The Little Flower, but resident Edgar Hill sums it up best: "It's home."

Hill, 82, and his wife, Jerrie, 80, are among the 41 residents who moved into the new assisted living care facility on Lawyers Road in south Charlotte nearly two months ago. They are happy to be a part of The Little Flower family. "This should have happened 10 years ago," says Mrs. Hill. "It's so wonderful."

Keith Adams and Sharon Mayfield, co-founders of The Little Flower, formed a planning committee in 1994 that included the Hills. Together, the group watched the concept of an assisted living home for Catholic seniors blossom.

"The project took two years from conception to opening," says Adams.

The Little Flower is geared toward people who are basically independent but need help with their daily living tasks. "The resident assistants are at the core," says Adams. "They are the ones who have their little neighborhood and are responsible for their residents to make sure they are healthy and happy."

The staff at The Little Flower makes sure physical and personal care needs are met, with social, spiritual and intellectual needs at the forefront.

"The residents get to do things they haven't be able to do in years," adds Mayfield. "They get to be with people everyday, that's the other thing."

"We couldn't have done this alone," explains Adams. "Sharon and I are more the orchestra directors that have brought in other people that have really made it. We planted the seed, but others helped to make it grow."

Nearly 80 percent of the residents are Catholic, but the home does not discriminate. "The Catholics and non-Catholics have blended very well," notes

Pope Has Surgery, Doctors Rule Out Serious Disorders

By JOHN THAVIS

ROME (CNS) — Doctors successfully removed Pope John Paul II's inflamed appendix and ruled out any more serious intestinal disorder for the 76-year-old pontiff.

The pope regained consciousness almost immediately after the 50-minute surgery Oct. 8 and "greeted and thanked everyone" on the medical staff, said Dr. Francesco Crucitti, who performed the operation at Rome's Gemelli hospital.

Crucitti said all of the pope's vital signs were normal during and following the surgery. He said the pope might get out of bed the next day and could be dismissed from the hospital in a week or so.

"It might be even sooner. But let's not forget the pope is in his 77th year," he said.

Crucitti said the operation confirmed what he and other doctors had diagnosed earlier this year: that the pope was suffering from recurrent episodes of appendix inflammation, which produced symptoms of fever and nausea.

"The regional examination allowed us to exclude, once again, the presence of other pathologies," he said. He said he could "categorically" rule out a tumor as a cause of the pope's recent flare-ups.

Crucitti expressed irritation with recent Italian newspaper reports suggesting that the pope had a more serious disease, such as cancer, which doctors were either concealing or failing to diagnose.

"It's time to put an end to all these fantasies we've read," he said. "There is no secret. I'm here to tell you what the situation really is, and it's exactly as we described it" in previous medical statements.

Crucitti said a textbook appendectomy was performed on the pontiff. Doctors found exactly what they expected to find: that the pope's appendix had been inflamed and had developed scar tissue. The doctors also removed some "adherences" in the area, scar tissue that sometimes develops following surgery. The pope has been operated upon twice in Adams.

The privately owned home includes a chapel, and Msgr. William Wellein serves as resident pastor. Many residents, including the Hills, take advantage of the chance to nurture their faith.

"The nicest thing is having Mass every day. That is such a blessing," says Jerrie Hill. "We also have Holy Hour on Friday, rosary on Wednesday and confessions on Saturday, and it's right here for those of us who don't get around too well."

The past decade was a struggle for the Hills. Health problems forced the couple to give up driving, so they depended on friends to get to Mass, doctors' appointments and the grocery store from their Indian Trail home. Each day presented new challenges.

"We made due by the grace of God," says Mrs. Hill. "Edgar was in the hospital six times; I already had medical problems, so I was just poking along. We had wonderful neighbors, but it wasn't easy."

The Little Flower is the pseudonym for St. Therese, and for residents, it was only fitting that Bishop William G. Curlin celebrated Mass and blessed the facility on Oct. 1, the feast day of St. Therese. "You will receive more than food, medical care and a helping hand," said Bishop Curlin. "Here you will encounter the presence of Jesus."

Love is evident at The Little Flower, from Adams, Mayfield and the entire staff to the residents themselves. "The dear Lord has taken such good care of us. And the people here, we just all mesh," says Mrs. Hill. "It's like one big family. It really is. It's a joy to be here."

An Open House was held at The Little Flower Sept. 29. Shown are residents chatting in the dining room.

Acts 6: 1-6, to serve as the first deacons of the Church. In the centuries following, deacons have tended to charitable and pastoral duties and have pledged allegiance to their bishops.

Bishop William G. Curlin, who concelebrated Mass during the retreat, praised the deacons for their work. He sprinkled humor and anecdotes into an impassioned homily commending the diaconate while also strongly reminding its members of their duty.

"Be what you say you are," Bishop Curlin implored. "You are holy men of God. You are transformed by the Gospel that you live."

"As your bishop, I beg you to ask Jesus each day to reveal His loving presence through you," he continued. "That's what your life is all about. Put Jesus Christ at the center of all that you do."

Bishop Curlin in his homily — and Father Williams in his conferences — focused on the spirituality of the deacon and his ministry. Included in those discussions was much focus on the role of marriage in the diaconate.

Calling marriage "the greatest act of faith on earth," Bishop Curlin urged the deacons to realize their importance of growing in their faith not only individually, but with their spouses as well.

"With your husbands you share that magnificent sacrament of marriage," he told the deacons' wives. "You also share with them their ministry of trying to bring Christ to others. Your husbands need your comfort, your encouragement, your advice and your wisdom."

Rev. Mr. Curtiss Todd, permanent deacon of Our Lady of Consolation Church, said the retreat allowed the deacons and their wives to recommit themselves spiritually. "We came together to celebrate who we are and what our ministry is," he added.

Rev. Mr. Todd agreed with Bishop Curlin and Father Williams' message of keeping the fires of faith brightly lit and facing daily challenges. "As permanent deacons, we were ordained to be Jesus to others," he said. "We can't take the easy road. We can't do certain things just to be popular, or allow our ministry to be guided by worldly attitudes."

Throughout the weekend, the deacons and their spouses took opportunities in the brisk early autumn air under blue skies to remember their commitment: living life as followers of Jesus.

the intestinal area, after a 1981 shooting and in 1992 to remove a benign tumor.

The pope went through the operation well, and all his circulatory, respiratory, blood and metabolic functions remained within the norm during surgery, he said.

The pontiff had about 10 stitches. He was being treated with antibiotics and was receiving the normal therapy for appendectomy patients, Crucitti said.

He added that the pope's spirits were good before and after surgery.

"He was always serene," he said.

Papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls, speaking at a separate briefing at the Vatican, said the operation's success was expected at the Vatican — and it left people relieved.

"I think there's relief whenever a surgical operation confirms a previous diagnosis. But the Vatican had every trust in what the doctors had diagnosed. There was no surprise," he said.

The Vatican spokesman said the pope awoke at 3 a.m. the morning of surgery and spent some two hours alone in prayer in a private chapel next to his hospital room. At 5 a.m., he celebrated Mass with his personal secretary.

The pope began the pre-operation routine at about 7 a.m., and surgery was completed by 8:40 a.m. The pope had awakened by the time he reached his room and asked doctors how the surgery went, Navarro-Valls said.

The doctors then handed the pope the medical report they had just drawn up for public release; the pope asked a nun standing nearby to read it.

According to the medical bulletin, Crucitti was assisted by three other surgeons, along with a cardiologist and three members of an anesthesia team.

Two other doctors performed an immediate microscopic tissue examination of the removed appendix which showed fibrosis caused by previous inflammations, it said. The bulletin said additional routine microscopic examinations would also be carried out.

It said the pope's personal physician, Dr. Renato Buzzonetti, also was present for the operation. Another doctor from the Gemelli hospital helped prepare a preventative treatment against cytomegalovirus, a blood virus that affected the pope in 1981.

In his briefing for reporters, Crucitti was also asked about the pope's nervous system disorder, which the Vatican has described as an "extrapyramidal" disturbance, a term that could include Parkinson's disease.

Crucitti said that disorder was a separate one being followed by other medical experts. He said it posed no problems for the pope's surgery or recovery, but did not elaborate.

The pope entered the hospital late Oct. 6 and spent the next day undergoing a series of routine pre-operation exams, all of which reassured doctors that the pope was ready for surgery. It was his sixth operation at the Gemelli hospital, which has arranged a special suite of rooms for the pope's exclusive use.

Father Girzone In Luck With "Faith Renewal" Tour

By PAUL FREDETTE

LUCK — Sometimes when you're in Luck, you really are. Local folks and tourists who happened by Little Bit o' Luck arts and crafts shop on Highway 209 Sep. 21 could have met Father Joseph Girzone, author of the best-selling Joshua books. Father Girzone signed autographs and chatted with visitors at the quaint old roadside general store 15 miles north of Lake Junauska where he was scheduled to speak at the Methodist Assembly. He spent several days with friends in the Waynesville area while on a speaking tour entitled A Faith Renewal.

More than 200 people gathered at The Harrel Center at Lake Junaluska to hear Father Girzone describe the understanding of Jesus that prompted the writing of Joshua and its sequels (Joshua and the Children, Joshua and the Holy Land, Joshua and the City and the Shepherd.) now estimated to have been read by 30 million people in this country alone.

The fictional novels which place Jesus (Joshua) in a variety of modern settings have already sold 1.5 million copies. Several of the books, now published by MacMillian and Company (Girzone first published Joshua himself) have made the New York Times Best Seller List and translations have found their way into the Vatican bookstore as well as the Kremlin. Copies of Joshua have circulated through the White House and General Norman Schwarzkopf tells of being moved by it during Operation Desert Storm.

The motion picture rights for the Joshua series were purchased five years ago, and planning has begun for a full length feature production as well as a TV series based on Joshua and the Children.

Meanwhile, one gets the impression that Father Girzone is still astonished at the "rags to riches" success he now enjoys. He is quick to admit it is not his literary gifts but his timely message that accounts for the sustained popularity of the Joshua books.

Father Joseph Girzone was in Luck recently to speak and autograph copies of his book, Joshua.

"So many people I've met hunger for the joy and freedom that Jesus offers," says Father Grizone. "They are tired of religious bickering and strife," he adds with quiet certainty, "and may have been so hurt, so bruised by rigid and inflexible ministers in the Church." He speaks gently but insistently about the necessity to overcome denominationalism as a genuine response to Jesus. "I've been told that Catholics worship the Church, and Protestants worship the Bible, and that darn few people ever get to know Jesus, so I've tried to help people meet Jesus today."

Fifteen years ago, serious health problems forced Father Girzone to retire from active pastoral ministry when he was only fifty years old. He then embarked on what he envisioned would be a more quiet and leisurly writing career in the Adirondacks. Since the phenomenal reception of Joshua, he finds himself busier than ever doing retreats and addressing groups around the country and, when he can find the time, writing. In his latest book, Never Alone: A Personal Way to God, a non-fiction work published in 1994 by Doubleday, he explores his own spiritual journey.

Recently Father Girzone has been joined at the Joshua Foundation in Altamont, N.Y. by Dominican Sister Dorothy Ederer. Together they travel articulating a vision of Christian living that looks beyond the legalism and factionalism which they believe discourages far too many. Their views are based on the Gospel portrait of Jesus as compassionate, forgiving and non-judgemental. They emphasize the freedom Jesus came to bring people and describe Christ as one who "invited people to grow at their own pace rather than force changes in behavior."

Although Father Grizone's work has been criticized as simplistic, misguided and even dangerous, he insists that he loves the Church as "God's gift to the world." The "anti-establishment" flavor evident in the Joshua books, he says, is not calculated to hurt the Church but to provoke much needed change. Father Girzone hopes to convince sufficient numbers in authority that "people starving for the message of Jesus" should not have to settle for a cold and stony church bureaucracy. Judging from the broad appeal of Joshua his hopes have touched a sensitive nerve in the body of the faithful.

The Pope Speaks

Visitation Demonstrated Mary's Role In Spreading The Good News

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we now consider the mystery of the Visitation. Following the Annunciation, and now filled with the grace of the Incarnation, Mary sets out for the hill country of Judea, bringing the "good news" and messianic joy to the house of Elizabeth, her kinswoman. Mary's visit to Elizabeth is thus a prelude to the future mission of Jesus and an anticipation of the crowning of that mission at Pentecost.

St. Luke tells us that at Mary's greeting the child leapt for joy in Elizabeth's womb and that Elizabeth, filled with the Holy Spirit, cried out: "Blessed are you among women, and blessed is the fruit of your womb!" (Lk 1:41-2). These inspired words of praise have been repeated by the church in every generation in the "Hail Mary." Like Elizabeth, the church rejoices that Mary is the mother of the Lord who brought her son into the world and who constantly cooperates in this mission of redemption for all mankind.

I am pleased to greet the students of the Pontifical North American College who will be ordained deacons tomorrow. Dear young men: By ordination to the diaconate, you will be configured to Christ and sent forth as ministers of the Gospel and servants of the people of God. May you always be joyful witnesses of the grace and truth which God has bestowed upon us in Jesus his son.

As the feast of St. Francis of Assisi draws near, I also offer greetings and encouragement to the members of animal protection groups celebrating "World Animal Day."

Upon all the English-speaking visitors, especially the pilgrims from Denmark, England, Ireland, Australia, the Philippines and the United States, I cordially invoke the joy and peace of Jesus Christ our savior.

Evangelium Vitae: A Love Letter To The World

Evangelium Vitae is a love letter to the whole world. At the same time, it is a prophetic indictment of what we human beings are doing to one another at the threshold of the new millennium. Love and prophecy are not opposed. Love that deceives is neither truthful nor loving. The Apostle Paul tells us that we are to speak the truth in love. (Eph 4:15) This encyclical is a powerful example of doing just that.

Sometimes the truth is painful. Prophetic love does not pander. It tells us not what we want to hear but what we need to hear. The Old Testament prophets were calling the people of Israel back to their high destiny as the elect people of God. Criticism was driven by a love that could not betray the truth without betraying the beloved. In Evangelium

...In fact, we are our brother's keeper. Recognizing the "personal dignity" of the other, we recognize that we owe everyone "respect, generosity, and service."

Vitae the Holy Father says a firm "no" to this and a firm "no" to that. It would be a great mistake to think the message is essentially negative. Every "no" is premised upon a prior and greater "yes."

This is nothing less than a yes to the human project, to which God is irrevocably committed through Jesus Christ. The teaching of Evangelium Vitae and of the Catholic Church is aptly described as prophetic humanism. Such humanism knows that the choice is not between the will of God and the well-being of humanity. Rather, the will of God is for our well-being, and our well-being is in doing the will of God.

At the dawn of the modern era, Thomas Hobbs and other thinkers of the secular Enlightenment said that a relatively humane world could only be secured by people forming a "social contract" based upon self-interest. In the 18th century, intellectuals invested their hope for the human future in bringing everything under rational control; in the 19th they looked to scientific and technological progress. After the First World War, much of humanity turned its eyes towards various ideologies. None of this prevented the century that is now coming to an end from being the most lethal in all of human history.

This terrible history is the background for Evangelium Vitae. It teaches us that if we are to turn from death to life in the third millennium, we must learn that a humane society cannot be secured on the basis of calculated self-interest, nor by technological and scientific progress, nor by grand ideological schemes. The turn toward life requires that each one of us, one by one, reject the response of Cain when God asked him about his brother, Abel. In fact, we are our brother's keeper. Recognizing the "personal dignity" of the other, we recognize that we owe everyone "respect, generosity, and service." When this is forgotten, when we value others only for their abilities or their usefulness to us, "the first to be harmed are women, children, the sick and suffering, and the elderly." This, says Evangelium Vitae, "is the supremacy of the strong over the weak" (no. 23) which is the way of the long, dreary, blood-drenched history of Cain and Abel that is rewritten daily.

The Gospel of Life is a call to conversion, one by one, to the Lord of life. Personal conversion is the beginning of the turn away from the culture of death and toward the culture of life. The personally converted then turn toward converting others, and each of the converted accepts responsibility for turning society itself toward life.

Evangelium Vitae sees our world standing at a turning point as crucial as any in the long history of humankind. The third millennium will witness a flowering of the culture of life or a continuing descent into the abyss of the culture of death. We Christians have the great privilege and responsibility of persuading the world to choose life — for God's sake, for our sake, for the sake of humanity. In the encyclical, Pope John Paul II quotes St. Irenaeus: "The glory of God is man fully alive."

Why Should I Bother To Vote?

With just weeks to go until this year's elections you've probably already had it with speeches and political ads, attacks and innuendo. Am I the only one using the remote to zap past these commercials brought to us by the-committee-to-elect-somebody-or-other?

But, like it or not, the political process matters. And government is too important to leave in the hands of those few who bother to stay both aware and involved.

Life and death issues justifiably grab headlines, but even the most mundane situations are affected.

Serve on a jury, collect unemployment insurance or worker's compensation, see firefighters or police officers in action and watch government in action. Put trash out for recycling, pay sales tax or apply for a passport and you're in-involved in local, state or national government.

It is difficult to think of any human activity in our society where the impact of law and politics is not felt. You don't have to be a politician to be concerned with the legislative, judicial and executive branches of our nation. Certainly, most of us are only too willing to express our opinions on questions large or small.

So why is it that so many of us don't even bother to vote?

Voters are a minority in the United States. Most people ignore primaries. A typical turnout is roughly 10 percent of the voting-age population. And in the past decade, almost half of the eligible voters have been staying home even in the general elections.

Yet ours is a nation, more than any other, founded on the recognition of Divine truths and our God-given rights. So how do we answer such apathy and indifference?

History teaches that crises often arise when citizens stop paying attention to the day-to-day doings of government.

That's a concern addressed in the U.S. Catholic Conference's document on Political Responsibility: "We need more, not less public participation. The key to renewal of public life is reorienting politics to reflect better the search for the common good and a clear commitment to the dignity of every person."

Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are God-given rights. Government possesses neither the power to confer it nor the power to usurp it. But it does have the clear duty to protect and secure it.

Most of us are comfortable with the notion that Church and State should be kept separate. But this is not the same as saying religion and politics must be kept apart. A human being does not have two consciences, one for judging religious matters and one for judging political questions. Nor does the Constitution say that only those who have no faith get to participate.

Being an active citizen means more than just voting for the sake of voting. Nobody has enough time, but make it anyway. Educate yourself on issues and make decisions based on reason and values, then write a letter, attend a meeting, be part of the process. Dare to consider what's best for others as well as yourself.

When you come right down to it, does it make any sense to call ourselves religious and American, and refuse to be part of the electorate — and the solution?

People Who Leave The Church

Q. Several of us couples were in a discussion recently concerning people who leave the Catholic Church and join another congregation.

When we studied the catechism long ago, most of us learned that if you left the Catholic Church your soul was lost. Does the Church still teach this? If not, what is the Catholic doctrine now?

A. Let's admit first of all that no one, now or in the past, knows the eternal destiny of anyone who leaves one faith to accept another.

To claim such knowledge would claim to know much more about the workings of God's grace and the condition of another person's relation to God than we will ever know this side of eternity.

We believe, if we are knowledgeable and committed Catholics, that sources of life with God and avenues to recognize and acknowledge God's love for us — the sacraments, the Eucharist, encouragements and means of prayer, the support of a community of like believers — are available in our Church in a unique and spiritually priceless way.

We believe that Jesus Christ is the mediator and revealer of these truths and, as St. Paul says, that he dwells permanently in His body, the Church, as its head (Col. 1:18).

We believe further that when God provides such knowledge and gifts for us, He has a right, as Creator and Savior, to expect and oblige us to accept them and use them.

These truths undergird the doctrine that "the Church, a pilgrim now on earth, is necessary for salvation" (Vatican Council II, Constitution on the Church, 14).

None of us needs reminding that, to put it mildly, not every person in the world agrees with what I've said.

For one thing, billions have never heard of it. Other countless millions have heard it all, but have never been able to accept it in faith.

This latter group includes, among others, Christians of Protestant denominations, whose conscientious faith decisions we obviously respect.

And we must admit that this same group includes many former Catholics, whose knowledge or experience of our faith, for whatever reason, never reached a level of personal conviction and commitment.

Others were to all appearances once committed members of the Catholic faith; but something serious, perhaps something over which they had no control, intervened somewhere to negatively affect their faith.

The Catholic Church recognizes the possibility of all these situations. Thus, the Second Vatican Council, in the same paragraph quoted above, says the following: "Hence, they could not be saved who, knowing that the Catholic Church was founded as necessary by God through Christ, would refuse either to enter it or to remain in it."

The words in the middle of that sentence are crucial. They profoundly affect what we believe about salvation and membership in the Catholic Church. The same thought is repeated often in this and other documents of our faith.

To put it plainly, therefore, because of the reasons I indicated above, Catholic doctrine acknowledges that people can in good conscience refuse to enter our Church, or choose not to remain in it, and still come to eternal life.

Here as always, the words "in good conscience" carry a load of responsibility. But again, unraveling the spiritual effects of an individual's motives and actions is God's prerogative, not ours.

Everyone Can Help Pray For Vocations

When I was installed as the Bishop of Charlotte, I soon discovered the remarkable growth in our Catholic population. While some dioceses in the United States are closing parishes, we need to open new parishes, schools and ministries. Yet, to do this requires more priests and religious. The harvest is indeed great, but the laborers are few! This year five pastors retired but only two priests were ordained. More priests will continue to retire every year. Thanks be to God, the diocese is blessed with the generous ministry of religious communities. But they too are experiencing a need for more vocations.

Father Frank O'Rourke, our diocesan Director of Vocations, zealously works to promote vocations to the priesthood and religious life. But he cannot do this alone! He needs our help. More is needed than an annual vocations sermon and distribution of vocation pamphlets. Prayer is needed! It speaks to our heart of God's love and our response to that gift! Saints have described how quiet communion with God in prayer helped them to recognize His "invitation to leave all things and follow Him."

Pope John XXIII reminded us that "the Church receives the vocations it prays for." In my first parish, there was the custom of praying during every Mass for vocations to the priesthood and religious life; the parish records reveal that 78 of its sons and daughters became priests and religious. I encourage your parish to do the same. Include a petition for vocations and a Hail Mary during every weekend Mass. In parishes that have Perpetual Adoration before the Blessed Sacrament, make your special petition that God will bless your parish family with holy vocations to the priesthood and religious life. Jesus promised miracles through prayer!

Priests and religious often speak of their parents' strong faith and love for the Church. A good Catholic home is called the priest's first seminary and the religious' first novitiate. God bless our diocese with many such homes. Parents who want happiness and success for their children need to listen to the words of Jesus, who promised eternal happiness for those who leave all things and follow Him. Surely that promise includes parents who generously offer their children to God's service.

Today the Church begs God for an increase in holy vocations to the priesthood and religious life. May our daily prayer be that God will continue to bless our diocese with many holy and zealous priests and religious.

'WILL YOU BE MY WITNESS?'

In World Mission Sunday message, Pope John Paul challenges Catholics to see link between faith and mission

Observing that "faith spurs us to be missionaries," Pope John Paul II challenged Catholics worldwide to let World Mission Sunday be the occasion to let themselves "be personally summoned by the Lord to the apostolic challenges of our time."

"Faith and mission go hand in hand," the Holy Father noted in his message for World Mission Sunday, October 20, "the stronger and deeper the faith, the more we will feel the need to communicate, share and witness to it."

On World Mission Sunday, the Pope continued, "Christ

The Propagation of the Faith is vital to sensitizing Catholics to the mission ad gentes, the Pope said.

Through this "sensitization," he continued, "every believer can have a renewed awareness of his duty to open his heart to all those in the missions who live in conditions of critical material and spiritual need."

Such awareness, the Holy Father concluded, "will certainly lead to the commitment to take responsibility for the needs of our poorest brothers and sisters."

Pope John Paul encouraged prayer for missionary vocations. He also noted that Christian witness "is marked by the unavoidable and distinctive presence of the Cross." "There can be no authentic witness without it," he added, speaking specifically near the end of his message about the "heroic witness given by new 'martyrs' who shed their blood in order to remain faithful to the Lord." In the past decade, close to 200 missionaries have shed their blood in heroic witness to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. ✠

The Witness of the Church Makes All the Difference!

The witness of the Church in Udon Thani — its bishop, priests, Religious, laity and missionaries — makes a tremendous difference among the people. "All the difference," says Bishop George Phimphisan, Redemptorist bishop of Udon Thani.

To illustrate, he tells the story of a Buddhist family in which the father, a prominent police official, was killed. The youngest child, a girl, attended the local Catholic school. "When the Sisters came to visit the family," Bishop Phimphisan says, "the little child ran to the Sisters, telling them of her sorrow. Her mother said to the Sisters, 'She did not do this with anyone else; that is how much love she has for you.'"

"That is how we evangelize," Bishop Phimphisan says, "by witnessing to people showing them, through our actions of charity, the Gospel, the new life Jesus offers, and His love. People who come into contact with me or the missionaries or the Sisters will ask, 'Why do you do this for us?' We tell them, 'Because our faith teaches us to do this. You are children of God.'" pastoral work. Redemptorist missionary Father Alfred Bradley, C.S.S.R., in sending last year's World Mission Sunday contribution from the Diocese of St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, wrote: "This past year we experienced once again the tremendous destruction of another severe hurricane. Our people have suffered a great deal. Our schools and churches sustained much damage. Our good people know from their own experience how important it is to reach out to those in need. It is our sincere hope that our small contribution to the Propagation of the Faith this World Mission Sunday will help support the urgent needs of our brothers and sisters throughout the world."

Jesus loves you and we want you to know that."

The love of Jesus has motivated one missionary in the Udon Thani diocese for the past three decades. Father Larry Patin, a Redemptorist from Grand Rapids, Mich., began his ministry there in 1965. His early missionary days were spent serving people with Hansen's disease (leprosy). These days, with their medical needs being addressed, he finds himself involved in the day-to-day struggles of the poor farmers of his parish on the Mekong River on the Thailand-Laos border. AIDS is also a big challenge in ministry.

The needs of the handicapped must be addressed as well, Father Patin notes, adding that their existence, in many cases, is just being revealed to Church workers. This is a challenge that the Church in Udon Thani is answering. Bishop Phimphisan tells of the diocesan program in which volunteers are trained to visit handicapped persons in their homes, working with them on rehabilitation, physical therapy and education.

Both Bishop Phimphisan and Father Patin emphasize the need for missionaries. "Just looking at the priests in this diocese," Bishop Phimphisan says, "there are seven or eight nationalities working here." Udon Thani has 10 local diocesan priests and 25 missionary priests.

Father Patin observes: "I work in a country where 99 percent of the people are Buddhist, and where I have the opportunity to radically change their lives, to touch them with Christ's love.

"I wake up every day with that thought," he concludes, "excited by and grateful for the possibility the Lord offers me to tell them about him."

On Sunday, Oct. 20, we will wake up knowing it is World Mission Sunday. This is our special day of the year (but not the only day of the year!) to focus on our own missionary responsibility, our own call to touch the lives of people all over the world with the love of Christ.

Last year Pope John Paul II reminded the world, in a series of talks on the universal mission of the Church, that the Church is "essentially missionary." At the very soul of the Church is that dynamism, which comes from the Holy Spirit, that unfolds preaching the Gospel, in spreading the faith and in the invitation proclaimed "to the very ends of the earth" (cf. Pope John Paul II's Missionary Catechesis, April 19, 1995).

This is shown in a concrete and effective way, the Pope says, "especially in those who, starting with the Apostles, go to regions far from their land for the sake of the Gospel." (Those like Father Patin.) The Pope continued, "Even if all are not called personally to go to mission lands, each one in the Church and with the Church has the task of spreading the light of the Gospel...Indeed, all are called to cooperate in this mission." (That is all of us.)

For many, daily life can include 50-hour weeks in the office, caring for home and family, volunteering in the parish. For others daily life may seem limited by the difficulties of illness, pain or advanced age. In the midst of whatever daily reality is ours, we are called to be missionaries, not as an "extra" in our faith lives but as the core of our being Christians.

We could wonder how to find the time, the energy, it takes to participate in the missionary task. But it isn't so much time and energy; rather, our participation is made up of faith and love expressed through prayer and sacrifice.

The spiritual and material help sought on World Mission Sunday is for the work of the Diocese of Udon Thani, and 1,000 other mission dioceses in the Developing World that depend for their basic daily support on the Propagation of the Faith. A portion of the funds gathered here in the United States on World Mission Sunday remains in our country for the work of the Home Missions.

In his message for World Mission Sunday this year, Pope John Paul II reminds us that the "Holy Spirit sends every baptized person to proclaim and bear witness to Christ to all nations...Today Christ asks each baptized person: 'Will you be my witness?'"

Dear Friends in Christ:

When Pope John Paul II visited the United States last fall, he spoke again and again of the Church's evangelizing mission, and, in particular, of the call to each one of us to be missionaries. "The Church is alive in you!" the Holy Father said. "You have received the gift of new life. You have been charged with bringing the good news 'to all creation' (Mark 16: 15)."

Day after day, throughout the year, each of us is called to be a witness for our faith in Jesus Christ, in our families, our workplaces, our parishes and diocese; indeed, to the very ends of the earth. On World Mission Sunday, we unite with Catholics throughout the world in special commitment to the missionary task that we all share. We pledge our prayers and financial help to this effort through the Propagation of the Faith.

Our sacrifices help the Church throughout the world: in Liberia, Sudan and Bosnia, where war and civil strife have meant great suffering for the Church; in Vietnam, Cambodia and Myanmar, where there are hope-filled signs for the Church; in Mongolia and Albania, where there is a renewal of the Church after years-long oppression.

In his message for World Mission Sunday this year, our Holy Father asks: "Today Christ asks each baptized person: 'Will you be my witness?'" I urge everyone in the Diocese of Charlotte to respond with great generosity to that question, offering your prayers and sacrifices through the Propagation of the Faith for the Church's missionary efforts at the Eucharist on October 20. As your generous response affects the lives and faith of our sisters and brothers in mission dioceses, it will also be a source of blessing for our own diocese as we place the worldwide mission of Jesus at the heart of our life as Church.

Prayerfully in the Lord,

+William G. Curlin

Seminarian Update

Priesthood Is A Second Career For One Seminarian

Not all calls to vocations come to people early in their lives; seminarian Matthew Leonard's calling to the priesthood came during a 10-year career in the culinary arts.

"I was a cook in the Navy for four years and a cook for six years for the Fraternal Order of Police in Washington, D.C." said the 34-year-old Virginia native.

Currently enrolled in Third Theology at St. Mary Seminary and University in Baltimore, Matthew said his discernment process began in the Navy and continued while he worked in Washington. "It slowly pulled me in with a need for increasing activity," he said. "I finally realized this (the priesthood) was what I was called to do."

After earning degrees in theology and philosophy at Franciscan University in Steubenville, Ohio, Matthew entered the seminary in Baltimore. "It's hard to answer why I chose the Diocese of Charlotte....It just felt right," he explained. "Every time I came to visit, there was such a peace about it. The people are friendly and hospitable. The more I came to visit the diocese, the better I felt about this is where I should serve."

On April 19, 1997, Matthew will be ordained to the diaconate at St. Mary's. He currently serves a parish in the Baltimore area while preparing for the future. "I'm very involved," he said, adding that he helps at Masses each weekend. "I love parish ministry and the idea of becoming a parish priest."

Matthew worked in St. Pius X parish and at the Franciscan Center in Greensboro during his first summer assignment, and spent this past summer in clinical pastoral education at Carolinas Medical Center in Charlotte. "I still don't know a lot of people, but I pray for the people of the diocese, including the ones I will serve someday. A bond is being created within me."

College Seminarian Prepares To Serve Diocese

Matthew Buettner grew up in a faithful Catholic household in Peoria, Ill., but the 20-year-old seminarian says he really did not know Jesus on an intensely personal level until the summer following his high school graduation.

Buettner is one of three college-aged men currently preparing for the priesthood as a seminarian of the Diocese of Charlotte. Studying at St. Charles Borromeo Seminary near Philadelphia, he is projected to be ordained in the year 2002. He sees the chance of attending college while in seminary as a special way of drawing closer to Christ.

National Vocation Week: A Time For Renewed Interest Father Frank O'Rourke

Greetings and peace!

As National Vocation Awareness Week again approaches, we in the Diocese of Charlotte are reminded to recommit ourselves to praying for men and women who hear the Lord's call to serve. Priests, brothers, sisters and deacons are key components of the lifeblood of today's Church. They are people of God who bring a spiritual energy to parishes from the Piedmont to the mountains.

In addition to our diocesan priests in this diocese, men and women have devoted their lives in service to 32 religious orders. The permanent diaconate comprises more than 60 men sacramentally ordained to the Church as well. Their ages and their educational, faith and cultural backgrounds vary widely, a diversity that makes us aware of the universality of God's Church. Such variety reminds us, too, that the Lord calls us at different times and stages of life.

This issue of The Catholic News and Herald includes stories of and opportunities for people hearing God's invitation to dedicate themselves to the Church in a most special way. Appearing is a list of awareness videos available through the diocesan Media Center. These resources provide valuable insight for parish groups, families and individuals interested in pursuing and encouraging vocations.

While the week of Oct. 13-19 — and this issue of The Catholic News and Herald — hopefully inspires awareness of a wide variety of opportunities to serve the Church, my particular focus is on priesthood in this diocese. In this and upcoming issues, I will introduce you to the seminarians who have been led by the Spirit to give their lives to the Church.

I am more aware than ever that the response of these men stepping forward is the fruit of much prayer of people in the diocese. I urge each of you to continue to pray for vocations and to look within your families and communities for men having those special gifts that the Church is in need of. I beseech those who hear the call to meet with a priest, brother, sister or deacon who can start and guide you in your journey.

I look forward to introducing you to our seminarians. With each comes a story of faith, and it is my hope that their profiles will continually keep your interest in vocations renewed and enthusiastic.

Father Frank O'Rourke, pastor of Holy Family Church in Clemmons, is the director of vocations for the Diocese of Charlotte. For more information on vocations, contact him at P.O. Box 130, Clemmons, N.C. 27012, (910) 766-1822.

People In The News

Missouri Native Named To Head U.S. Catholic Mission

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Sister Rosanne Rustemeyer, a School Sister of Notre Dame from Jefferson City, Mo., is the new executive director of the U.S. Catholic Mission Association. Sister Rustemeyer, who spent nine years as a missionary in Sierra Leone, West Africa, will direct the activities of the Washington-based nonprofit group, which has 620 individual and organizational members.

Worcester Priest Named To Head Bishop's Liturgy Secretariat

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Father James P. Moroney, a priest from the Diocese of Worcester, Mass., has been named executive director of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for the Liturgy in Washington. He succeeds Msgr. Alan Detscher, who had headed the secretariat since April 1994. Msgr. Detscher was to return to his home diocese of Bridgeport, Conn., in October after concluding a three-month sabbatical. Ordained in 1980, Father Moroney had been associate director of the secretariat since February. Before that he was pastor of Mary, Queen of the Rosary Parish in Spencer, Mass.

Fifth-Grade Transplant Patient Connected To Classroom By Computer

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (CNS) — "You're making history, Katelynn." As Sister Lillian Reilly, principal of St. Thomas the Apostle School in West Springfield, spoke those words in early September, fifth-grader Katelynn Battista may have become the first student in the U.S. Catholic school system to return to the classroom through the technology of interactive video computer schooling. That statement from Sister Reilly, a Sister of St. Joseph, was met with a giggle from 10-year-old Katelynn, who appeared on a small monitor placed atop a desk at the right rear of the classroom. Katelynn underwent a bone marrow transplant June 13, and one of the restrictions of her recovery period was that she could not attend school for one year. So the school came to her via computer and fax machine.

Quebec Premier Bourassa Dies, Worked To Keep Quebec In Canada

OTTAWA (CNS) — Canadians joined together to remember former Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa as the man who chose not to take Quebec out of Canada. The four-time premier died of melanoma, a form of skin cancer, at Montreal's Notre Dame Hospital Oct. 2. He was 63. Bourassa, a Catholic, was first diagnosed with the disease six years ago. Though he initially entered politics to create jobs and improve Quebec's economy, the Montreal-born Bourassa was cast into an intense sovereignty debate. In 1974, during his second term, Bourassa's government passed the Official Languages Act that made French the official language of the workplace and the civil service. Angry Anglophone and immigrant Quebecers joined with separatists in defeating him at the polls in 1976.

Dominican Nun Receives Extension Society Award

CHICAGO (CNS) — Dominican Sister Maria Sarto Moreau received the Lumen Christi Award, given each year by the Catholic Church Extension Society, for her missionary work on the southern part of the 25,000-square-mile Navajo Reservation in eastern Arizona. Sister Moreau, 63, received the award from the Chicago-based society Sept. 27. She has worked among the Navajo for 23 years. Prior to that, she taught school for a year in her native Maine and was a language teacher for eight years in Tokyo, Kyoto and Sendai, Japan. Once assigned to the Arizona mission, Sister Moreau immediately began learning the Navajo language. "I promised myself that as soon as I came, I could learn the language so I could speak with the people. I delved into it on day one," she told Extension, the society's monthly magazine.

Amarillo Bishop Receives 1996 Bishop O'Neill Award

TORONTO (CNS) — Bishop Leroy T. Matthiesen of Amarillo, Texas, publisher of the West Texas Catholic diocesan newspaper, is the 1996 recipient of the Bishop Arthur J. O'Neill Award. The award, presented Sept. 26 at the combined Midwest-Eastern regional convention of the Catholic Press Association in Toronto, recognizes exemplary support among Catholic bishops, archbishops and cardinals for the Catholic press and for editors of Catholic publications. The honor is given by the staff of The Observer, newspaper of the Diocese of Rockford, Ill., and is named for Bishop Arthur J. O'Neill, who headed the diocese from 1968 to 1994.

World And National News Briefs

NCCB Official Says Church Must Practice Economic Justice

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (CNS) — "The dignity of the human person and the option for the poor" must guide the church's own economic activity, Mercy Sister Sharon A. Euart told a national gathering of Catholic diocesan fiscal managers in Albuquerque. Sister Euart, associate general secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, told the group that the bishops are working on a short list of 10 ethical principles for economic life. "Maybe these 10 points should be on our wall or on our desk as we make the hard choices every day," she said in her Sept. 30 address. The set of principles, to be discussed and voted on by the bishops at their national meeting in November, begins with statements that "the economy exists for the person, not the other way around" and "all economic life should be shaped by moral principles."

Village Offers Special Care To Mentally Retarded

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — Don Guanella Village has to be one of the great success stories in child and adult care in the history of the Philadelphia Archdiocese. The village, outside the city of Philadelphia in Springfield, consists of two parts: Don Guanella School, which cares for and teaches mentally retarded boys; and Cardinal Krol Center, which continues to provide a sheltered environment for them once they have reached age 21. It also provides some educational services for Divine Providence Village, a sister institution nearby for mentally retarded girls and women.

Pope Beatifies 16, Including Christian Brother, Polish Martyrs

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Before entering the hospital Oct. 6 for an appendectomy, Pope John Paul II placed 16 people one step closer to sainthood. Pope John Paul beatified the Irish founder of the Christian Brothers, two women religious who headed institutes for families and children, and 13 Polish Catholics, whom he declared martyrs for the faith. The pope used the occasion to address problems in Northern Ireland, where an abandoned cease-fire has led to renewed violence and diminished prospects for peace. "Let us all pray that the Irish people will put tension and conflict behind them and go on to build a brighter and more serene future for the younger generation," the pontiff said. "Nothing is lost through peace; everything can be lost through violence."

PLO Envoy Says Israel Has Turned Its Back On Peace

ROME (CNS) — A Palestinian envoy, in Rome for talks with Vatican officials, said recent Israeli "provocations" show that the government of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has effectively turned its back on the peace process. "Palestinians are under tremendous shock today. We tried collectively to play by the rules of the game, only to discover that it's a game with no rules," Afif Safieh, the representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization to the Vatican, said in an interview Oct. 7. He made the comments after renewed Israeli-Palestinian violence left more than 70 people dead in Jerusalem and the West Bank. The conflict broke out after Israel opened a controversial archeological tunnel near Muslim holy sites in Jerusalem.

Hundreds of Palestinians and Christians stand in Jerusalem's Old City Sept. 29, meters away from the exit door of the controversial tunnel which passes from a Jewish holy site to the Moslem quarter of the Old City. The demonstration was peaceful, calling for an end to clashes between Palestinian and Israeli security forces.

St. Lucien Church

SPRUCE PINE — A small number of Catholics lived in the Spruce Pine area during the 1920s, but one of the faithful in particular, who had family ties in Tennessee, was indirectly responsible for bringing regularly celebrated Masses to the mountain town.

Margaret Wilson Tappan, a resident of Johnston City, Tenn., and grandmother of Spruce Pine citizen Jack Tappan, suggested to a local priest to make weekly train trips to Spruce Pine to celebrate Mass. The priest began these journeys in 1928, when he said Mass at a hotel in town. On a monthly basis, a Jesuit father from Revere offered Mass at the hotel as well.

In March 1935, Bishop William J. Hafey received a gift of property from Ella Clapp Thompson, an Episcopalian from New York, on which the present church stands. A house on the property was remodeled to ready it for a chapel and priest's residence.

Named St. Bernadette, it became the first Catholic church to serve Mitchell, Avery and Yancey counties. The first Mass was celebrated there on June 28, 1935, by Father Thomas Carney, appointed administrator by the bishop.

When Father Stephen Sullivan assumed the pastorate at St. Bernadette, he began making plans to build a new church and rectory. Construction began in November 1939, and the church was completed in April of the next year.

At the order of the bishop, the church was renamed St. Lucien because the principal donors placed as a condition of their gift that the church be christened in memory of their daughter, Lucien Price. The new church and rectory were dedicated and blessed on Aug. 17, 1940.

No sooner than Spruce Pine had its church, a 30-seat chapel was being built in nearby Linville. Father William Kuder, in March 1942, was named pastor of both churches, and Linville's new St. Patricia became a mission of the Spruce Pine parish.

Father Walter Higgins was named pastor of the Spruce Pine and Linville churches in 1951, and was celebrating Mass in Burnsville as well by mid-decade.

Glenmary fathers took responsibility for the churches in 1956. An energetic period of evangelization and building followed: Sacred Heart Church was constructed in Burnsville; St. Lucien Church was renovated; catechetical classes and preaching took place in communities throughout the area.

The Glenmary priests remained until 1968. Diocesan priests have served the Spruce Pine parish since then.

The church was again remodeled in the late 1960s, and in the years following catechetical classes were begun and expanded.

In 1980, a locally crafted altar was purchased for the church. Two years later, Father John Pagel was appointed to the parish and immediately expanded the CCD program and other parish- and community-level activities.

Increasingly larger crowds at Mass — both residents and visitors — led the parish to plan a building program in 1985, which involved the construction of a new rectory and an expansion of the church. Ground was broken for the rectory in 1987 and the house was completed within six months. The former rectory was transformed into the parish social hall, complete with offices and classrooms.

Meanwhile, Father Pagel also turned attentions to building a new church in Linville. The diocese purchased land facing Grandfather Mountain in November 1984, and three years later construction was begun. The first Mass at the new 300-seat church, named St. Bernadette, was celebrated on New Year's Eve in 1988.

The Spruce Pine pastorate assumed responsibility of the new Linville mission. Sacred Heart Church had been elevated to parish status in September 1986, while St. Patricia, which no longer adequately provided for the local and visiting Catholics in the area, was returned to its donating family by the diocese.

St. Lucien parish has experienced continued growth over the past 10 years. Expansions and renovations to the church more than doubled its seating capacity and improved the facility. Also, a house adjacent to the property was purchased and the parking lot was paved. An active faith formation program has been developed during the tenure of the present pastor, Father Aloysius D'Silva, and he has also overseen the professional landscaping of the church grounds. In addition, the "house next door" has been tailored for use as a parish center.

Nearly 70 years have passed since those first Masses were celebrated in Spruce Pine by a Tennessee priest. Since then, St. Lucien Church has both epitomized and promoted evangelization of the Catholic Church in the North Carolina mountains.

Nobel Prize-Winning Bishop Credits People, Church

By NANCY HARTNAGEL

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The first Catholic bishop to win the Nobel Peace Prize said the award is a recognition of those with whom he has struggled for peace.

"This is a recognition, not of me, but of all the people of Timor, for the Catholic Church which works in Timor, and for all those who work for peace and reconciliation between people," said Bishop Carlos Filipe Ximenes Belo in a statement issued Oct. 11 in Rome by his order, the Salesians.

The 48-year-old apostolic administrator of the Diocese of Dili, East Timor, who has been twice nominated for the award, was celebrating Mass in Dili at the time of the announcement.

He told reporters he learned about the prize after Communion. "I can say that I am surprised, but at the same time, not," he said. "I am surprised because there are many other people in the world who deserve this recognition more than I do. I am not surprised because I live the ordinary life of a bishop and all events are the same before God."

Bishop Belo shares the 1996 prize with Jose Ramos-Horta, 51, an exiled East Timorese activist based in Australia. They will receive the $1.2 million award at a Dec. 10 ceremony in Oslo.

A Salesian spokesman said, "The Nobel prize will be an important support for the work the entire Timor Catholic Church and its bishop are contributing towards an oppressed minority."

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said Bishop Belo's award "constitutes a recognition of his activity as a man of the church, marked by the untiring search for dialogue always aimed at peaceful solutions."

Bishop Daniel P. Reilly of Worcester, Mass., chairman of the U.S. bishops' Committee on International Policy, called the shared prize "a cause for true rejoicing."

The Nobel committee, which announced the winners Oct. 11 in Oslo, Norway, accused Indonesia of persecuting the people of East Timor, according to an Associated Press report. The committee said the prize was given to "spur efforts to find a diplomatic solution to the conflict in East Timor based on the people's right to self-determination."

Bishop Belo has been a champion of human rights for the East Timorese.

In a 1986 pastoral letter, he sharply criticized the Indonesian government for its East Timorese birth control program, charging that family planning workers were distributing contraceptives indiscriminately to poor people who were inadequately informed about the program.

The bishop was instrumental in bringing the East Timorese situation to the attention of the international community following a 1991 massacre in which troops shot and killed up to 200 marchers at a funeral procession in Dili, and again in 1994, after hundreds of mainly Catholic protestors were beaten by police.

In 1994, Bishop Belo said Indonesia had turned East Timor into "hell" through arrest, intimidation and Islamic proselytizing among the territory's Catholics. East Timor is 89 percent Catholic, while Indonesia has the world's largest Muslim population.

East Timor, a Portuguese colony for four centuries, occupies half of Timor, an island in the Malay Archipelago northwest of Australia. Indonesia invaded East Timor during a civil war in 1975, after East Timor declared its independence from Portugal, and annexed it as the country's 27th province in 1976. The other half of the island, formerly a Dutch colony, is now Indonesian Timor.

Neither the Vatican nor the United Nations has recognized the annexation and most countries still view Portugal as territorial administrator. Many in East Timor also do not accept the legitimacy of Indonesia's claim, and the territory has endured 20 years of guerrilla warfare and repeated reports of human rights violations.

In a statement issued in Washington, Bishop Reilly recalled that the U.S. Catholic Conference issued major policy statements on East Timor in 1987 and 1994, "expressing solidarity with Bishop Belo and with the church and people of

Post Crusade Rally Is A Celebration Of Faith, Light

By JOANN KEANE
and MIKE KROKOS

CHARLOTTE — With a little help from a native son evangelist, the Catholic Church envisions new members.

Last month, the Billy Graham Crusade in Charlotte brought nearly half a million people together in faith. The crusade altar calls beckoned more than 22,000 towards the pulpit with encouragement to explore the fullness of Christian doctrines. The faithful filled out cards specifying denominational interest, and those cards were forwarded to churches throughout the city.

More than 1,000 expressed interest in the Catholic Church. And on Oct. 11, nearly 300 stepped closer to the Church during a welcoming prayer service at St. Matthew parish.

"Who can love us like Jesus? Who can forgive us like Jesus?" Bishop William G. Curlin queried those making the spiritual journey. "We come here tonight for many different reasons. I come as your shepherd, asking God to make me a better person and to give me the strength to fight my weaknesses."

"Some of you come because you are victims of a broken marriage or have other heartaches in your life. For some of you, it has been years since you've been to a church, and you're saying to yourself, 'things are so different.' You think the Church doesn't want you," the bishop continued. "The Church does want you; Jesus wants you."

"Tonight we can meet Him here in the sacraments, in the Church and in each one of us," Bishop Curlin added.

Spiritan Father Ed Vilkauskas, diocesan director of evangelization and pastor at Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Monroe, invited those who stepped forward at the crusade to commit their lives to Christ and renew their baptismal vows during the St. Matthew prayer service.

Bishop Curlin also called them forward to receive the light of Christ. From a singular candle, the flame ignited the faith, as candle passed from person to person until the dimly lit parish glowed with a newfound spirituality.

Present were non-Catholics exploring the mother Church, former Catholics with a desire to return to their roots, and practicing Catholics seeking a deeper relationship with Christ.

Brad Labarre, a student at Central Piedmont Community College, made the decision "to turn his life over to Christ" at the crusade. Although he was not brought up in any particular faith as a youngster, Labarre feels drawn to the Catholic Church.

"I feel comfortable here," he said, adding he has begun visiting a priest for spiritual guidance. "I hope to join the Church sometime in the future."

Following the prayer service, participants gathered in the parish hall for fellowship and the opportunity to peruse literature from 11 parishes, as Charlotte, Mooresville, and Monroe parish representatives offered hospitality and a simple message that the Church can be a true home for them.

"The parish response has been excellent," Father Vilkauskas said. "They welcomed the people beginning a new life in the church."

This is only the start of the journey for those who recommitted their lives to Christ, Father Vilkauskas added. "We plan to write follow-up letters to all participants saying we hope they have been in contact with their parish and become more involved," he said.

Results of the evangelization efforts may be measured at the Easter Vigil when the Church initiates those it has welcomed with open arms.

who killed my father, my mother, my brothers. Reconcile with whom, our enemies?" I answer that as Catholics, we have no enemies, that we must always forgive as Jesus said," he said.

A spokesman for the Indonesian government expressed "regret" that the peace prize was given to Bishop Belo and Ramos-Horta, accusing the latter of "inciting and manipulating the people of East Timor."

In 1995, Bishop Belo received the John Humphrey Freedom Award for promoting human rights and was nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize.

Rep. Tony P. Hall, D-Ohio, who nominated Bishop Belo for the Nobel Peace Prize in 1994, called him "a man of tremendous inspiration who stood up for his people in the face of violent repression."

East Timor."

In congratulating Bishop Belo on behalf of the committee, Bishop Reilly extended "our prayerful wish that this award may hasten the day when the people of East Timor can live in peace and security in their own land."

Born Feb. 3, 1948, in Baucau, East Timor, Bishop Belo was ordained a Salesian priest in 1980. He was named apostolic administrator of the Dili Diocese in 1985.

In a pastoral letter before Pope John Paul II's 1989 visit to East Timor, Bishop Belo said the pope was the bishop of Dili — alluding to the see's establishment directly under the Vatican to avoid the political issue of being within the Portuguese or Indonesian bishops' conferences.

In an interview published in an Italian magazine early this year, Bishop Belo said the central message of his pastoral work is reconciliation.

"I speak of pardon, but frequently people respond: 'Pardon whom? The one

The Greatest Commandment

"When the Pharisees heard that he had silenced the Sadducees, they gathered together, and one of them tested him by asking, 'Teacher, which commandment in the law is the greatest?' He said to him, 'You shall love the Lord, your God, with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your mind. This is the greatest and the first commandment.

The second is like it: You shall love your neighbor as yourself.'" (Mt 22:34-40)

Life Chain '96 Produces More Positive Response

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

HICKORY — To some it may have seemed like an ordinary Sunday, but to the participants in the Life Chain and those who witnessed their commitment to life, Respect Life Sunday was a prayerful and grace-filled day.

Event organizer and the Respect Life Coordinator at St. Aloysius Church, Dick McDonald, was pleased with the turnout for the Oct. 6 event. In Hickory, more than 500 participants and approximately 30 churches took part. The Unifour Life Chain, which expanded to include Burke and Lincoln counties with Catawba County this year, had nearly 3,000 participants.

"There was a good response; people have been so friendly," said Pat von Drehle, St. Aloysius parishioner.

The cars passing were much more cordial than in previous years, with record numbers of smiles, honks and waves. "Hey, you all are doing the right thing!" shouted one young man from his car.

A member of a Baptist church in Granite Falls said that this was the first time in 10 years that she did not receive one single unpleasant gesture. "I think as people become more vocal, the nation will see that the majority of citizens are against abortion," she said.

In addition, there were many young faces showing their support for life. Holy Trinity Catholic Church in Taylorsville made the Life Chain a youth ministry activity. One teen mentioned how great it felt to actually do something to help the pro-life movement. Their determination and optimism was a testimony to all, a promise for the future of

Emmaus Program Broadens Ministry, Schedules Retreats

Coordinators of the Emmaus retreat program, a ministry in the Diocese of Charlotte, have scheduled three retreats in the upcoming months which mark the growth of the program as a ministry, and members look forward to continuing its development.

"We are very pleased, as it brings to fruition the hard work and prayers of many," said Emmaus coordinator Bud Yoham, a parishioner at St. Barnabas in Arden.

Father Ray Berg, spiritual adviser to the group and a team member, added, "Emmaus has been growing significantly as a retreat ministry."

Originating in Miami, Fla., nearly 20 years ago, Emmaus consists of retreat weekends focusing on personal encounters with Jesus. Coordinators have been operating the ministry in North Carolina for three years.

Yoham said the weekends are formatted around Scripture readings, with strong emphasis on the value of personal sharing by lay persons. "While we seek to share individually as to what Jesus is doing in our lives, we do not discourage the person who would rather remain quiet," he added.

Two weekend retreats take place each year, and while the ministry reaches out to both men and women, separate retreats are held. Men's retreats are Nov. 22-24, and March 7-9, 1997. The next retreat for women is April 18-20, 1997. They will be at the Living Waters Reflection Center in Maggie Valley, with Sister Jane Schmenk as retreat coordinator.

For information on the ministry and its upcoming conferences, contact Bud Yoham, (704) 665-8249 or Tom Sparacino, (704) 255-0095 for the men's retreats, and Cindy Yoham, (704) 665-8249 or Jan Coyle, (704) 254-4345. Registration deadline for the November retreat is Nov. 11.

MACS Annual Campaign To Begin

CHARLOTTE — The Fourth Annual Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools (MACS) Education Foundation Giving Campaign gets underway the week of Oct. 27, with a goal of raising $125,000 for the seven schools that make up the system.

Funds donated tend to both the current and future needs of MACS, which comprises Charlotte Catholic High School, Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School, and All Saints, Our Lady of the Assumption, St. Ann, St. Gabriel and St. Patrick elementary schools.

In addition to yearly tuition assistance and an endowment — the latter of which currently totals $40,000 — monies are allocated to particular areas of need within the schools. The 1995-96 campaign allotments have been given for a curriculum review, to the MACS 2000 project, for the expansion of Holy Trinity, to teacher grants and for technology needs.

Foundation Chairperson Dan Kuhn looks forward to this year's campaign, adding that the contributions of MACS families, friends, faculty and staff — as well as members of the local Catholic community — directly impact people's lives.

"Each year we are able to educate more and more people about the benefits of giving through the Foundation," he said. "This past year 600 families answered the call to give. We hope to see participation increase even more this year."

The campaign is set up as a pledge program with pledges collected from January through June 1997. For tax purposes, contributions may be made before Jan. 1, 1997 as well. Those who pledge may give in monthly installments or in one payment.

Jennifer Wheeler, MACS director of development, said that phone-a-thons will also take place at the schools between late November and early December.

For more information on the MACS Annual Giving Campaign or to make a contribution, contact Wheeler at (704) 331-1729.

Students Help Out With Disaster Relief

Students attending St. Leo School in Winston-Salem recently collected more than 800 canned goods, bottles of water and other non-perishable items to aid the victims of Hurricane Fran. Third-grade teacher Maureen Patti, outreach coordinator for the school, said, "We work with St. Leo Parish as much as possible to jointly serve the community and help foster stewardship among our children." Pictured are: Beth Hurley, Matthew Sechrest and Elena Schexnider, back row, left to right; Rob Hendrix and Emily Hoeing, middle row, left to right; and Alexandra Fox and Sarah Troutmann, front row, left to right.

Masses Honor Healthcare Professionals

MONROE — Healthcare professionals in the Diocese of Charlotte are invited to attend one of two Masses in honor of St. Luke, patron saint of physicians and health care professionals, on Oct. 18 or 19. Bishop William G. Curlin will preside at both Masses.

Following the services, diocesan officials plan to discuss the possible formation of local chapters of the Catholic Medical Association (Catholic Physicians Guild). According to Spiritan Father Ed Vilkauskas, diocesan director of evangelization, the purpose of the groups would be: the building up of faith through peer support; bringing some members of the medical profession back to the Church; to provide a forum for the discussion of medical moral questions, among other things.

The Oct. 18 Mass at St. Leo Church in Winston-Salem begins at 7:30 p.m. and is open to all healthcare professionals in the Triad. A reception and short presentation will follow the service.

The Oct. 19 Mass at St. Ann Church in Charlotte starts at 11 a.m. It includes a luncheon afterward (reservations are necessary).

For more information, contact Father Vilkauskas, (704) 289-2773.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Ritual At Gemelli: Pope Visits Kids With Cancer Before Leaving

ROME (CNS) — Just hours before Pope John Paul II left Rome's Gemelli hospital he had to perform a ritual.

The doctors, the patients and their parents all knew it was coming, but that did not dampen the excitement or emotion of an Oct. 15 papal visit to Gemelli's pediatric oncology ward.

After having his stitches removed in the morning, Pope John Paul paid his customary visit to "the kids next door" — as the children signed the get-well message they sent the pope after his Oct. 8 appendectomy.

The rooms of the young patients, most of whom have leukemia or brain tumors, are on the hospital's 10th floor along with a special suite of rooms reserved for papal hospitalizations.

As with his previous stays at Gemelli, the pope visited the youngsters just hours before returning to the Vatican.

He spent about 20 minutes on the ward, greeting each of the patients and their parents. He tenderly caressed cheeks and heads bald from the effects of chemotherapy and made the sign of the cross on the little ones' foreheads.

It was not a surprise visit.

"We expected him to come because every time he has been hospitalized here, he has come to our ward to see the children who have very special problems," Dr. Renato Mastrangelo, director of pediatric oncology at the hospital, told Catholic News Service.

"But more than we do, the parents expect and await his visit," the doctor said. "They get hope from him. All they want is to see the Holy Father and to have him touch their children. And that's what happened."

The doctor said there was a definite air of excitement in his ward, "but the children were happy. The excitement was not a problem at all."

For an older patient hoping to glimpse the pope as he walked out through the lobby of the hospital, connected to Rome's Catholic university, the crush of hundreds of journalists was a problem.

"Let me through, I'm sick and I want to see the pope," said the woman in a silk dressing gown and slippers as she tried to edge her way through reporters, photographers and television crews.

She did not end up in the front row, but she was close and joined the hundreds of people clapping and shouting, "Viva il papa!" ("Long live the pope") as Pope John Paul walked, unassisted, through the lobby with his primary surgeon and with Cardinal Angelo Sodano, the Vatican secretary of state.

Although the pope walked very slowly through the lobby, he seemed to find a burst of energy as he pulled himself, standing, into the sleek black convertible with the top down for a final wave to his fellow patients, who were standing on balconies and waving.

Vatican officials have not said when Pope John Paul would resume a normal schedule, although Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said the pope was expected to lead the midday Angelus prayer Oct. 20.

While a general audience Oct. 16 was clearly out of the question, Vatican officials said the pope might come to the window of his apartment overlooking St. Peter's Square to greet well-wishers missing a Wednesday audience but wanting to mark the 18th anniversary of his election as pontiff.

Doctors said the 76-year-old pope was making an excellent recovery from the 50-minute operation Oct. 8, a "textbook" appendectomy in which adhesions or scar tissues from previous surgery also were removed.

Letters

To The Editor,

The sex and violence that is portrayed by the television and movie media is of grave concern to many of us. The average person has become tolerant of bad moral behavior and the entertainment industry is, to a great degree, responsible.

A letter I wrote several months ago was accepted by the Bishops' Advisory Council. However, their feeling was not one of great enthusiasm, though it is felt that abusive sex and violence is a very serious matter.

I urge your readers to discuss the problem with each other and parish priests.

To the Editor,

You state that Billy Graham's view of the Gospel differs "somewhat" from the Catholic view (Graham Crusade Offers Opportunity For Renewal, Sept. 20). This is like saying that water differs "somewhat" from air.

Despite current rapprochement, our differences remain substantial. To cite just one: The Graham view of authority for Christian belief looks to the Bible alone. In contrast, the Catholic view has always been that this authority has two sources: Scripture and the teaching office of the Church, the Magisterium.

There are many others, including significant differences in our understanding of the sacraments. Let us continue to pursue ecumenical goals within the context of what Catholics and Protestants truly believe, rather than attempt to structure commonalities which at present do not exist.

To The Editor,

Considerable notice was given to the "Justice and Peace" conference. The words peace and justice in the program's title were accompanied by the incessant use of the word "social." Since Vatican II there has been a disproportionate, and often subtle, attempt to co-mingle sociology with theology.

Conspicuous by its absence in the agenda was any mention of abortion under the broad heading of justice. Most right-thinking Catholics will admit that abortion is a travesty of justice. What is more faithless than the crime of abortion? God forbid that abortion be excluded from justice on the grounds that it is not theological. Informed Catholics need and are entitled to a full measure of knowledge as to abortion integrated with justice leading to ultimate peace of conscience.

Additionally, two of the keynote presenters at the conference are cited in the publication Ungodly Rage. One is identified as an "influential progressive;" the other as a member of a non-canonical sisters group and associated with Catholic feminist work. I fear that our model diocese is being duped into a do-gooder program versus Catholicism that works.

In good conscience, I could not support "Faith Doing Justice."

Words Have Consequences

For 25 years I taught at least one course in Speech Communications every semester at Gannon University in Erie, Pennsylvania. And on more than one occasion a student would deliver a speech that would knock my socks off.

It happened last year when one student started by saying: "Words become actions; actions become habits; habits become character; and character becomes one's destiny."

He then went on to dazzle his classmates and me with his lucid explanation of the power that words have to shape our ideas and our lives. He captured the practical ways words influence and empower us to act — for better or for worse.

How do we treat each other? Start by asking how we talk about and to one another. Much of what we think about ourselves and our world comes prepackaged with the words we have inherited. Society and communication intimately define each other.

If you doubt the power of words, consider Helen Keller. When she made the connection between the word "water" and the cool substance flowing from a pump over her hands, she escaped the isolation of a deaf, mute and sightless body. Helen Keller's spirit and intelligence were there, waiting for language to feed her knowledge and nurture her comprehension of the world beyond her own fingertips. "That living word awakened my soul," she wrote in her autobiography, "gave it light, hope, joy, set it free!"

Words have almost unlimited power to destroy and heal. Nothing is more false than the saying, "Sticks and stones may break my bones, but words will never hurt me." More lives have been destroyed by words than by bullets, and more lives redeemed and made whole.

"Humans suppose their reason has command over their words; still it happens that words exercise authority on reason," cautioned Francis Bacon 400 years ago.

And still we believe we're in control.

Even when we try to be objective, spoken and written language is frequently told from a very subjective viewpoint colored with emotion. Language can manipulate, patronize and diminish. That's why the World Council of Churches in 1983 and the Catholic Conference of Bishops in the 1990s have wrestled so purposefully to come to terms with the issue of inclusive language in public prayer.

If ever anyone understood the meaning and effect of words it was Noah Webster, whose name has become synonymous with dictionaries. His reminder: "Language, as well as the faculty of speech, (is) the immediate gift of God."

A "Thank you" is in order for any gift. St. Paul urged the people at Ephesus to "say only the good things people need to hear, things that will really help them." That's one good way to thank God.

Why Youth Need Mass

Q. We are a small group of parents who get together often to talk about our lives and our children.

One matter we are all dealing with is going to Mass. The children don't seem to think about the Mass in the way we think we did.

"Praying is something you should do on your own, so we should not be obligated to go to Mass," is one comment. Another is, "It's better to go a few times a year and get something out of it than to go every week and be bored."

Most of them go to Mass regularly, so we think it is more looking for answers than rebelling. And some of their comments make at least a little sense. Do you have any suggestions as to how to approach them?

A. You're fortunate to have other parents like yourselves with whom to share and address concerns like these.

I'm sure that you agree that your own faith example and patience will be more influential than anything else in the long run. But a few thoughts may help.

We can begin by recalling that Mass is not just another prayer service, and that the requirement of sharing the eucharistic sacrifice with our fellow Christians (or "going to Mass") is not something new.

In the early years of Christianity, centuries before any laws as we know them existed about it, the communities of believers in Jesus expected participation in the Sunday Eucharist each week, in some ways more urgently than today.

Certain documents of those times reflect an early Christian policy. If one of their number failed to be present at the Eucharist for some weeks, with no serious reason, there could only be two explanations: Either that member had withdrawn from the community, or further instruction in the faith and the meaning of the eucharistic celebration was needed. It is obvious they believed something about the Mass that we have lost through the centuries. For them it wasn't a matter of "committing a mortal sin" by disobeying a Church rule. It was simply a conviction that one could not really understand and believe what Mass is all about, and then fail to be there.

Today the Church is trying hard to help us reclaim that conviction.

The sacrifice and table of the Eucharist — sharing the offering of Christ to the Father, uniting ourselves and our lives to his death and resurrection, and confirming that union and commitment by together receiving his body and blood in Communion — is an essential way

Jesus unites us with Himself and forms us into his family. Mass is uniquely where we learn and experience the spirit and message of Jesus. Through the Scriptures and through the language and actions in the liturgy of the Eucharist is where we identify ourselves as His body, acknowledge who are our brothers and sisters because of Him, and offer each other encouragement and support.

In an individual-centered age like ours, it is particularly difficult to grasp that in this larger sense, even at a Mass with 500 people, the presence or absence of anyone affects everyone, not least of all the individual himself or herself.

Young people, and all of us adults for that matter, need encouragement to recognize and appreciate this experience with our Lord.

Questions should be sent to Father John Dietzen, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Bullies and the Bible

This past February, two weeks after we had moved from Maryland to New Jersey, I got a call from the nurse at my son's school. Bobby had come to her office right after lunch complaining of a headache and stomach ache. When I arrived at the school, the nurse pulled me aside to let me know that it seemed the real cause of Bobby's malady was a fellow kindergartner who was bullying him in the lunch room.

As we drove home, Bobby said, "I was sitting in the lunch room next to 'Frankie' and I leaned against him really by accident when I was trading my dessert with Chris. And he pushed his elbow into my stomach and said in a mean voice, 'If you do that again, you're dead meat! And if you try and play with any of my friends, you're dead ice.'"

Bobby continued, "And I don't really know what dead ice is but I think that it's a lot like dead meat. And all during my gym class he kept trying to trip me and he would laugh when I would lose my balance. But I never fell. I wanted to leave because he was scaring me."

For me, and I suspect for many other parents, all the wonderful wisdom of "turning the other cheek," "loving our enemies" and "blessed are the peacemakers," goes right out the window when one of my children is intentionally hurt or threatened by another child. Fortunately, these feelings are only fleeting because some of the most important lessons we teach our children involve loving and forgiving people who have hurt and harmed us.

My husband, Joe, and I have always taught our children to use their words instead of their fists unless it's to protect themselves. When other children have repeatedly hurt or threatened them or their friends, we have explained that the reason a kid usually does something bad to another kid is because he doesn't feel so good about himself. We ask our kids not to spend time figuring out the reasons but to make sure they always try to work out their problems peacefully. We try not to use the word "bully" when we're talking about a child we know. As angry as a child's actions can make us, it's usually not their fault and labeling a child as a troublemaker only makes things worse for the child. In the book The Berenstain Bears Meet The Bully, we're also reminded that a bully often has a mother or father who "bullies" him or her and they need special understanding.

There are lots of reasons why children can be cruel to other children — emotional and physiological problems, stressful events in the home and even some stages of child development bring about changes in a child's behavior. Every child has his moments, but it's the repeated ridicule and put downs, the persistent punching and shoving, the ceaseless name calling that can make life absolutely miserable for the child on the receiving end.

Symposium On Aging Focuses On Ethics

By PAUL FREDETTE

Correspondent

HENDERSONVILLE — Statistics show between one-half and two-thirds of all people who have lived to the age of 65 or older are living right now, and a sampling of them could be found at the Kanuga Episcopal Conference Center recently for the 11th Annual National Symposium on Ministry with The Aging.

Nearly 300 participants from 34 states — 60 percent of them returnees and the rest newcomers spanning a wide religious and professional spectrum — gathered at this inviting woodland setting to consider the matter of "Ethics in a Graying Society."

Sister of Providence Alice St. Hilaire, a featured speaker from Yakima, Wash., viewed the symposium as "an opportunity to experience a spiritual and ecumenical entry into the real issues of aging both intellectually and personally."

Sister St. Hilaire, director of candidates for her religious community, shared her experience as a spiritual director and caregiver to seniors through a day-long retreat, "I am Them: A Retreat for Religious Elders Serving Older Adults." This was only one of seven intensives offered at the start of the four-day symposium which included plenary sessions, concurrent seminars, worship and socials conducted throughout the sprawling lakeside facility on the shores of Kanuga Lake.

Tony Lefeber, coordinator of ministry to the homebound at Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville, attended the symposium for the tenth time and still found it refreshing. "It's so uplifting and fruitful for me to be around such people," he said. "The talks, fellowship and meals together make it seem more like a retreat than a conference."

The symposium was inaugurated under the auspices of Mars Hill College over a decade ago to provide opportunities for the exchange of ideas, policies and practices among a variety of religious and health care professionals involved in ministry with the aging.

This year's keynote speaker, Dr. Andrew Achenbaum, professor of history at the University of Michigan and a research scientist and deputy director of the school's Institute of Gerontology, is no stranger to the symposia circuit. He admitted "coveting this chance to wander through such an intellectual, social and spiritual gathering."

Achenbaum's address focused on the challenge of (re)insinuating specifically religious values, principles and language into the ethical discourse about aging in our society. "We want our public square," he asserted, "not to be intruded upon by private values." Achenbaum laments that it is "culturally acceptable for religious gerontology to deal with individual aging, but it is another matter to attempt conjoining religious and public policy issues."

Dr. Stephen Sapp, professor of religious studies at the University of Miami and author of Light in a Gray Area, examined the topic: "Elders, Boomers, Xers, and the Church: Who Owes Whom What?" Like the person searching for his keys under the street light because the light was better there, Sapp argued that the "what is owed" is being sought for in the wrong place. Expressing the "what" economically to the exclusion of all else has, over the last two decades, fostered a growing inter-generational antagonism, says Sapp, that too glibly characterizes "greedy geezers devouring the social inheritance of future generations." This political climate of inter-generational push and shove, he observes, only adds to the complexities of ethical decision making.

Society, Sapp reasons, ought to recognize that the only characteristic all human beings share without exception is aging. "Where you are, I once was. Where you are, I someday will be." Noting that in 1900 only one in 25 people were 65 or older and that in just 35 years one in four (25 percent) of the population will be 65 or older, it isn't surprising to learn that recent polls show 80 percent of Generation Xers (ages 18-30) have already had personal experience with long-term care and consider it to be one of the major problems facing America.

What will be the role of growing numbers of religious elders in the Church community in coming years? Sister St. Hilaire describes it in vocational terms: "There is a strong recognition that the sense of God which provided us with such stability as we grew up is now lacking in younger people's lives. The mentoring that elders can do is very important."

Sister St. Hilaire believes religious elders are now experiencing a freedom and discovering a readiness to do this mentoring for others. She is less convinced of the capabilities of local congregations to be effective places for inter-generational sharing. "People who are raising families are running in many different directions — not really operating as families. Even our church activities divide people into age groups," she said.

Considering the thorny issues this symposium has tackled over the last decade, it's hard to imagine this one escaping their scrutiny for very long.

CHARLOTTE — Charlotte Catholic High School graduates Suzanne DuBose and Bradley Timmers were named AP Scholars by the College Board in recognition of exceptional achievement on the college-level Advanced Placement Examination. Of the more than 537,000 students who took the exam last May, only 12 percent performed at a sufficiently high level to merit such recognition.

DuBose and Timmers qualified for the award by completing three or more exams with grades of three or higher.

Mas de 300,000 personas acudieron a la cruzada de Billy Graham

Por LUIS A. WOLF

CHARLOTTE — Del 26 al 29 de septiembre más de 300,000 personas se congregaron en el estadio Ericsson en Charlotte para escuchar al Dr. Billy Graham en lo que quizá haya sido su última cruzada en las Carolinas.

Los cuatro días de la cruzada fueron algo impresionante. El jueves asistieron unas 65,000 personas. El viernes más de 72,000. El sábado fue el día dedicado a la juventud y 88,000 personas llenaron el estadio y un lote de estacionamiento donde se había instalado una pantalla gigante. A pesar de una lluvia continua durante el concierto que precedió al Dr. Graham, nadie se movió y ésta cesó cuando él comenzó a hablar. El último día, el domingo, Billy Graham terminó la cruzada con una urgente llamada a una multitud de 79,000 personas para que encontraran a Jesús antes de que fuera muy tarde.

Los cuatro días estuvieron llenos de emociones. Más de 22,000 personas, desde niños hasta ancianos, contestaron la llamada al altar que es la llamada que él hace a las personas que asisten a sus cruzadas para que bajen y se acerquen donde él habla para recibir a Jesucristo en sus corazones y hacer un compromiso con El (Jesucristo) al aceptarlo como dueño y señor. Esa llamada ha hecho que muchos que estaban alejados de sus Iglesias hayan vuelto a ellas o que los que no estaban afiliados a ninguna se hallan acogido a alguna.

Billy Graham hace hincapié en lo importante que es pertenecer a la Iglesia, pues los creyentes necesitan uno de otros.

Esta es una de las razones por la que nuestro obispo, el Monseñor Guillermo Curlin pidió a las parroquias de los 46 condados que comprenden la diócesis a involucrarse en la cruzada.

El Obispo Curlin, quien asistió a varios de los servicios, dice que el Dr. Graham es un hombre de fe extraordinaria en Jesucristo y que su figura puede traer a católicos inactivos a su fe ancestral.

El Dr. Graham es nativo de Charlotte. La casa y vaquería de su padre se encontraban a unas pocas cuadras de lo que es hoy el centro comercial de Park Road. El famoso Jim Bakker compró la casa vivienda y la mudó para Heritage Village, en Fort Mill, Carolina del Sur, donde se encuentra actualmente.

La cruzada de Charlotte fue como si Billy Graham volviera a su casa. El dijo en el sermón del jueves "yo he querido siempre volver y he pensado si Dios me dejaría vivir lo suficiente para tener otra cruzada aquí, porque esta parte del país está en mi corazón".

El Dr. Graham hizo llegar su mensaje a la multitud en forma elocuente, enfatizando, entre otras cosas, que todos somos pecadores, que tenemos que arrepentirnos de todo corazón, que Dios nos ama y nos perdona y que mandó a su hijo al mundo a morir en una cruz por nuestra redención.

El domingo hizo una llamada final para tomar una decisión por Jesús diciendo: "Dios te ama. El tiene sus brazos abiertos listos para recibirte, pero tú tienes que tomar la decisión. Tú tienes voluntad propia. Dios no aprieta un botón y tú haces lo que El dice. Tú tienes que hacer el compromiso. Tienes que tomar la decisión por ti mismo. Dios hace todo lo que puede en Jesucristo".

Al final de sus sermones miles bajaron contestando a la llamada. El domingo un niño de la parroquia de San Vicente quiso bajar, pues quería hacer un compromiso con Jesucristo. El abuelo lo acompañó y el niño habló con un consejero. Cuando terminaron el abuelo se acercó al consejero y le dijo que él había estado medio alejado de la Iglesia y quería volver a involucrarse más con su Iglesia.

Esta fue una de más de 1,000 personas que indicaron interés en el catolicismo, o que querían volver a la Iglesia católica o a ser más activas en la misma.

Durante las jornadas del jueves, viernes y domingo hubo una sección reservada para personas de diferentes nacionalidades que no entendían inglés. A ellas se les facilitó un radio con audifonos para que pudieran escuchar al Dr. Graham en su lengua nativa. Hubo traducciones a 10 idiomas simultáneamente. También hubo consejeros en todos estos idiomas.

Hay que hacer notar que hispanos católicos y de otras iglesias protestantes tuvieron parte activa en este evento como consejeros, traductores y acomodadores. Entre ellos encontramos a María Raiser, miembro de la parroquia de la Asunción en Charlotte y a Mercedes Jones, de la parroquia de Santa Teresa en Mooresville.

María, que fue una de las consejeras bilingües, expresó que esta cruzada había sido una experiencia muy bonita para ella, que le había impresionado la cantidad de personas de diferentes nacionalidades que habían asistido y la fe que tenían y, que aunque de diferentes culturas, todos trabajaban para el mismo Señor. Como consejera tuvo experiencias muy emocionantes con personas maravillosas que se han dedicado al Señor, que vinieron al frente y que oraron juntas. Esto le dio la oportunidad de expresarse a ellos, pero no como ella misma sino que fue el

Fotos LUIS WOLF

Algunos de los miles de personas que respondieron a la llamada del Dr. Graham

Señor quien le ayudó a compartir con esas personas.

Mercedes fue otra consejera bilingüe. Ella dijo que la mayor impresión y el gusto más grande que tuvo fue el estar en comunidad con tantas personas de diferentes denominaciones. Ella nunca pensó que el Señor la hubiera bendecido con la oportunidad de participar con personas de otras denominaciones y sintió su corazón unido en el Espíritu a todas esas personas. Mercedes siguió diciendo que tuvo muchas experiencias con las personas que se le acercaron. Ella dijo que Dios la bendijo cuando le dio la oportunidad de orar, hablar, llorar y traducir la oración que hizo el Dr. Graham a personas que no hablaban inglés, gente humilde, gente sencilla, gente que estaba deseosa de compartir con personas que hablaran su propia lengua. Le impresionó mucho el corazón tan abierto que tenían y la forma de aceptar al Señor.

La cruzada de las Carolinas es algo muy especial que quedará imborrable en todos, especialmente en los participantes.

La Sección de Salud de las Minorías del estado de Carolina del Norte reportó el pasado agosto que los nacimientos de hispanos y otros latinos habían tenido un incremento del 28% durante el período 1990-94, en tanto que el número de estudiantes de dichos grupos había aumentado el 135%. Dentro del período en cuestión, la cantidad de trabajadores migratorios o temporeros ha permanecido prácticamente inalterada. Sin embargo, para buena parte de la población del área de Asheville, este creciente número de "residentes" pasa inadvertido. ## Kermesse en Charlotte

REV. MR. EDWIN RODRIGUEZ

CHARLOTTE—Con motivo de la Independencia de México y para recaudar fondos para la construcción de una iglesia, se celebró el 15 de septiembre una "fiesta de pueblo" o "kermesse" en el Centro Católico Hispano de Charlotte.

Comenzaron las actividades con la celebración de la Santa Misa prosiguiendo con la "kermesse" que duró hasta las cinco de la tarde.

La fiesta estuvo animada por música de disco y música viva a cargo del Combo Latino. Todo esto animó a los asistentes a bailar al compás de una música variada y alegre.

También se presentó un ballet folklórico mexicano que vino desde Lincolnton a deleitar a todos con preciosos bailes llenos de colorido, tanto en el vestuario como en la ejecución. Esto, junto a la belleza de la tarde, hizo soñar a muchos con recuerdos de sus países de origen.

La comida fue muy variada y exquisita, pudiéndose saborear muchos platos típicos mexicanos. Los juegos y las variadas actividades mantuvieron a todos entretenidos todo el tiempo.

Fue una tarde llena de mucha diversión y alegría, donde toda la comunidad tuvo la oportunidad de compartir en un ambiente de hermandad.

Los organizadores de este evento agradecen por este medio la colaboración de todas las personas que de una manera u otra ayudaron a que esta "kermesse" fuera un éxito, especialmente a los negocios hispanos que dieron su apoyo y cooperación.

Mensaje del Padre Rev. VICENTE H. FINNERTY, C.M.

Hace poco leí este diálogo entre un niño y un adulto: "¿Rezas a Dios?" — pregunta el adulto — "Sí, cada noche" — contesta el pequeño — "¿Y qué le pides?" — "Nada. Le pregunto si puedo ayudarlo en algo".

Me pregunto qué sentirá Dios al oír a este chiquillo que no va a El, como la mayoría de los adultos, pidiéndole salud, amor, dinero o llenándole con quejas por lo mal que marcha el mundo, y que en cambio, lo que hace es simplemente ofrecerse a echarle una mano, si es que la necesita para algo.

A lo mejor, los grandes pensadores de la religión pensarán que este niño está muy equivocado. Después de todo, Dios es omnipotente. ¿Qué le puede dar un niño? Para darle algo a Dios, precisamente, tendría que ser superior o más que Dios.

Sin embargo, qué profunda es la oración del niño. Porque lo mejor de Dios no es que sea omnipotente, sino que no lo sea demasiado y que El haya querido «necesitar» de los hombres. Dios es lo suficientemente listo para saber mejor que nadie que la omnipotencia se admira, se respeta, se venera, crea asombro, admiración, sumisión. Pero que sólo la debilidad, la proximidad crea amor. Por eso, ya desde el día de la creación, El, que nada necesita de nadie, quiso contar con la colaboración del hombre para casi todo. Y empezó por dejar en nuestras manos el completar la obra de la creación y todo cuanto en la tierra sucedería.

Por eso desconcierta que muchos de los hombres y mujeres de nuestra época, en vez de alegrarse por la suerte de poder colaborar en la obra de Dios, se pasan la vida mirando hacia el cielo para pedirle que venga a resolver personalmente lo que era tarea nuestra mejorar y arreglar.

Claro que la oración de petición es muy bíblica, válida e importante. Debemos sentirnos siempre como pequeños ante su Padre, con la confianza de pedirle lo que necesitamos. Al mismo tiempo, me parece a mí que si la mayoría de las veces que rezáramos lo hiciéramos no para pedir cosas sino para echarle la mano a Dios en el arreglo de los problemas de este mundo, tendríamos ya un mundo mucho más habitable.

A menudo vivimos una actitud parecida frente a la Iglesia. No hay cristiano que en dado momento no se queje de las cosas que hace o deja de hacer la Iglesia; entiendo por «Iglesia» el Papa y los Obispos. «Si ellos vendieran las riquezas del Vaticano, ya no habría hambre en el mundo». «Si los obispos estuvieran más accesibles y los curas predicaran mejor, tendríamos una Iglesia fascinante». Pero ¿cuántos se vuelven a la Iglesia para echarle la mano?

Hermanos y hermanas, Dios coge nuestras debilidades y nos da su grandeza, la maravilla de poder ser creadores como El. Y por eso es tan apasionante esta cosa de ser humano y de construir la tierra.

Les animo, pues, a que se involucren en sus comunidades locales y que se comprometan con ellas especialmente con los miembros del Cuerpo de Cristo que más necesitan. Dejen de ser espectadores, prontos para criticar. Es mejor encender una luz que maldecir las tinieblas. ¡Echenle la mano a Dios!

Enviado del vaticano tratará posible reunión de Castro y el Papa

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (CNS)

—Un funcionario principal del Vaticano se proponía visitar a Cuba a fines de Octubre para tratar de una posible reunión entre el Papa Juan Pablo II y Fidel Castro.

La oficina de prensa del Vaticano confirmó que Monseñor Jean-Louis Tauran, secretario auxiliar de estado, viajaría a la nación isleña el 25 de octubre para efectuar varios días de charlas con funcionarios eclesiásticos y estatales.

Fuentes informadas del Vaticano dijeron el 25 de septiembre que era cada vez más probable que el Papa y Castro se reunieran a mediados de noviembre, cuando se esperaba que el dirigente cubano asistiera a una cumbre mundial sobre alimentos en Roma. Ese sería su primer encuentro.

Las fuentes agregaron que Castro no ha hecho todavía una solicitud oficial para una audiencia papal, y que no se espera que lo haga sino hasta poco antes de que comience la cumbre sobre alimentos auspiciada por las Naciones Unidas.

Las fuentes del Vaticano dijeron que el Papa lo recibiría sin duda. Pero el Vaticano no quiere que Castro use la reunión para propaganda política unilateral, de modo que está apremiando por concesiones gubernamentales sobre la libertad religiosa, aún mientras se hace el trabajo preliminar para la reunión.

El alcance de tales concesiones tiene probabilidad de estar en el programa de trabajo de Monseñor Tauran durante sus charlas en Cuba, dijeron ellos. La Iglesia de Cuba quiere un mayor espacio para funcionar en sus actividades misioneras, sociales, de enseñanza y de información en masa.

Las fuentes dijeron también que la reunión entre el Papa y Castro podría abrir la puerta para un posible viaje papal a Cuba, que ha sido debatido durante varios años. Pero agregaron que eso depende de cuán lejos esté dispuesto el gobierno de Castro a llegar en el aflojamiento de las limitaciones religiosas.

Los planificadores de los viajes papales hicieron énfasis en que ni siquiera están haciéndose ahora planes tentativos para un viaje a Cuba. El próximo viaje del Papa al extranjero está fijado para fines de abril próximo, y él no tiene señalado hallarse en la vecindad de Cuba hasta que vaya al Brasil en octubre próximo para una festividad mundial de la familia.

Debido a que el Papa no se propone permanecer mucho tiempo en el Brasil, ésa sería la época más probable para una visita papal a Cuba, que tiene 4.5 millones de católicos, dijeron las fuentes del Vaticano.

Carta que recibimos

El grupo juvenil Cristo Rey de Yadkinville le da la bienvenida e invita a todos a participar con ellos y a pasar ratos agradables y placenteros compartiendo en las actividades que realizamos.

A continuación detallamos algunas de las actividades e ideas que hemos realizado desde el año pasado:

Aprendimos cosas que nos ayudan a que el grupo sea más eficaz y dé ayuda a nuestros semejantes.

Nuestra compañera Melissa nos enseñó como hacer cruces y corazones para vender y recaudar fondos. Aprendimos a comunicarnos, respetarnos, amarnos como hermanos que somos. Hemos tratado de ayudarnos, en nuestra medida, cuando hemos tenido algún problema moral o físico.

Ayudamos a la Iglesia vendiendo "antojitos" típicos de nuestras regiones después de cada Misa. Algunos nos ponemos en la puerta de la Iglesia para recoger una hora de nuestro salario. Otros sirven de ministros de hospitalidad, de lectores, de colectores de la limosna para el ofertorio y una de nuestras compañeras es ministro de la Eucaristía. Algunos sábados nos turnamos para cortar el pasto.

Uno de nuestros grandes deseos es recoger más dinero para comprar artículos religiosos para vender y levantar fondos para la construcción de nuestra Iglesia.

Nuestras actividades han sido muy placenteras. Hemos participado de un retiro espiritual. Tuvimos el gusto de tener al grupo The Holy Family con nosotros en nuestra Iglesia y de ellos aprendimos cosas muy interesantes para el bien de nuestra Iglesia y grupo.

Hemos tenido el apoyo de nuestros padres, los que nos han dado ideas muy beneficiosas para el bien de nuestro grupo.

Finalmente le damos las gracias a nuestro sacerdote por todo el apoyo que nos ha dado para que el grupo siga creciendo para bien de la comunidad y de la Iglesia.

Por una paz divina para nuestros hermanos,

Grupo Juvenil Cristo Rey

Caritas Cuba ve límites sobre ayuda humanitaria perjudicándole

NUEVA YORK (CNS) — Las limitaciones estadounidenses sobre el embarque de ayuda humanitaria a Cuba están perjudicando al trabajo de Caritas allí, dijo el presidente de la entidad de socorro.

Monseñor José Siro González Bacallao, Obispo de Pinar del Río, hablando en español mediante un intérprete, dijo que él estuvo pidiendo durante una visita el regreso a la política de permitir vuelos directos de ayuda desde los Estados Unidos.

El Obispo agregó que otro objetivo de su visita fue el poner al día a los cubano-americanos sobre la situación en Cuba.

Al hablar con ellos, dijo él, encontró una falta de información sobre los acontecimientos actuales y el modo de que ellos podrían dar ayuda al trabajo de la Iglesia, dijo él.

Monseñor González fue entrevistado el 24 de septiembre durante una visita en Nueva York a la Junta de la Misión Médica Católica, que ha enviado medicinas por valor de millones de dólares para ser distribuidas por Caritas en Cuba.

El estuvo comunicándose con una diversidad de grupos religiosos, gubernamentales y comunitarios en las zonas de Miami, Washington, Baltimore y Nueva York antes de regresar a su país el 27 de septiembre.

El Obispo describió una situación que permitía a la Iglesia de Cuba prestar servicios al pueblo necesitado, a pesar del sistema de control gubernamental.

El dijo que las relaciones entre la Iglesia y el estado en Cuba no eran "normales", pero que habían cambiado desde la falta de tolerancia para la Iglesia a una situación de mayor comprensión mutua.

La Iglesia de Cuba es "vigorosa, llena de vida, llena de esperanza y continúa creciendo", dijo Monseñor González. El porcentaje de niños bautizados ha aumentado en gran medida, hizo notar el Obispo.

La ayuda le llega a la Iglesia desde los Estados Unidos y otras naciones tales como Alemania e Italia, dijo él.

Monseñor González, que ha sido el presidente de Caritas Cuba desde febrero, fue acompañado por el director ejecutivo de la agencia desde su comienzo, Rolando Suárez Cobián. El director brindó una descripción más detallada de los programas de ayuda de la agencia a los niños, los ancianos y otras personas con necesidades especiales.

Suárez dijo que, cuando empezó el debate sobre la obtención de medicinas procedentes de la Junta de la cubano querían presentar una lista de las medicinas que ellos preferían y pedir a Caritas Cuba que las entregara.

Pero Suárez, advirtiendo que todos los hospitales cubanos son propiedad del gobierno, dijo que Caritas negoció para seleccionar a ciertos hospitales para el uso de sus medicinas y para controlar la distribución. De modo que ha sido capaz de dar seguridad de que la ayuda llegaba a los más necesitados, dijo él.

El dijo también que los funcionarios del gobierno quieren las medicinas más especializadas y costosas, pero que Caritas insiste en procurar las clases que necesitan los mayores números de personas.

Por ejemplo, un embarque de insulina fue dirigido a los niños diabéticos, dijo él. Un embarque de antibióticos fue la única cantidad de ellos que había en el país cuando fueron recibidos, y "se salvaron muchas vidas", informó él.

El gobierno de Cuba permitió que la Iglesia, que había suministrado ayuda humanitaria más limitada, organizara formalmente a Caritas en 1991, cuando la pérdida del apoyo desde la Unión Soviética y otros ex-miembros del bloque comunista estaba produciendo un período de dificultades graves.

Ahora, dijo Suárez, las autoridades cubanas aceptan a Caritas como parte permanente de la vida de la Iglesia, no sólo como un arreglo temporal.

Los visitantes cubanos fueron acompañados por Chris Gilson, coordinador del programa de los Servicios Católicos de Socorro (CRS en inglés) para Cuba, que es la dependencia de los obispos estadounidenses para el auxilio y el desarrollo en el exterior.

Monseñor José Siro González Bacallao, Obispo de Pinar del Río

El dijo que el embarque directo de suministros humanitarios a Cuba fue permitido hasta que el Presidente Clinton detuvo todos los viajes directos como reacción a que los aviones de combate cubanos derribaron a dos aviones civiles de un grupo estadounidense contrario a Castro el 24 de febrero último.

En consecuencia, los costos del transporte — el último embarque de medicinas fue enviado a través del Canadá — son mucho mayores ahora, dijo Gilson.

Este agregó que, además de hacer los arreglos para el embarque de suministros humanitarios, CRS deseaba ayudar a Caritas a desarrollar proyectos para el empleo de cubanos, aumentar la fuerza de su organización y llevar su relato de regreso a los Estados Unidos.

"Hay mucha información equivocada", dijo Gilson. Tan difícil como es la situación para la Iglesia, es mejor que hace un año o dos, dijo él.

Martín Luna con su hija Jessica Marie y su esposa Christine (derecha) en la iglesia de San Eugenio en Asheville.

indispensables para su labor con la creciente comunidad hispana del área durante estos años", dice el Padre Frank Cancro. Los Luna se sorprendieron mucho cuando pudieron apreciar la gran cantidad de hispanos de la zona de Asheville, lo que comprobaron durante la celebración de su matrimonio en 1987.

Desde que Luna, natural de La Barca, estado de Jalisco, México, se estableció en los Estados Unidos, por el año 1985, él ha sido el padrino, de una u otra forma, de un gran número de hispanos pertenecientes a su parroquia. Christine, nacida en Miami y criada en Asheville es de ascendencia colombiana por parte de madre y al igual que su esposo, es bilingüe. Ambos dedican mucho tiempo, talento y energía a ayudar al desarrollo de una comunidad de fe activa entre los hispanos de Asheville y localidades vecinas.

Martín Luna llegó por primera vez a los Estados Unidos después de graduarse de ingeniero en la Universidad de las Américas de Puebla, México. Aquí, trabajó dos años con Arcadia Farms, compañía productora de refrescos establecida en Arden. Más tarde, pasó a ocupar un puesto con Telemon Corporation, de Hendersonville, en calidad de consejero de empleo, ya que prefería trabajar con individuos. Desde dicho puesto tuvo la oportunidad de ayudar a los trabajadores hispanos, en su mayoría empleados en labores agrícolas temporales, en su esfuerzo por encontrar empleos más permanentes. Fue en el desempeño de ese cargo que conoció a Wilfredo Morel, el primero de los ministros de acercamiento a los hispanos de aquella zona, que se hallaba en Asheville dirigiendo una evaluación de las necesidades en esa área. Morel, que permaneció solamente unos meses en la referida labor antes de trasladarse a Nueva York, pudo apreciar la capacidad bilingüe de Luna, su facilidad para relaciones impersonales y su sincera preocupación por la comunidad hispana, y lo recomendó para que ocupara el cargo que él dejaba vacante.

Cuando Luna comenzó a trabajar

con Servicios Sociales Católicos en 1971, continuó la evaluación iniciada por Morel, y además ofreció toda clase de servicios a los hispanos, especialmente los relacionados con el proceso de inmigración. Pronto se extendió la noticia de que Luna era una persona dispuesta a ayudar, con quien se podía tratar fácilmente. Consecuentemente, se pidió ayuda en toda clase de traducciones, problemas del idioma y dificultades de comunicación entre "anglos" e hispanos.

Luna recuerda con satisfacción y cariño su trabajo con los SSC. Los episodios más cómicos fueron, en muchas ocasiones, los que más lo amedrentaron, porque "no sabía que hacer" como él admite en tono de disculpa. "Recuérdese que nunca estudié materia alguna relacionada con los servicios sociales, así que en la mayoría de estos casos sólo usé el sentido común y los dictados de mi corazón". Mientras estuvo trabajando para el SSC, la gente lo llamaba a su casa a todas horas, pidiendo ayuda y aunque esto resultara inconveniente para su familia, debido a la interferencia que ocasionaba en su vida privada, él lo aceptó como parte de lo que se nos pide como católicos: "ayudar al prójimo cuando nos necesita".

Martín y Christine tienen dos hijos: Jessica Marie de 8 años y David Martín de 3 y aunque ya él no trabaja con SSC, ellos continúan, como siempre, al tanto de la creciente comunidad hispana. Inicialmente, los Luna ayudaban en la preparación de la Misa mensual en español de la iglesia Santa Juana de Arco de Asheville y durante el mismo período también ayudaban con una Misa similar, que ahora se ha vuelto una liturgia semanal regular, en la iglesia de la Inmaculada Concepción de Hendersonville.

Por la época en que el Padre Cranco asumió el rectorado de San Eugenio, las necesidades pastorales de los hispanos de la cercana vecindad se hacían más evidentes. Así pues, dice Luna: "el establecimiento de una liturgia mensual regular ha sido una inmensa ayuda ya que la celebración de la Misa en español ha atraído a gente de España, Colombia, Argentina y Puerto Rico, además de la comunidad mejicana, que es la mayoría". - Tanto Luna como su esposa creen que la formación y desarrollo de una comunidad de fe madura depende de la existencia de una liturgia semanal regular.

Recientemente se ha organizado una comisión de estudio parroquial para mejorar la evaluación de las necesidades actuales de la población hispana. Los resultados de tal estudio revelan los siguientes datos: un mínimo de 75 familias hispanas con residencia fija en el área, están interesadas en la educación religiosa, la preparación presacramental de sus hijos y también en los estudios bíblicos, además de la liturgia semanal y la celebración de los sacramentos. El Padre Cranco tiene una opinión muy elevada del ministerio laico de matrimonios como el de los Luna y lo expresa así: "Tienen todo el respeto de la comunidad, sus intuiciones ministeriales son precisas y tienen la capacidad de envolver a otros para que asuman posiciones directrices, por medio de la delegación de autoridad".

Videos

"Antonia's Line" (1995)

Multigenerational tale of a fiercely independent Dutch woman (Willeke van Ammelrooy) whose lesbian daughter and eventually her granddaughter and great-granddaughter live on the matriarch's farm where all confront emotional crises over the decades, drawing strength from their female solidarity. Writer-director Marleen Gorris celebrates non-traditional families and the resilience of women in a whimsical story overpopulated with village eccentrics, misfit clerics and disposable men. Subtitles. Several bedroom scenes with nudity, occasional violence including rape, an off-screen suicide and an instance of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Cafe au Lait" (1994)

Zany French farce set in Paris where a young West Indian (Julie Mauduech) informs her two lovers — one African (Hubert Kounde), the other Jewish (Mathieu Kassovitz) — she is pregnant, whereupon the two men cease their rivalry to look after the woman they love until the baby is born. Also directed by Kassovitz, the situation is a comic fantasy emphasizing the male responsibilities that come with pregnancy and the common bond of humanity which transcends race. Subtitles. Unwed pregnancy, occasional comic violence and a character given to rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Craft" (1996)

Cliche-ridden horror clunker in which four Catholic high school girls-turned-witches (led by Fairuza Balk) cast evil spells on classmates until one of the quartet (Robin Tunney) tries to stop them from doing further harm. Directed by Andrew Fleming, the occult nonsense employs thousands of snakes and maggots, though some of the spells have deadly results. Stylized violence, brief sexual innuendo, several crude expressions and an instance of rough language as well as a profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Flipper" (1963)

After a young boy (Luke Halpin) rescues an injured dolphin, his fisherman father (Chuck Connors) releases it back into the sea but later, when his son's life is in danger, the grateful dolphin returns to save the lad. Directed by James B. Clark, the story is simple but well-told, the scene-stealing title character is as personable as any in the cast and the Florida nature footage, including a hurricane, is very watchable. Solid family fare with special appeal for youngsters. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences.

Matthew Broderick stars as Richard, a brilliant physicist who falls in love with a tuberculosis patient (Patricia Arquette), in the romantic drama "Infinity." The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Michael Collins

Epic Drama Captures Emotion Of Irish History

NEW YORK (CNS) — The life and death of a controversial Irish patriot is dramatized in the sweeping, emotionally engrossing epic, "Michael Collins" (Warner Bros.).

The picture is about a man who fought brilliantly for Ireland's independence, got caught in the middle of his splintered party's politics and paid the price for it.

It is also a history of the crowded events that begins with the crushing of the Easter Rising in 1916 and the execution of its Republican leaders, except for U.S. citizen Eamon De Valera, who was imprisoned.

Also sent to prison for his part in the Rising, Collins was released in 1918 and soon resumed the armed struggle against the British.

He did so by organizing the Irish Volunteers, an underground force which struck British targets, attacked the Royal Irish Constabulary and murdered informers.

Without financial resources, Collins obtained arms by raiding police barracks, relied on surprise to overcome superior forces and used his imagination in operations such as smuggling De Valera out of prison disguised as a woman.

The British responded to Collins' exploits by sending the Black and Tans, a paramilitary force notorious for its brutality, to stamp out Republican sympathies among the Irish populace.

While they were doing their worst, De Valera was in the United States raising money for the cause, and, by the time he returned, Collins' hit-and-run tactics had brought the British Empire to the point of seeking a truce.

Despite his reluctance, Collins was sent to London by De Valera to head the Irish delegation in peace negotiations.

When Collins returned with a treaty establishing an Irish Free State, excluding Ulster and requiring allegiance to the British Crown, De Valera repudiated it and the Republican cause was split.

Collins argued the Free State was a "stepping stone" on the way to full independence, but De Valera saw it as "treason" and the result was civil war.

Hoping to stop the fighting between old comrades in the Republican cause, Collins set off for Cork to arrange an armistice and was gunned down on the way.

He died in 1922 at the age of 31 under circumstances which were not clear then and have been debated ever since, though the movie presents a credible enough scenario of what happened.

Collins' acceptance of something less than an independent Irish Republic and his role in the civil war made him a suspect figure in the histories written about the Republican movement.

Writer-director Neil Jordan's dramatization rehabilitates Collins as a major political figure in the history of his nation, but does so at the expense of De Valera, the founder of the Republic of Ireland.

In the title role, Liam Neeson credibly projects a complex character as ready to kill as to die for his cause, yet even more willing to use compromise as a means of achieving the goal of peace and independence.

He was a flamboyant figure who went in the front door rather than skulking around the back, though the movie has plenty of escape scenes over the roofs and through alleys of Dublin.

The script provides a number of scenes in which Collins voices his hatred of the British for what they have done to his people and his hatred for the violence they have driven him to use.

Collins masterminded the terrorist tactics that negated Britain's military superiority and these tactics have been studied by revolutionary movements ever since.

Though the movie has many scenes of terrorist and counterterrorist violence, they are shown as shocking and repugnant.

It makes no attempt to glamorize the killings or make them seem heroic and certainly does not feed the myth of today's men of violence in the Irish Republican Army.

In Jordan's account of the time of the troubles, De Valera (Alan Rickman) comes across badly as a political ideologue who envies Collins' charisma and pragmatic sense of reality.

These were dramatic times and the picture is filled with characters to match them, notably Collins' closest friend, Harry Boland (Aidan Quinn), and a police informer named Broy (Stephen Rea).

The casting of Julia Roberts as an Irish colleen who falls in love with Collins was an unfortunate miscalculation because her lack of credibility damages some important scenes.

But there is no need to quibble about a movie which so splendidly recreates a period and a man who was central to it.

One doesn't have to know anything about Irish history to get involved in the human level of events, though those who do will find much to discuss and, perhaps, take issue with.

Because of terrorist violence, rough language and occasional profanity, The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Local Architect Featured In Exhibit

BELMONT — The architecture of the late Benedictine Father Michael McNerney is currently on exhibit in the Abbot Vincent Taylor Library on the campus of Belmont Abbey College. The display showcases the life and work of Father McNerney (1877-1963), a monk and priest of Belmont Abbey and a nationally renowned architect and designer.

Father McNerney was a Pennsylvania native who entered the Benedictine monastery at Belmont shortly before a fire destroyed the main college building in May 1900. Entrusted by Benedictine Abbot-Bishop Leo Haid with the reconstruction of the facility, McNerney completed the work in just three months. During the next 60 years his architectural vision directly influenced and characterized the ecclesiastical art and composition of Catholic churches and institutions across the nation, especially the Carolinas.

In all, Father McNerney produced more than 500 buildings, including 200 churches, 120 chapels and missions, 78 schools, and 27 hospitals. In addition to architectural designs, McNerney also executed various cemetery monuments,

CCHS Hires New Band Director

CHARLOTTE — Charlotte Catholic High School recently hired a new director for its two-year-old band program.

Stafford Ezzard has had more than 25 years of educational and professional band directing experience and a bachelor's degree in music education from Florida State University. He earned his master's degree in music education from Syracuse University and has served as the director of the band there.

Under the leadership of Ezzard, the CCHS band will perform at several home sporting events and at the Fine Arts Festivals. The director and the "pep" band made their debut at the school's Fall Homecoming football game Oct. 11.

Ezzard and his wife, Tricia, have a son, John, who is in seventh grade at Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School.

At 99, Illinois Woman Believed To Be Oldest Associate Religious

CHICAGO (CNS) — At age 99, Dora Krueger has made history without even trying. A resident of St. Benedict's Home for the Aged in Niles, Krueger is believed to be the oldest associate member of a religious order since she became an associate of the Sisters of Sts. Cyril and Methodius earlier this year. "Actually, Dora was an associate long before the term was coined," Sister John Vianny Vranak told The New World, Chicago's archdiocesan newspaper. For more than 30 years, Krueger volunteered at the now-closed Villa St. Cyril retirement home run by the religious order in Highland Park.

83-Year-Old Head Of Charity Has No Retirement Plans

KONIGSTEIN, Germany (CNS) — At the age of 83, Father Werenfried van Straaten, the founder of Aid to the Church in Need, remains in firm control of the international Catholic charity, with no plans to retire. "I have no successor as yet," said the Dutch-born priest, who founded the charity almost 50 years ago. "I can't find one. It's difficult. I'm 83 years old, and I have planned my future until the year 2003, when I'll reach the age of 90," he said.

Damien-Dutton Award Goes To Sheriff On Molokai

BELLMORE, N.Y. (CNS) — Richard Marks, sheriff and unofficial mayor of the Kalaupapa settlement on the island of Molokai, Hawaii, has been named recipient of the 1996 Damien-Dutton Award for "the most significant contribution to the conquest of leprosy." The award is named after two famed Catholic missionaries among the lepers of Molokai, Blessed Damien de Veuster, a Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary priest from Belgium, and Brother Joseph Dutton, a Trappist monk from the United States. It is given by the Damien-Dutton Society in Bellmore, which funds research, medical aid and rehabilitation and education for patients with Hansen's disease, or leprosy. Marks, now 65, and other members of his family were diagnosed with the disease when he was a teenager.

St. Lawrence Celebrates "Basilica Days"

By PAUL FREDETTE

Correspondent

ASHEVILLE — Celebrating their third anniversary as a Basilica was not all fun and games for the parishioners of St. Lawrence. For four consecutive evenings the first week of October, they listened as Brent Heiser and a team of Catholic lay evangelists from Good News Ministries of North Carolina, preached a parish mission entitled Dare to be Holy.

Based at the International School of Catholic Lay Evangelization at Topsail Beach, Heiser and his teammates received permission from Bishop F. Joseph Gossman of the Diocese of Raleigh to form the school in 1994 for that diocese as an expression of lay Catholic ministry. This is their fifth parish mission conducted in North Carolina.

Msgr. John J. McSweeney, rector of the Basilica, was enthused about the mission during "Basilica Days," recalling comments from Pope John Paul II during a Mass he attended while on sabatical in Rome. "There will be people called as lay evangelists," said the Pope. "We should support them — perhaps the big work of the evangelization can best be done by lay people to lay people."

The designation of the 87-year-old national historic landmark as a Basilica, added Msgr. McSweeney, indicates a special relationship between the Holy Father and this Church. The rector's goal this year was to create an opportunity for parishioners to explore the teachings of the Church, especially to understand the Decree on the Laity from the Second Vatican Council. People were very receptive to this mission conducted by lay people, he said.

An average of 125 people participated each evening in the rigors of two hour-long presentations. A veteran of 30 such mission teams, Brent Heiser sees the biggest challenge to Catholics as "helping people in the pews understand that their vocation is not to pay, pray and obey, but to be apostles and to share their faith." The first step in that process, says Heiser, is to help Catholics understand their faith.

The single greatest surprise to Heiser's own faith — the first thing he remembers hearing as a newcomer nearly 10 years ago — was that all baptized and confirmed Catholic Christians are called to be apostles; it is their right and their duty (Decree on Laity). "For me that was profound," says Heiser, who until then thought the only people called to be apostles were priests and religious. He finds that people who hear this message for the first time share his own initial amazement and elation at such good news. "They are excited by this," he explains, "because it empowers them to live the message and to embrace their vocation as Catholic Christians — they are not only ready for this challenge, they are hungry for it."

For 69 of her 71 years a parishioner of St. Lawrence, Lucille Lamy, sees a parish mission as something we all need but tend to push to the edges of our agenda. Lamy says she enjoyed every minute of the four-day program, and adds, "The speakers were able to put themselves in our shoes, identifying with the experiences that touch our lives." Commenting on the down-to-earth style of the evangelists, Lamy added, "They themselves had children, they had problems too."

Parishioners Cynthia and Ron Bloom also have children — five of them and another on the way. Ron's parents did four nights of baby-sitting so that he and Cynthia could attend the mission. "The message was basic and simple," says Cynthia, "illustrating from real life how to live the Gospel message in one's own family." Like Lucille Lamy, both she and Ron felt they benefited from this lesson in becoming as much a doer of the Word as a hearer. Impressed as she was by the dedication and care of the lay evangelists, however, Cynthia Bloom felt the experience would have been enhanced by "having a priest on the team."

The scarcity of clergy available for such special ministries is no longer news, but the appearance of lay evangelists stirring up the flames of faith is welcome news — news that satisfies the hunger for the good news.

know that Bobby was on a long list of kids that "Frankie" had harassed throughout the year. She told me that the school's guidance department has a series of conflict management programs for the students during the school year. But his teacher also remarked that these programs only work if the children are being taught and reinforced these same values in their homes. Children must be taught that there are consequences when they harm others with their words or their actions.

I know that this is not the last encounter that my kids will have over the years with a troublemaker at school. Unfortunately it's a very unpleasant part of life for children as well as parents because we can't be there to referee for our kids; we can only coach from the sidelines. The stakes seem so much higher in the world our children are growing up in. Instead of sticks and stones, today's older bullies are using guns and knives.

I told Bobby that he couldn't run away from his problem with "Frankie" or else he would always bother him. Joe and I talked with Bobby about the times we had to deal with bullies in our lives as children and as adults. We told Bobby that the reason he has so many friends is because he's kind and funny and knows how to be a good friend. And then we reminded him that he could use the "DeBug Program" that he learned in his kindergarten in Maryland.

DeBug is a wonderful program adopted by the Montgomery County Public Schools in Maryland. The purpose of DeBug is to equip children with a series of steps they learn to solve problems when others are "bugging" them. It helps children learn to be assertive and when possible, to resolve the difficulty themselves. The five steps of the DeBug systems are simple. The children are taught that if someone is bugging them, they should try the following:

Ignore. If that doesn't work...
Move away. If that doesn't work...
Talk friendly. If that doesn't work...
Talk firmly. If that doesn't work...
Get adult help.

Interestingly, the Bible is filled with bullies — kings and armies who invaded lands that weren't theirs. Pharaohs who persecuted and oppressed the less powerful, and cruel leaders who carried into captivity entire cities of people. But the commandment, "Love your enemies and pray for your persecutors" is the way Jesus asks us to respond to the cruelties others bring against us. He knows it's the only lasting way to get rid of the darkness and hatred in our world.

Jesus understands this isn't always easy to do. He suffered humiliation and agony at the hands of His tormentors. Soldiers mocked and ridiculed Him with a crown of thorns and a scarlet cloak. Jesus was blindfolded, slapped and beaten. He was jeered by a crowd and taunted by scribes and elders. He was led to a degrading death and still the insults kept coming. But as He hung on the cross Jesus prayed, "Father forgive them; they do not know what they are doing."

WORCESTER, Mass. (CNS) — Bishop Daniel P. Reilly of Worcester barred the city's mayor and local Democrats from holding a candidate rally Oct. 11 at a Catholic parish center. The rally was planned by Worcester Mayor Raymond V. Mariano and members of the Democratic City Committee and was to have featured candidates who support legal abortion. It also was to honor Democratic Sen. John F. Kerry of Massachusetts, "who has taken such a harsh position on abortion," the bishop said. The rally was planned for Our Lady of Mount Carmel-St. Ann Parish Center, but by Oct. 10 the site for it had been moved to a hotel. "A political rally like that should not be taking place on church property," Bishop Reilly said in a statement.

Israel Said To Paralyze Academic Life At Bethlehem University

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (CNS) — Despite promises to the contrary, a continuing hard-nosed stand by Israeli forces has paralyzed academic life at Bethlehem University, according to a U.S. faculty member there. Christian Brother Robert J. Daszkiewicz, a Providence native who directs the Department of Tourism for Peace at the university, reported on the situation in the Mideast in an Oct. 10 e-mail message to the Providence Visitor, diocesan newspaper. "While the Israeli government said (via interviews, press releases, etc.) they are easing the closures and taking away the tanks from checkpoints, and that they have lifted the closures on the West Bank, the reality is that they have not done so," Brother Daszkiewicz wrote. Because the Israelis have blocked all entrances and exits to Jerusalem, some six miles to the northwest of Bethlehem, "our faculty and students are prevented from entering Bethlehem to attend classes at the university," he added.

The pope waved to onlookers, who shouted, "Long live the pope!" Doctors said the 76-year-old pope was making an excellent recovery from the 50-minute operation Oct. 8, a "text-book" appendectomy in which adhesions or scar tissues from previous surgery were also removed.

THE KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS  PROTECTING FAMILIES FOR GENERATIONS

St. Luke Church

MINT HILL — The Charlotte area's shopping centers are complete with an endless variety of stores, restaurants, movie theaters ... and Catholic churches? In one instance, the latter was the case for seven years in southeast Charlotte, when St. Luke Church found its beginnings in, of all places, the theater complex of the Matthews Township Festival shopping center.

In an effort to meet the ever-growing needs of Charlotte Catholics, diocesan officials created an 11th parish in Mecklenburg County. In September 1987, the St. Luke community was formed, thus easing crowding at nearby Catholic churches and accommodating more of the influx of Catholics moving to the Charlotte area from various parts of the country.

Some 50 people made up the congregation when Father Joseph Mulligan, pastor of the newly created parish, celebrated the first Mass in the shopping center movie theater on Oct. 18, 1987. Masses continued at the church-theater for several months.

Earlier that year, property along Lawyers Road — on which the present facility exists — was purchased for future building of a church, although the parish moved to another shopping mall, the Mint Hill Festival, in time to celebrate Christmas in 1987.

A grassroots campaign to create a permanent home for the parish began in the summer of 1992. Called "Develop," the process included a series of town meetings, raffles, and bake, craft and attic sales. As Masses continued at the Mint Hill Festival, the parish busied itself to begin construction of the new church on Lawyers Road.

Building of the pastoral center was underway in October 1993. The result: a facility which includes an 8,600 square-foot sanctuary, as well as space for educational and social functions. Much attention has been paid to landscaping the property, too. Water and flower gardens have been added, and a country-style picnic pavilion has been built for parish functions as well.

Father Mulligan celebrated the first Mass at the new St. Luke Church in October 1994, thereby beginning a new phase in the history of the parish. From its rather unconventional shopping mall beginnings, St. Luke parish dedicated its new home on the Feast of the Epiphany, Jan. 7, 1995, with Bishop William G. Curlin and Father Mulligan concelebrating. On that day, the congregation also received a welcome of sorts from a local fire department.

As the dedication Mass drew to a close, the Holy Eucharist was taken from the altar to the tabernacle, which rests in the eucharistic chapel. During the procession, clouds of incense rose to the overhead fire alarms, setting them off in a bell-ringing frenzy. Fire trucks reported to the scene, but the only blaze raging in the church that day was the inextinguishable fire of faith burning in the hearts of the parishioners.

The parish has made the sense of family a top priority in its young life. Parishioners keep active in seven parish ministries and organizations, under which dozens of committees, groups and projects exist. St. Luke parish participates in a number of community-level undertakings as well, including several ecumenical activities. The congregation has grown at a steady pace, and plans are currently underway for the construction of a family life center.

Although it is one of the newest parishes in the diocese, St. Luke has wasted no time in practicing and expanding the ministry of the Catholic Church in western North Carolina. In its less than 10 years of existence, it has managed to fervently integrate into the Church family while retaining a unique identity all its own.

In other BMHS news, U.S. Senate Democratic candidate Harvey Gantt addressed students on Oct. 9 in the school cafeteria.

In order to provide BMHS politics students with equal exposure to senatorial candidates, school officials invited Gantt to talk with students about the workings of government in the United States. Earlier this year, several students were involved with Republican incumbent Jesse Helms' Labor Day rally as well.

"I appreciate any opportunity the presence of candidates provides to increase the sophistication level of students' perceptions about issues and the political process itself," said BMHS Principal George L. Respass.

Gantt addressed BMHS seniors and members of the Harvard Model Congress, an educational program designed by Harvard University to teach students about the workings of the national government. The candidate's presentation was followed by a question-and-answer session with the students.

All Christians Are Called To Work For A Just Society

By MIKE KROKOS and MARY COYNE WESSLING

BELMONT — Echoing the words of Pope Paul VI — If you want peace, work for justice — Bishop William G. Curlin urged participants at the diocesan Faith Doing Justice conference to work towards a just society.

"Make certain the justice and peace of the Lord are in your heart before you take it out into the world," the bishop said.

Bishop Curlin celebrated the closing liturgy at the two-day conference, held Oct. 18-19 at Belmont Abbey College. Sponsored by Catholic Social Services' Office of Justice and Peace, the meeting drew more than 100 people — mostly lay leaders — and focused on providing ways for participants to connect their daily lives and ministries to the social mission of the church.

Event keynote speakers Sister Evelyn Mattern and Ron Krietemeyer explored how Catholics are called to social justice and political responsibility (see related stories). Sister Evelyn, former director of the Peace and Justice Office and Migrant Ministry Program in the Diocese of Raleigh, led a discussion entitled Sharing the Tradition: The Call to a Consistent Ethic of Life. Krietemeyer, director of the Office of Social Justice and Catholic Charities for the Archdiocese of Minneapolis-St. Paul, centered his keynote on Applying the Teaching: The U.S. Bishops' Call to Political Responsibility.

Conference participants included business people, parish leaders, parents, catechists, religious educators and students.

"I've been involved in justice issues for a long time. This is a renewal for me," said Colleen McDermott, religion teacher at Charlotte Catholic High School. For her, the conference provided ideas of how to infuse justice issues into her religion courses.

McDermott liked hearing speakers call Catholics to the political arena. "I believe it is important to involve teens in the political process. I've talked with my students about choosing a campaign to work for," she said.

In McDermott's experience of working with high school and college students, justice issues often are the first step back to the Church.

"For some students, especially those in college, who rejected the Church structure and institution, justice issues were the way they could talk about their faith. And when social justice brings the students in we can

Indigent Burial Program Receives Boost, Appeals To Donors

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — The Indigent Burial Committee has faced a number of crossroads since its inception in 1994, but the burial program which was founded through its efforts has been steered toward greater financial stability and a brighter future.

Despite a history that includes periods of uncertainty and shortages of money, the Indigent Burial Program's outlook has been given more promise thanks to an increase in funding — and in public awareness.

"This is a face of poverty that many of us never encounter," said Geri King, director of the Charlotte Office of Catholic Social Services. "We know the face of hunger. We know the face of homelessness. But many of us don't know the face of a family confronted with the decision of whether or not to claim the body of a loved one because they do not have the resources to bury them."

The Indigent Burial Program addresses a segment of the local population whose needs are urgent and acute, she added.

The City of Charlotte continues to bury unclaimed bodies. Until 1994, though, the city was also involved in burying those whose lack of financial resources prevented a dignified interment. Upon the decision to cease such burials, CSS Executive Director Elizabeth Thurbee led a group of citizens, social work professionals, funeral home directors and a representative from Charlotte's cemetery department in forming the Indigent Burial Committee to study and address the problem.

Through that coalition and its work, an adult can be buried at a cost of $608, which is paid directly to a funeral home and the city cemetery department. The cost for children and infants is lower, although the funeral homes and the cemeteries receive payments for those burials as well.

At the suggestion of Thurbee, the Charlotte Office of CSS took on administrative responsibility for the project in May 1996. The agency employs a thorough screening process to assure that funding is designated for the truly needy. While more than 30 applications have been received since May, the program has been involved in 15 burials during that time.

King said that the burial service hopes to meet requests for three burials per month, although that number has fluctuated in previous months.

The program has not always enjoyed its present well-being. Cases have had to be turned away because of funding problems. Program administrators' requests for financial assistance from Mecklenburg County have gone unapproved.

In addition, the service's very existence was threatened in 1995, when the city council pondered the sale of Charlotte's municipal cemeteries to private companies. The effect of such a measure would have been disastrous, but Bishop William G. Curlin, members of the Indigent Burial Committee, and other concerned citizens offered impassioned pleas which proved influential in dissuading that decision.

With CSS at the administrative helm, the project realized an opportunity for growth. The staff has facilitated the screening process, working with individuals in the community to assess the needs of applicants. In what King called "a group effort," the base of donors has broadened, with Knights of Columbus, the staff of the Catholic Center, the Benedictines at Belmont Abbey and students from Charlotte Catholic High School having joined those trying to ensure that needs will be met. King has also spoken with parish tithing communities, and said that response has been positive.

Also, an anonymous donor has offered to match, dollar for dollar, any funding that comes to CSS for the Indigent Burial Program.

While it has been helped largely from within the Catholic community, the effort is becoming an interreligious one, King said. Two Protestant churches have already funded burials, and King met with the Mecklenburg County Ministerial Association on Oct. 8. That group represents a multitude of Christian and Jewish faiths; its members have "offered full support and will do everything they can to help with fund raising and getting the word out through networking," King

Speaker Says Catholics Are Obligated To Get Involved

Ron Krietemeyer, director of the Office of Justice and Peace for the Archdiocese of Minneapolis-St. Paul, delivers the keynote address during Faith Doing Justice at Belmont Abbey.

By MARY COYNE WESSLING
Correspondent

BELMONT — It's no secret that politics have become a dirty game in America. But rather than shun them, Catholics should embrace them as a means of working for justice.

So went the message delivered by Ron Krietemeyer at the Justice and Peace conference last weekend in Belmont. Krietemeyer, director of the Office of Justice and Peace for the Archdiocese of Minneapolis-St. Paul, delivered the keynote address Oct. 19.

Rather than grow cynical and adopt a disengaged attitude toward politics, Catholics should concern themselves with how this process can become more effective in dealing with a range of pressing issues, said Krietemeyer.

While many of today's candidates may be afraid to address the issues of abortion, poverty and immigrants in their debates, that is no excuse for Catholics to stop promoting the welfare of those unable to protect themselves.

Krietemeyer quickly dispelled the notion that Catholics must remain outside the political process because of separation of church and state.

"Society is not the same as the state," he said. "The state is just one part of society; a society in which all groups should participate in the ongoing discussions of how we live together. That's politics. The state is a specific institution which the constitution says should not give special rights to churches. In no way does it say churches can't participate in the political process. In fact, churches must have a role in enriching the debate and when they don't debate, they make society less healthy and less whole."

Catholics, said Krietemeyer, are called by their church leaders to be involved in the political process. "It is not optional nor accidental," he said. "If we don't engage in this process we are not being fully Catholic. We must serve those in need and work for justice and peace. The bishops use plain language in saying this. In the Church tradition, we are called to transform this world and make it more like the kingdom of God."

To emphasize the need to work for the needy, Krietemeyer unfolded a computer document, several pages long and told his audience that on each page were the many biblical references to "widows, orphans and aliens."

"Essentially, the Hebrews said our faith in Yahweh would be tested by how much justice was evident and that will be judged by how well we treated widows, orphans and aliens," he said.

While modern church leaders may not refer to them by the same name, there are still pressing social concerns regarding women, children and immigrants. Catholic social teaching refers frequently to the right of protecting the basic needs of humans. "If we don't provide this right, we fail in our responsibility as Catholics," he said.

Krietemeyer said the task of passing on the traditions of Catholic social teaching to Americans is not easy. He offered a few principles as guidelines for getting the message across. The first principle is when talking about the Church as an institution, we must be non-partisan. "The law says we must do this but the bishops also remind us to do this," he said. That means that as an institution, the church cannot give support to a particular candidate or political party.

The second principle is rooted in the consistent ethic of life. Don't choose narrow or single issues. Look for the consistent ethic of life in the candidates' stand on issues. At present neither the Democrats' nor Republicans' platforms reflect that ethic well, said Krietemeyer, which can make choosing even tougher.

"The goal of the American bishops, who are seen as both liberal and conservative on certain issues, is not to be on one or the other end of the spectrum. The politician's goal is not consistency but where they stand on issues so they can win office," Krietemeyer said.

He said later, "We may not like the present political system ... but it's the one we have to work with. Catholics must debate and dialogue about the issues of justice. Failure to act in the face of injustice is what condemns us."

plans to continue addressing church communities on an individual basis as well.

"I feel very positive that what we have been able to develop is a really sound community collaboration," said Thurbee. "This program offers the poorest, most vulnerable people an opportunity to lay their loved ones to rest in a dignified way. Poverty should not make their grief any less important."

Even though the project is being met with increasing support, funds are still needed to guarantee that indigent burials will continue. King urges not only congregations to consider contributing; she also calls out to youth groups, parish ministries, civic groups and whom-ever may be interested in raising and donating funds to what she called "a very natural function of Catholic Social Services." She said that members of families assisted by the program have given back financially, too.

The intent of CSS is not only to assist in the burial process. The work of the program allows families to waive funeral debts, thus letting them attend to other liabilities resulting from the deaths of their loved ones.

Outreach efforts continue after the funerals as well. King related a story of a Polish couple who relocated to Charlotte from New York. The man died soon after they arrived, leaving the woman, who could not speak English, to make arrangements and face life in a strange new place alone.

CSS learned of her plight, saw that her situation was eligible for the program, and buried her husband. Polish-speaking parishioners of a local Catholic church have befriended the woman, becoming extended family members in the process.

King cited that example as just one of many community efforts which have continued the operations of the program. She said that despite the nature of the project — dealing in pain and loss — as well as problems in the past, she has seen the grace of God at work.

"As tough as it is, it's gratifying," she added. "Even when you go into it without funding, you go in on faith. You see how the Lord provides. In my sense, He really has put His hand in this. He has moved people's hearts."

Since Catholic Social Services of Charlotte offers administrative services at no cost, all contributions to the Indigent Burial Program are used to fund the service.

Are Catholic Social Teachings Our Best Kept Secret?

By MARY COYNE WESSLING
Correspondent

BELMONT — American Catholics, contends Sister Evelyn Mattern, are impatient people. We seek instant results to problems much the same way we seek instant food. But patience and a keen understanding of the Church's history are needed to truly appreciate social justice and the call to a consistent ethic of life.

Sister Evelyn made her remarks during a keynote address for the Faith Doing Justice conference held at Belmont Abbey College Oct. 18-19.

Beginning with the Old Testament, Sister Evelyn cited many instances when man was reminded by God to revere life.

"The aspiration of the entire Old Testament could be summed up in that magnificent quote from Deuteronomy: 'Choose life that your descendants may live.'"

But, she added, for every story of reverence toward life, there were instances of the violence God's people inflicted on one another. "Our ancestors walked no straight way toward choosing life. They often challenged God through their misbehavior though God forgave them and loved them again. God loved them not because they were perfect but because they were made in God's own image — the imago dei, as it was called in the early Church," Sister Evelyn said. The new phrase American Catholics have heard — the consistent ethic of life — is based on this ancient concept of imago dei. What this means is, as Sister Evelyn put it: "We must respect life everywhere because God's image is everywhere."

No one provided a more perfect imago dei than Jesus. "We are free to follow Him unreservedly, without question, without having to filter out any of His words of behavior," Sister Evelyn said. But because we are imperfect, "we may not always understand the man Jesus but the man will never fail to bring God's image to us."

In Church history after Jesus's time, she said, "It was all downhill." Early Christians went from being devoured by lions in the coliseum to taking over the coliseums and customs of the day. "They changed their earlier beliefs about pacifism and nonviolence to the doctrine of the just war along the way."

Despite this, some Christians remained true and taught "powerfully" about justice.

Sister Evelyn cited several ecumenical encyclicals and other church documents which carried the justice themes. In Rerum Novarum, Pope Leo XIII, upheld the rights of workers to be treated justly and emphasized that his message is still relevant 103 years later.

Moving from work to broader social justice issues, Sister Evelyn reminded her audience that Catholic teachings are dedicated to helping us understand our relationship to God through our relationships to one another as images of God. "Most of these documents stress the pre-eminence of justice, defined as establishing and maintaining right relationships," she said.

Among the more dramatic themes to emerge from Catholic social teaching is nonviolence, said Sister Evelyn. While Church history shows that Christians moved from a nonviolence to a just war theory, today's nuclear age shows that "the just war has outlived its usefulness." She referred to statements from Vatican II and Pope John XXIII and Paul VI which declared war and arms race as real dangers, especially to the poor.

In her concluding remarks, Sister Evelyn said Catholic social teaching has always had to deal with overturning the acceptance of certain hierarchies which dominate certain people. The teachings have always upheld the dignity of humans because they are the image of God. She said the teachings call us to lead simple lives of faith, rooted in justice.

"The simplicity of our faith and lifestyles will allow us to practice what the teaching has always taught and to change what must be changed. We must travel light," she said. "As the Synod of Bishops pointed out in 1971: 'If the Church appears to be among the rich and powerful of this world its credibility is diminished.' If we embrace....the deepest implications of Catholic social teaching, we will have a guide to the present that will also be a bridge to all people of goodwill and to the future."

Arthur Duncan, pastor emeritus; Father Thomas Stott, pastor; and Rev. Mr. Ben Wenning, permanent deacon at St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte also presided. help them make connections to other Church teachings."

Coming at social justice issues with a faith perspective means never losing hope that things can get better, added McDermott.

Vivian Reichart's motivation for coming to the conference was the November elections. "I needed to hear all the reasons why I need to vote the way I am going to vote. I needed to renew my commitment to social justice within the Church," she said.

Reichart, a member of St. James Church in Concord, said she plans to get involved again on the parish level in the Campaign for Human Development or some other kind of social ministry.

Among the issues which concern her is the treatment of immigrants. "We seem to have a lot of migrant workers in Concord. I've seen people being rude to them, staring at them and acting afraid of them. I see the hurt in their faces. I got to thinking about human dignity, how each person is a reflection of Jesus and not something awful. I came to this conference to be reminded of what is important and to be compelled to do something about it," she said.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Religions Must Promote Understanding, Pope Tells Religious Leaders

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Religions are obligated to promote understanding and respect, and religious leaders must continue meeting to pray for peace, Pope John Paul II said.

"Because of the relationship with the Divine they promote and cultivate, religions can and must facilitate meetings and understanding among people even if they come from different cultures and religions," the pope said in a message to religious leaders.

The leaders were gathered Oct. 19 for a day of prayer and fasting in Assisi, Italy, to mark the 10th anniversary of the interreligious day of prayer for peace hosted by Pope John Paul.

The meeting was sponsored by the Franciscans. "Far from justifying hatred and division," the pope said, religions "must push their followers to overcome the barriers of misunderstanding and prejudice, favoring an openness to one another in mutual respect."

The pope thanked the Franciscans and religious leaders who have worked to keep the spirit of the 1986 Assisi meeting alive through meetings, discussions and, especially, occasions set aside for members of all religions to pray for peace.

"I hope everyone will know how to make themselves generous witnesses of the 'spirit of Assisi' in the environment in which they live and work, behaving in every circumstance in a way conforming to the values shared by everyone present at the meeting 10 years ago," the pope said.

Pope Thanks Crowd For Prayers, Asks For Catholic Missionaries

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In his first public address since leaving a Rome hospital, Pope John Paul II thanked all those who had prayed for him and asked for prayers for Catholic missionaries and for his homeland.

Thousands of visitors came to St. Peter's Square Oct. 20, enjoying a sunny Sunday after days of rain and welcoming the pope back to the Vatican following his nine-day hospitalization for an appendectomy. "Your presence confirms the affection with which you followed me in the past few days, giving me comfort and support," the 76-year-old pope told the crowd. The pope turned his visitors' attention to the celebration of World Mission Day and the obligation all Catholics have to support the church's missionary activity. "This is why the church asks everyone to continue in the work of missionary cooperation," he said. "Prayer, the witness of a Christian life, the promotion of missionary vocations and concrete support" for missionary activity are required of all Catholics.

Pope Sends Condolences After Stampede At Guatemalan Soccer Stadium

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II sent a telegram conveying his condolences after a stampede in a Guatemalan soccer stadium killed several dozen people and left nearly 200 hurt. The Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Angelo Sodano, sent the message Oct. 17, the day after the tragedy, to the head of the Guatemalan bishops' conference, Bishop Victor Hugo Martinez Contreras of Quetzaltenango-Los Altos. At least 83 people, many of them children, died in the incident. More than 180 were treated for broken bones, cuts, bruises and shock. The stampede took place during a World Cup qualifying match between the national teams of Guatemala and Costa Rica.

Letters

For the past 100 years, our popes and bishops have addressed the social needs of humankind in numerous encyclicals; therefore the word social has become associated with "faith" and "justice." In fact, in On Social Concern, Pope John Paul II proclaimed, "the social doctrine of the Church...has now become an updated doctrinal 'corpus.'" (1) The "social question," he maintains, has "assumed...worldwide dimensions....(so that)....we cannot but embrace the immense multitudes of the hungry, the needy, the homeless, those without medical care and, above all those without hope of a better future. It is impossible not to take account of these realities." (42)

A predominant theme in this church teaching is that moral demands are not limited to individual acts; social morality is imperative. To transform society the U.S. Bishops call us to be active in the political arena in defense of life at all stages. Based on the consistent ethic of life, the bishops have published Political Responsibility: Proclaiming the Gospel of Life, Protecting the Least Among Us, and Pursuing the Common Good.

The "Faith Doing Justice" conference's keynote speakers have solid Catholic credentials: Ronald Kriemeyer, who works for the archbishop of Minneapolis-St. Paul, was highly recommended by the director of the USCC's department of Social Development and World Peace. Sister Evelyn Mattern is former director of the Raleigh Diocesan Office of Justice and Peace and is widely published (most recently, Blessed Are You: The Beatitudes and Our Survival, Ave Maria Press).

To The Editor,

Recently our parish family celebrated the dedication anniversary of our Basilica of St. Lawrence, DM, Asheville, with a four-day mission presented by the Good News Ministry of North Carolina.

The result of this program is wonderfully positive. Their invitation to introspection in the light of the magisterium and the encyclicals stirred the embers of hope. Comprehending the treasure that is our faith has awakened the desire to respond to the needs around us. An energy is rising and its effect will be visible. The Catholic Lay Evangelists are, I believe, not a novelty but a necessity for the revitalization of the Church. The thrust of their message is clear: "Ladies and gentlemen of faith, start your engines please!" (With apologies to Indianapolis.)

Our diocese cannot help but benefit from their efforts, and I sincerely hope that lay evangelization will spread. It meets the need.

Light One Candle

Father Thomas McSweeney

We Are Our Stories

I love stories. Like the one about the peasant farmer in China who was desperately poor and had only one son to help him cultivate his little farm.

One day a pack of wild horses grazed nearby and the young boy managed to lasso and corral one of them. The neighbors came to celebrate the good news: "What good fortune," they said. "Now you'll have added help with your farming." But the elderly farmer replied, "How do you know it is good fortune?"

The next day, when the boy tried to ride the horse, it bucked and threw him to the ground, breaking his arm. The neighbors came to offer their condolences: "What bad fortune for you to have your son hurt and unable to work." But again the farmer rejoined, "How do you know it is bad fortune?"

The next week, the regional warlord came through the area and took all the able-bodied young men to fight in a battle, but because the boy's arm was still in a cast he was unfit for fighting. Again the neighbors rejoiced: "What good fortune that your son was not pressed into service." But the farmer cautioned, "How do you know it is good fortune?"

Now the story could go on further, but you get the idea. The moral of this piece of Chinese stoicism? Perhaps it is better for us to fold off judgment on what makes a good day or a bad day: things are not always what they seem. Remember how bleak that Friday seemed to the disciples when everything they had hoped for seemed ended by the crucifixion of their Lord? But then came that glorious Easter Sunday morning.

Scripture speaks of the Yom Yahweh, the Day of the Lord, when the final judgment concerning all our days will be left to God. And the story of the peasant farmer helps to explain in a practical way our own experience of the Biblical admonition to trust in the Lord's power to make all things new.

Stories have power, too. Especially real life experiences of faith and hope that offer connections and meaning. Wanting our lives to have meaning is at the heart of what makes us spiritual human beings.

In fact, according to Professor Daniel Taylor's wonderful book, The Healing Power of Stories, you and I are stories. He argues convincingly that we are the product of all the stories we have heard and lived: "They have shaped how you see yourself, the world, and your place in it...Knowing and embracing healthy stories is crucial to living rightly and well. If your present life story is broke or diseased, it can be made well. Or, if necessary, it can be replaced by a story that has a plot worth living."

He echoes Alfred North Whitehead's observation that "Religions commit suicide when they find their inspiration in dogmas. The inspiration of religion lies in history." That is, if you and I need fundamental change in our lives, we need to begin not with concepts and abstractions, but with new stories. And the stories that influence how we choose to live are significant. That's why it matters that we focus on stories with plots of value and characters of truth if we want full and healthy lives.

Daniel Taylor illustrates his belief with the life of Augustine. Rather than offering a rational explanation of his conversion to Christianity, Augustine's Confessions depict him constantly trying out different life-stories: rake, intellectual, careerist. Eventually, Augustine exchanged the stories that shaped his youth for the story of Christian faith. In giving authority to a new story he made it his own. Because his defining story was now the story of Jesus, Augustine was able to change his life dramatically.

The same thing happens if we accept a new defining story for our lives. Nothing — past, present or future — looks the same. And as we share our stories, they take the force of social glue. When our forbears sat around the fire at night to recount the adventures of the day, they became bonded together. And together they were able to push back the surrounding night. Our stories today must do no less.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Who Voted for Papal Infallibility?

Q. How many U.S. bishops voted in favor of papal infallibility when they met in Rome at the First Vatican Council?

A. Forty-eight bishops and one abbot represented the United States, attending at least some sessions of Vatican Council I.

Bishop Edward Fitzgerald of Little Rock, Ark., and one Italian, voted "non placet" (not in favor) at the final public vote on papal infallibility July 18, 1870.

Approximately 130 bishops present in Rome that week, about 20 percent of those actually attending the sessions, were absent for that final ballot. Several of these (perhaps six) were Americans, including Archbishop Peter Kenrick of St. Louis, and Archbishop John Purcell of Cincinnati.

The approximations result from complications today's historians encounter in attempting to establish precise figures for some of these events 126 years later.

Q. A passage I read in the Bible said that if a man and woman have intercourse during the menstrual period they have committed a sin. Is this the teaching of the Church?

A. The actions that resulted in sexual impurity or uncleanness among Jewish people are listed for the most part in the book of Leviticus, Chapters 15 and 20.

To understand them, we need to realize that while some such regulations had hygienic purposes, many involved simple misunderstandings of biology.

Occurrences that made an individual ritually unclean were by no means always sinful. They might well be events that just happen, such as unintentional loss of the seed by a man (15:16) or menstrual loss of blood by a woman (15:19). Having sexual relations with a woman during menstruation made a man unclean (15:24), and even ordinary relations between a husband and wife made both of them unclean (15:18).

Christian churches, of course, Catholics included, do not acknowledge such obligations or consider them at all binding.

Spirituality For Today

Father John Catoir

Coping With Guilt

How do you know if you have a healthy spiritual life? I'll tell you a little secret. Good spirituality has more to do with the desires of the heart than with external moral exactitude.

There is in each of us an innate desire to be close to God, to be accepted and loved by our supreme maker. We need to be in harmony with the Lord.

Since we often fall short of our highest ideals, we experience guilt. There is a feeling of emotional discomfort connected with guilt. Until we wipe the slate clean and experience God's forgiveness, we tend to feel unworthy.

All through this experience we cling to our desire to be one with God. In fact the guilt itself comes from the perception that we have lost that closeness. The truth is that God is unchanging love.

Cozy feelings are irrelevant.

The Lord reads hearts. Jesus saw the good intentions of the publicans and the prostitutes. His courteous treatment of them proved they were loved, not rejected.

St. Peter had the reaction of a guilty man when he said to Jesus, "Depart from me, Lord, for I am a sinful man." Jesus ignored his guilt feelings and simply said, "Do not be afraid; from now on you will be catching men" (Luke 5:8,10). He saw the desires of his heart.

It's impossible to tell a scrupulous person that God's love transcends all guilt feelings. Locked in their own misery, they tend to cling to self-reproach.

I don't know how St. Francis of Assisi held on to his joy in times of distress and rejection, but he did. He knew that feelings were not facts.

St. Therese, the Little Flower, once said that were it not for the grace of God she would be the greatest sinner in the world. Quite an admission! Whatever her temptations might have been, she remained steadfast in her holy desires.

On her deathbed she said, "Everything I have ever done, I have done to make God happy." Was she a great sinner or a rare and holy soul? Her canonization a few years after her death assures us that she was constant in her desire to please the Lord.

A woman phoned me long distance recently to tell me of her yearning to get back to God. She was living in an uncanonical marriage and thought she was a great sinner.

I was more conscious of the desires of her heart than I was of her guilt feelings. I wouldn't dream of judging her soul; all judgment belongs to God. What stood out in my mind was her holy desire. I heard her soul crying out to the Lord, and I felt His compassion in my own heart.

Sometimes respectable people are really corrupt on the inside, while so-called public sinners are close to God. Jesus occasionally walked with prostitutes. Maybe He knew something about them that His contemporaries did not.

The next time you beat yourself up with guilt feelings, examine the desires of your heart, and try to remember that God loves your beautiful soul.

United States Catholic Conference 1996

Beginning in 1988, the United States Catholic Conference (USCC) has submitted to the major presidential candidates a questionnaire on issues of national significance. This year, the USCC Office of Government Liaison compiled and produced this document. In November of 1995, the USCC Administrative Board published the statement Political Responsibility: Proclaiming the Gospel of Life, Protecting the Least Among Us, and Pursuing the Common Good. That statement addresses the key moral issues in the upcoming election, and this questionnaire poses many of these issues to candidates and reflects their verbatim responses. It has been reviewed and approved for distribution by the undersigned.

The following set of questions on important public policy issues was sent to the presidential campaigns of Bill Clinton, Bob Dole and Ross Perot. Mr. Clinton and Mr. Dole responded, and their unedited words appear here.

Abortion

What is your position on a constitutional amendment that would protect the right to life of unborn children (Human Life Amendment)?

Bill Clinton:

☐ Support ☐ No Position ☒ Oppose

Bob Dole:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

What is your position on the use of taxpayer funds for abortion?

What is your position on a law banning partial-birth abortion?

Bill Clinton:

☐ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bill Clinton: As governor of Arkansas, Bill Clinton signed a bill that barred third trimester abortions with an appropriate exception for life or health. If Congress sends the president a bill that bars third trimester abortions with an appropriate exception for life or health, the president would sign it.

Bob Dole: In 1983, Bob Dole voted for a Constitutional Amendment overturning Roe v. Wade and still supports a Constitutional Amendment to restrict abortion subject to the exceptions of life of the mother, rape and incest. In 1996, Senator Dole voted for legislation banning partial birth abortions.

Environment —

What is your position on policies that seek to arrest, reverse, and prevent environmental pollution and to promote sustainable development for all, recognizing regulation, investment and sacrifice are necessary for the common good in this area?

Bill Clinton:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bill Clinton: It is our responsibility to be good stewards of God's creation and to leave our environment safe and clean for the next generation. The Clinton Administration is fighting for a clean environment for our families and our children.

Bob Dole: Bob Dole is the only Presidential candidate to have voted for our major environmental laws including the Clean Air and Clean Water Acts. Bob Dole will support environmental policies that rely on sound science and economics, protect the property rights of all Americans and give states and local communities flexibility to meet real environmental challenges effectively. Bob Dole understands that environmental progress and economic growth go hand in hand — they are not adversaries.

Arms & Landmines

What is your position on:

An early permanent U.S. ban on the production, export and use of anti-personnel landmines as a step toward a global ban on landmines?

Bill Clinton:

☐ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole:

Legislation to restrict or limit arms sales from the U.S. to other nations?

Bill Clinton:

Bob Dole:

A comprehensive nuclear test ban?

Bill Clinton:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole:

☐ Support ☐ No Position ☒ Oppose

Bill Clinton: The U.S. is committed to a global anti-personnel landmines (APL) ban. As we negotiate this, the U.S. will protect the option to use APL in certain situations, but is seeking alternatives to APL to end reliance on them as soon as possible. The U.S. observes an APL export moratorium.

Bob Dole: Bob Dole supported an export ban and moratorium on anti-personnel landmines and encouraged an international agreement to eliminate them while safeguarding American military personnel. He supports making defense equipment available to friendly nations to enhance American security and reduce the likelihood of engaging U.S. forces in conflict. He supports restoring effective controls on exporting critical military technologies.

Labor Relations

What is your position on policies that protect the right to collective bargaining, including legislation to prohibit the permanent replacement of striking workers?

Bill Clinton:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole:

☐ Support ☐ No Position ☒ Oppose

Bill Clinton: President Clinton believes that the fight to save the American dream begins with the fight to save America's working families. That is why he supports the right of employees to bargain collectively and their right to strike.

Bob Dole: Bob Dole opposes the so-called striker replacement bill. This bill would have overturned more than 60 years of Supreme Court precedent that has preserved the delicate balance between labor and management.

Economic Help For Families

What is your position on the Federal Government providing financial resources to low-income persons:

Through a reformed welfare system that rewards work and supports families without denying assistance to children based on the age or welfare dependence of their mother?

Bill Clinton:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Through tax relief to low income working families with children to keep them above the poverty line (i.e., refundable children's tax credit and/or Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC)?

Bill Clinton:

Bob Dole:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

By assuring health care for poor families and children, the elderly, and persons with disabilities?

Bill Clinton:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

By supporting efforts to increase the minimum wage, which would assure a living wage for workers?

Bill Clinton:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bill Clinton: President Clinton has worked for welfare reform that encourages independence through responsibility and work and provides health and child care necessary for families to succeed at home and on the job. He has worked to stop Congress from eliminating the guarantee of health care for the poor, disabled and elderly.

Bob Dole: Bob Dole supports the recently enacted welfare reform plan, which rewards work, supports families and provides necessary support to children through a federal-state partnership. Bob Dole's plan for economic growth helps all families by balancing the budget, lowering taxes and restoring money and power to the real engine of our economy — the American people.

Civil Rights

What is your position on continued enforcement of affirmative action programs to protect racial and ethnic minorities?

Bill Clinton:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bill Clinton: The Clinton Administration has opposed discriminatory lending practices, enforced the Voting Rights Act, and enforced fair housing laws.

Bob Dole: Bob Dole opposes quotas, set-asides, they belong to a particular group. He supports steps to ensure that affirmative action efforts do not resort to preferences.

Bishop's Financial Stewardship Report

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1996

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ:

As your bishop, I am accountable to you, the people of the Church of Charlotte, for the proper stewardship of our financial resources. Therefore, I am pleased to be able to present to you the financial report of the Central Administrative Offices of the Diocese of Charlotte for the year ending June 30, 1996.

I encourage you to review the financial information contained on the following pages. The report shows that the Central Administration is financially healthy. A good financial report tells only part of the story. Next year we celebrate our 25th anniversary as a diocese. We have experienced tremendous growth in our Catholic population during the past quarter of a century. In addition to serving an ever growing population, we are responding to more and varied needs. I believe we have been successful in responding to many of these needs. During this past year we expanded the diocesan outreach and evangelization programs to our Hispanic brothers and sisters in response to the increasing number of Hispanics in our diocese. We also launched a new ministry to our Hmong brothers and sisters. Additional resources have been allocated to our educational ministries and to the social outreach programs offered by Catholic Social Services. Finally, we have been blessed with 23 seminarians training for the priesthood who will provide spiritual leadership for our diocese in the future.

Our diocese continues to grow in number and need. While much is being done, the future will present new challenges as we strive to serve God's people. It is only by your generous assistance that we will be able to continue to expand our ministries and open new churches and schools in response to continued growth here in western North Carolina.

I am very grateful for your support. I know of the tremendous sacrifices made by so many to support the Church. Your gifts to your parish, to the Diocesan Support Appeal and to special appeals directly support the ministries of the Church. I beg your continued assistance.

I am, as always,

Devotedly in the Lord,

+ William G. Curlin

Report from the Diocesan Fiscal Manager

I am pleased to once again report that the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte remains financially healthy due to the generosity of the people of this diocese. The Central Administration of the Diocese, the administrative arm of the Catholic Church in western North Carolina, completed the year ended June 30, 1996 with an increase in net assets of approximately $939,000. The increase is, in part, attributable to special purpose activities which affect how and when these surplus funds should be spent. These activities are as follows:

- Self-insurance and employee benefit programs - The amount by which these revenues exceeded claims and other expenses ($700,000) has been designated as additional reserves for future contingencies;
- Unrealized gains on long-term investments - Current year market appreciation on investments ($235,000) could be offset in future years if market values decline;
- DSA contributions - Included in current year revenues are those funds which exceed the current year program budget and, thus, are for use next year ($341,000).

The sum of these three items ($1,276,000) exceeds the total increase in net assets by approximately $337,000. The resulting "shortfall" is primarily due to two transfers of funds from the Central Administration to the diocesan Foundation totaling $340,000. These transactions have been recorded as expenditures by the Central Administration and, thus, reduce its net assets. Of the total transferred to the Foundation, $250,000 has been invested in an endowment and $90,000 represents the transfer of accumulated earnings. The principle will remain invested with the Foundation in perpetuity so as to generate earnings which will be available to meet the future needs of the diocese.

The diocesan Finance Office remains committed to the highest standards of fiscal responsibility. It is our responsibility to ensure that internal controls are in place and operating so as to safeguard Church assets and ensure that all financial activity is accounted for properly. The employees and volunteers who serve at diocesan parishes, schools and agencies, as well as those at the Catholic Center, are stewards of the Church's temporal resources and thus, are accountable to you, the people who are the Church of western North Carolina.

The financial statements of the Central Administration for the year ended June 30, 1996 are presented on the following pages for your review. The integrity of these statements and the integrity of the underlying financial systems are the responsibility of the diocese. The public accounting firm of Arthur Andersen, LLP, was engaged to perform an independent audit of these financial statements. Their audit report is also included in the financial report on the following pages.

Report of Independent Public Accountants

To the Most Reverend William G. Curlin,
Bishop of Charlotte:

We have audited the accompanying combined statement of financial position of The Central Administration of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte and Cathedral Publishing, Inc. (the Central Administration) as of June 30, 1996, and the related combining statements of activities and cash flows for the year then ended. These financial statements are the responsibility of the Central Administration's management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on our audit.

We conducted our audit in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audit provides a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the combined financial position of the Central Administration as of June 30, 1996, and the combining results of its operations and cash flows for the year then ended in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles.

The Central Administration of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte

1. Organization:

The Central Administration of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte is the administrative arm of the Roman Catholic Church in western North Carolina. The Central Administration provides diocesan entities with business and administrative services including: administering a savings and investment program wherein all funds on deposit along with the associated accrued interest are reflected as custodial obligations of the Central Administration; arranging financing for diocesan entities; sponsoring a noncontributory defined benefit pension plan and a tax-deferred annuity plan covering substantially all lay employees; and providing medical and dental insurance coverage for employees. The Central Administration assesses the diocesan entities on a monthly basis to cover the costs of these benefits. In addition, the Central Administration oversees the operations of Cathedral Publishing, Inc., publisher of The Catholic News and Herald. The Central Administration of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte and Cathedral Publishing, Inc. are collectively referred to herein as "the Central Administration."

2. Summary of Significant Accounting Policies:

Basis of Accounting

The accounts of the Central Administration are maintained on the accrual basis. In fiscal 1995, the Central Administration adopted the Statement of Financial Accounting Standards (SFAS) No. 116, "Accounting for Contributions Received and Contributions Made," and SFAS No. 117, "Financial Statements of Not-for-Profit Organizations."

Cash and Cash Equivalents

The Central Administration considers all highly liquid instruments purchased with an original maturity of three months or less to be cash equivalents. The Central Administration has designated $235,000 of cash and cash equivalents for property and liability self-insurance reserves.

Property and Equipment

Property and equipment is stated at cost, when purchased, and at estimated market value, when donated. Depreciation expense is determined by using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the assets. The following represents the major classes of property and equipment at June 30, 1996:

	Amount	Life (in years)
Land	$3,493,405	N/A
Buildings	3,493,189	30
Improvements	698,780	10
Equipment	183,838	10
Vehicles	192,527	5
	8,061,739
Less - Accumulated depreciation	1,692,145
	$6,369,594

Tax-exempt Status

The Central Administration is exempt from federal income tax under Section 501 (c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code.

Use of Estimates in the Preparation of Financial Statements

The preparation of financial statements in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities and disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements and the reported amounts of revenue and expenses during the reporting period. Actual results could differ from those estimates.

Net Assets

The Central Administration's net assets consist of the following:

Unrestricted

Unrestricted net assets consist of all resources of the Central Administration which have no donor-imposed restrictions. The officials of the Central Administration may, at their discretion, designate unrestricted support for a specified purpose.

Temporarily Restricted

Temporarily restricted net assets consist of contributions received whose use by the Central Administration is limited by donor-imposed stipulations that expire by passage of time or can be fulfilled by actions of the Central Administration. When a donor restriction expires, temporarily restricted net assets are reclassified to unrestricted net assets and reported in the statement of activities as net assets released from restrictions.

Permanently Restricted

Permanently restricted net assets consist of contributions received from donors whose use by the Central Administration is limited permanently by donor-imposed stipulations.

3. Advances to Parishes:

The Central Administration maintains a revolving loan fund which was established primarily from resources provided by bequests stipulated for advances to small or needy parishes at no interest. Advances outstanding at June 30, 1996, totaled approximately $1,116,000. These advances are long term in nature and are reflected at their estimated present value of approximately $528,000 in the accompanying statement of financial position.

4. Pledges and Assessments Receivable:

The Diocesan Support Appeal (DSA) campaign begins in the fiscal year prior to the expenditure of funds by DSA program agencies. At June 30, 1996, approximately $509,000 in pledges out of a goal of $2,363,000 had not been collected.

The Central Administration assesses parishes and affiliates to cover the costs of general administration, property and liability insurance, employee health insurance, employee retirement and The Catholic News and Herald. Total assessments receivable at June 30, 1996, were approximately $224,000.

5. Notes Receivable:

The Central Administration has various notes receivable outstanding at June 30, 1996. These notes bear interest at rates ranging from prime minus 1-1/4% to prime plus 1%. A summary of notes receivable is as follows:

Interest is earned at 4% for the Savings Program and prime less 2.75% for the investment program. Savings program funds may be withdrawn at any time and investment program funds may be withdrawn the first business day of each month subject to a minimum 18-month investment period. Funds on deposit related to these programs along with accrued interest totaled approximately $8,161,000 at June 30, 1996, and are reflected as custodial obligations in the accompanying statement of financial position.

8. Pension and Retirement Plans:

Lay Noncontributory Deferred Benefit Pension Plan

The Central Administration sponsors a noncontributory defined benefit pension plan (the Plan) covering substantially all lay employees of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte. The Plan provides for benefits based on an employee's years of service and compensation. It is the intent of the Central Administration for the minimum funding to be the actuarially recommended contribution amount.

The net periodic pension cost of the pension plan is as follows:

Service cost on benefits earned during the year	$590,925
Interest cost on projected benefit obligation	432,681
Actual return on plan assets	(947,046)
Net amortization and deferral	494,886
Net periodic pension cost	$571,446

The actuarial present value of benefit obligations and funded status is as follows:

Benefit obligations-
Vested benefits	$ 5,443,617
Nonvested benefits	165,240
Accumulated benefit obligation	5,608,857
Projected benefit obligation	(7,026,541)
Plan assets at fair value	6,596,444
Projected benefit obligation in excess of plan assets	(430,097)
Unrecognized net (gain) loss	(149,414)
Unrecognized net transition obligation	366,203
Accrued pension cost	$213,308

Assumptions used in developing the projected benefit obligation, are as follows:

Discount rate	7.5%
Rate of increase in compensation	4.5
Rate of return in plan assets	8.5

Tax-deferred Annuity Plan

The Central Administration administers a tax-deferred annuity plan under section 403(b) of the Internal Revenue Code for substantially all lay employees of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte. The Central Administration contributions to the plan are based on a percentage of employee contributions. Central Administration contributions to this plan were approximately $176,000 during fiscal 1996.

Clergy Retirement Plan

The Central Administration administers the Diocese of Charlotte Clergy Retirement Plan (The Clergy Plan) to provide retirement benefits for priests within the Diocese. Annual collections from the parishes for this purpose are included within the temporarily restricted fund. The Clergy Plan obligation totaled approximately $2,365,000 at June 30, 1996, and is reflected as a custodial obligation in the accompanying statement of financial position. Contributions to this plan were approximately $109,000 in fiscal 1996.

9. Credit Arrangements:

The Central Administration maintains an approximate $176,000 unsecured, irrevocable standby letter of credit with a bank in order to guarantee payments to the third-party administrator of its medical self-insurance program. At June 30, 1996, no debt was outstanding under this arrangement.

10. Employee Health Benefits:

The Central Administration administers medical and dental insurance coverage for the employees of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte. The Central Administration charges each organization premiums for the coverage of its employees on a monthly basis. The individual organizations have no liability for claims in excess of the premiums to be paid. The Central Administration has an arrangement with a third-party to administer the medical and dental plan. The organizations pay their premiums directly to the third-party administrator who retains approximately 19% of the premiums submitted for administrative services and the premiums for specific and aggregate stop-loss coverages. The remaining portion of the premiums are paid back to the Central Administration. The Central Administration is billed on a monthly basis for actual claims processed by the third-party administrator. The Central Administration has specific stop loss coverage at $40,000 per claim and aggregate coverage beginning at 110% of the actuarially projected total individual claims under $40,000. Employee health benefits expense was approximately $939,000 during fiscal 1996.

Education

What is your position on legislation to provide financial assistance to all parents enabling them to exercise their right to choose the elementary and/or secondary schools, including religiously oriented schools, which are best suited for their children (e.g., tax credits, grants, parental vouchers, scholarships, etc.)?

What is your position on legislation to amend the federal statute, the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), that would ensure that children in private schools are entitled to receive special education services on an equitable basis with eligible public schools students?

Bob Dole:

What is your position on the Federal government proactively supporting litigation to overturn the Supreme Court's 1985 Aguilar v. Felton decision in order to allow ESEA Title I services to be provided to children at the religious school they attend?

Bill Clinton:
☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose
Bob Dole:
☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bill Clinton: President Clinton believes that children attending private schools should be eligible for equitable special education services. More than any other administration, we have worked with the US Catholic Conference and City of New York to allow ESEA Title I to be provided to children at the religious schools they attend.

Bob Dole: Bob Dole's Opportunity Scholarships for Children will enable low and middle income families to choose the schools — public, private, or religious — most appropriate for their children. Under IDEA, children with disabilities in private schools are now supposed to get an equitable share of the local IDEA pie — though there is no individual entitlement. In Bob Dole's view, any proposal to create an individual entitlement should be considered in the context of school choice proposals for all students.

Immigration

What is your position on legislation that would: Reduce legal immigration numbers by one-third?

Bill Clinton:

Limit categories of relationship eligible for family unification?

Place a cap on refugee admissions' numbers?

Bill Clinton:
☐ Support ☐ No Position ☒ Oppose
Bob Dole:
☐ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole: America has always been a nation of immigrants and Bob Dole believes America must continue to be a land of opportunity for those willing to work hard and sacrifice to achieve a better life for themselves and their children. He has led the fight against illegal immigration to preserve legal immigration. Bob Dole believes that family unification should remain a cornerstone of U.S. immigration policy. He also supports a modest, temporary reduction in the annual rate of legal immigration.

Require a national i.d. card system as a means of determining immigration status in the workplace?

Bill Clinton:
☐ Support ☐ No Position ☒ Oppose
Bob Dole:
☐ Support ☐ No Position ☒ Oppose

Bill Clinton: President Clinton continues to oppose legislation that restrict welfare benefits to legal immigrants who work hard for their families and pay taxes. These families should be eligible for medical and other help when they fall on hard times through no fault of their own.

Bob Dole: Bob Dole does not believe that those who have entered our country illegally are entitled to government welfare services. Bob Dole joined Governor Pete Wilson in supporting Proposition 187 which denies benefits to illegal immigrants. However, he would oppose a Constitution Amendment denying automatic birthright citizenship to illegal-immigrant children born in the U.S.

Food & Agricultural Policy

What is your position on agricultural policies that encourage a broad-based system of small- to moderate-sized family-owned and operated farms over policies that favor the concentration of agricultural ownership?

Bill Clinton:
☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose
Bob Dole:
☐ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bill Clinton: The Clinton Administration has taken action to promote fairness in our system so that family farmers and ranchers can continue to make a good living.

Bob Dole: Bob Dole has led efforts to pass the most environmentally sensitive farm bill ever by encouraging greater planning flexibility for American farmers and ranchers. He has also led efforts to reduce taxes and government interference that have led to a concentration of farm ownership. By reducing estate taxes, capital gains taxes and balancing the federal budget, Bob Dole will help rural America prosper.

Violence

Human Rights

What is your position on making the defense of human rights — including religious liberty — a central concern of U.S. foreign policy, especially in places where human rights are most at risk, by linking other policies (e.g., trade preferences or military aid) to a country's performance on human rights?

Bill Clinton:
☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose
Bob Dole:
☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bill Clinton: The Clinton Administration has consistently pressed for human rights progress through engagement and by taking into account human rights record when making decisions on foreign assistance, trade, and economic concessions. Promoting religious liberty is central to this policy.

Bob Dole: The promotion of human rights is key to the creation of a more stable and secure international environment. Bob Dole will pursue measures that integrate human rights into U.S. foreign policy, including the use of traditional diplomatic tools like the curtailment of military aid and the imposition of economic sanctions.

Euthanasia What is your position on legislation that would allow a physician to administer or prescribe lethal injection or drug overdose to assist in the suicide of patients diagnosed as terminally ill?

Bill Clinton:
☐ Support ☐ No Position ☒ Oppose
Bob Dole:
☐ Support ☐ No Position ☒ Oppose

Bob Dole: Bob Dole opposes legislation which would legalize physician-assisted suicide. He is disappointed with recent federal court rulings invalidating laws which would stop this practice. He believes that the American people, through their elected representatives, have the right to prohibit physician-assisted suicide — a right upon which unelected judges should not infringe.

Hospital Dedicates New Critical Care Center

By PAUL FREDETTE
Correspondent

ASHEVILLE — Ever so gently the Monarch butterfly, chosen symbol for the dedication, fluttered from Dr. John Coli's open hand and settled atop a photographer's head. St. Francis of Assisi must have rejoiced and cheered along with the crowd applauding the dedication of the new G. John Coli Critical Care Center at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Bishop William G. Curlin, who offered his blessing and prayer of thanksgiving, later remarked, "Everything was just joyful today." He called the event a "celebration of faith expressed in the tender love and care of the sick of which the Sisters of Mercy have been a witness for so many years."

Mercy Sister Rosalind Picot, president of the North Carolina region of the Sisters of Mercy of the Americas, commented on this "new beginning" for St. Joseph Health Care Services by recalling the fragile beginnings of the Sisters of Mercy, who were first invited to Wilmington during the Civil War to care for victims of yellow fever. They returned to North Carolina in 1892 to start a school in Belmont, and in 1930, they opened St. Joseph Sanitarium for tuberculosis patients in Asheville. Referring to their sponsorship of St. Joseph Hospital, Sister Picot reminded her audience that, in business, sponsorship means paying your money in order to deliver your message.

"Our money," Sister Picot said, "is imagination, the courage to initiate, and the decades of loving, competent service that we share with many people. Our message is the philosophy and mission of St. Joseph's, to participate in the healing ministry of Jesus." She introduced Coli, president and chief operating officer of St. Joseph's Health Services, in whose honor the new critical care center is being named, as one of the major participants with the Sisters of Mercy in carrying out that ministry. She thanked him for his efforts on behalf of St. Joseph Hospital and for sharing with the Sisters of Mercy the responsibility of insuring "that St. Joseph's is built on these six foundations: excellence, human dignity, justice, mercy, service and the sacredness of life."

In his remarks, Coli indicated that this beginning of a new era in critical care at St. Joseph is paralleled by the new relationship — the first of its kind in North Carolina — which has recently developed between St. Joseph Hospital and Mission Mercy Hospital. "It's very clear that through this partnership we can realize much more than either hospital could achieve alone," he said. He then spoke to the challenges yet to be met, especially that of increasing accessibility of health care to low-income families. "Much will be asked of our health care system in the coming years and much will be expected of us," Coli noted. He expressed his confidence that, with the trust and collaboration existing among the health care institutions and facilities in the area, "Mission + St. Joseph will realize its vision of seamless health care services for all the people of western North Carolina."

The new 16,500-square-foot critical care center is a state of the art facility designed by the Asheville architectural firm of Ellis, Bowers & Watson. It features column-free areas offering the medical staff an unobstructed view of patients and mini nurses-stations along the main corridor, surrounded by glass so that the nurses can look directly at their patients. The rooms are 15-20 percent larger than the average critical care private room to accommodate all the equipment necessary to monitor patients. The inclusion of several large lounges, explained architect John Ellis, is indicative of the hospital's sensitivity to the family's care of patients. "It's an unusual feature," said Ellis, "but one of the sisters really wanted to implement it for the immediate family members who help the nurses care for their loved ones."

An enormous effort was made to work with the hospital staff, said Coli, in planning the $7.2 million structure. In his estimation and much to his satisfaction, the 20-bed center is a direct reflection of the way the staff treats critical care patients.

Judging from the enthusiasm of the several hundred people who attended the ceremonies, Coli's pride is shared throughout the medical community. Judging from the merits of this new center, the legacy of Coli's vision and leadership will be a lasting one.

Belmont Abbey Hosts Steeplechase Turkey Trot

BELMONT — In an effort to resurface and stripe its quarter-mile running track, Belmont Abbey College hosts the First Annual 5K Steeplechase Turkey Trot Run Nov. 16 on campus.

The fund raiser is presented by the college's Adult Degree Programs Council, whose members hope to raise $20,000 for the project. The track's current dilapidated condition prevents Belmont Abbey's track team from hosting events at the school.

Joe Marinello, an adult degree student and president of the council, calls the event an opportunity for the community "to give something back to the Abbey." Marinello is a co-manager of Harris Teeter Supermarkets, which is helping sponsor the event.

The day begins at 9 a.m. with the five kilometer run on a course certified by TAC. A "5K Fun Run/Walk/Crawl" begins at 10 a.m., and a children's course is also available for youngsters. The courses are mapped out across the perimeter of the campus, thus allowing participants to take in the beauty and history of Belmont Abbey.

Organizers call the Turkey Trot Run a family event and add that Harry, the Harris Teeter mascot, will provide balloons and give ribbons to the children participating on the "kiddie course."

The cost of the event is $20, which includes a t-shirt. Prizes, refreshments and the shirts will be available for all paying participants, and snacks and beverages will also be on sale for those coming to cheer on the runners and walkers. See the form below for registration information.

Pope True Hero In Defeating Communism, Walesa Says

PORTLAND, Ore. (CNS) — Pope John Paul II is the true hero of the bloodless revolution that freed Poland from communism, former Polish President Lech Walesa told Catholic school students during a visit to Portland in October. "The pope did not finance the struggle, but he activated moral values that overturned a system that had no values," said Walesa. "Communism is afraid of values like the devil is afraid of holy water," he told students. Walesa, president of Poland for five years following his election in 1990, was in Portland as part of a celebrity lecture series.

Diocesan Liturgy Leaders Seek To Connect Liturgy, Devotion

MINNEAPOLIS (CNS) — Representatives of more than 115 U.S. diocesan liturgical commissions and offices have called for a forum of scholars to help bishops and liturgists develop sound criteria for relating church liturgy and Catholic devotional life. The forum on liturgy and devotion was one of several proposals approved by more than 240 professional liturgical leaders who attended the national meeting of the Federation of Diocesan Liturgical Commissions Oct. 9-13 in Minneapolis.

U.S. Bishops To Discuss Young Adults, Economic Justice

WASHINGTON (CNS) — At their November meeting in Washington, the U.S. bishops are to vote on a pastoral plan for ministry with young adults. Also on the bishops' agenda are: a proposed statement of economic justice principles; norms for Catholic higher education; several liturgy decisions; plans for restructuring the National Conference of Catholic Bishops and U.S. Catholic Conference, the bishops' twin national conferences; a proposal to provide $1 million to fund their national Office for the Third Millennium from 1997 to 2000; and various decisions on priorities, plans and budget. The Nov. 11-14 meeting could be the last one the bishops conduct as NCCB-USCC. One of the restructuring proposals calls for merging

Dialogue With Non-Christians Seen Strengthening Catholics

ST. PAUL, Minn. (CNS) — Through dialogue with people of non-Christian faiths, Catholics not only strengthen their own faith but also awaken to their responsibilities as baptized followers of Christ, said Cardinal Francis Arinze. "The other religions can challenge Catholics to live up to ideals of the Christian faith," Cardinal Arinze said during a lecture in St. Paul. The cardinal, the Vatican's top official on inter-religious affairs, spoke at the University of St. Thomas as part of the Catholic Studies Program. Cardinal Arinze, a native of Nigeria, said the church should dialogue with Muslims, Buddhists, Jews and members of Africa's traditional religions especially because Christians form only a third of the world population, and Catholics only 18 percent.

Theme Chosen For 1997 Week Of Prayer For Christian Unity

GARRISON, N.Y. (CNS) — The theme for the 1997 Week of Prayer for Christian Unity will be "Be Reconciled to God," taken from 2 Corinthians. The observance will be held Jan. 18-25, and encompasses observances of Ecumenical Sunday, Jan. 19, and the federal Martin Luther King Jr. birthday observance, Jan. 20.

Sisters Pray For Healing After Insanity Verdict In Maine Killings

WATERVILLE, Maine (CNS) — Sisters at the Waterville convent where last January a former mental patient went on a murderous rampage said they were relieved that a verdict had been handed down in the case and were continuing to pray for everyone involved. On Oct. 16, former patient Mark Bechard was found innocent by reason of insanity by Superior Court Justice Donald Alexander. "There are no winners," said a statement from the nuns, the Servants of the Blessed Sacrament. Bechard, 38, a Waterville native, admitted beating to death Sister Edna Mary Cardozo, 68, and Sister Marie Julien Fortin, 67, and severely injuring two other nuns in the Jan. 27 attack. Judge Alexander ruled that Bechard was not criminally responsible for his actions because of mental illness. The judge ordered him committed indefinitely to the Augusta Mental Health Institute, where he has been held since his arrest.

Pope Names Coadjutor, New Auxiliary Bishops

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — With less than a year until China resumes control of Hong Kong, Pope John Paul II appointed a new bishop to eventually succeed the island's cardinal and a new auxiliary bishop for the territory. Both new bishops, whose appointments were announced Oct. 20, have extensive experience with the Catholic Church on the Chinese mainland. Salesian Father Joseph Zen, who has taught in government-approved major seminaries on the Chinese mainland, was named coadjutor bishop of Hong Kong. The 64-year-old automatically will succeed Cardinal John Baptist Wu Cheng-chung. At the same time, Pope John Paul named the diocese's vicar general, Msgr. John Tong, as an auxiliary bishop of Hong Kong.

St. Mary Church

SHELBY — The history of St. Mary parish found its beginnings thanks to the clergy from Belmont Abbey and, later, an enterprising Catholic from the north. In 1884, Benedictines from the Abbey — then called Mary, Help of Christians — began visiting Shelby to celebrate Mass with the few Catholic families living there.

Attempts to establish a mission and to build a church in town during the years following went without success. Finally, in 1935, another effort was underway.

The Weldon family, who had relocated to Shelby from Pennsylvania that year, went to work locating Catholic families in the area. Anne Weldon approached Benedictine Father Cuthbert Allen of St. Michael Church in Gastonia about celebrating Mass in Shelby, and thus the spiritual foundation for a mission church in Shelby was laid. Father Allen's first Mass in Shelby was celebrated in the home of Anne and Arthur Weldon on Aug. 11, 1935.

St. Mary's existence as a mission of St. Michael Parish continued into 1937, at which time the parishioners saw the result of their efforts come to fruition. A new 100-seat, cut-stone church had been built from the designs of Benedictine Father Michael McInerney, the renowned architect who designed hundreds of buildings during his career.

On July 11, 1937, Benedictine Right Reverend Vincent Taylor, abbot of Belmont Abbey, blessed the church. In October 1939, St. Mary attained parish status. Benedictines continued their pastorate at the church until 1944, when diocesan priests assumed responsibility for the parish, beginning with Father Walter Higgins.

The parish purchased its first rectory in 1946 when the then-current pastor, Father A.C. Adler, raised $8,000. Parishioners matched the funds, and St. Mary Church had its first major expansion.

By the end of World War II, a number of Catholics had settled in Shelby, and in 1952 the congregation was made up of 30 families. Industrial expansion from the north continued to bring Catholics to the region during the 1950s. To meet the needs of Catholics in the area, the parish was paying particular attention to enhancing religious education and to evangelizing by decade's end.

In 1961, Bishop

Vincent Waters established an Apostolic Training Center in nearby Kings Mountain to further the missionary movement at work in the Raleigh Diocese. A church on the property was renovated and dedicated to Christ the King. With that development, Christ the King Church became a mission of St. Mary's parish.

Back in Shelby, plans to expand the church facilities were underway during the early 1960s. Land was purchased on McGowan Road in 1963, and the parish began construction of a multi-purpose building which would include a church, parish hall, classrooms and living quarters for the pastor. Bishop Waters dedicated the building in June 1966.

Parish life continued to thrive into the 1970s. By 1978, the parish's debts had been paid, and a house was purchased for use as a rectory.

After years of celebrating Mass, teaching and socializing in the multi-purpose building, parishioners turned their attention to building a more suitable church. A building campaign began in 1985, and Bishop John Donoghue dedicated the new 450-seat St. Mary Church in May 1992.

Father Carl Kaltreider has been pastor at St. Mary Church since June 1996, when he took the place of Msgr. William Wellein. Msgr. Wellein had spent 12 years at St. Mary, and now serves as chaplain at the Little Flower Assisted Living Home in Charlotte. Father Kaltreider assumes the pastorate of an energetic parish, one which comprises almost 240 families and whose parishioners participate in an active Ladies' Guild, Men's Club, youth ministry, and other parish and civic forms of outreach.

Bob Dole:

☒ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bob Dole: Bob Dole is committed to keeping all guns out of the hands of criminals. He has proposed a national instant background check system of prospective gun buyers to prevent criminals from purchasing any type of firearm. In addition, Bob Dole supports stiff mandatory sentences for criminals who use a firearm during the commission of a crime.

Foreign Aid

What is your position on increased US assistance to poor countries to meet the needs of poor people through expanded aid for sustainable development and debt relief?

Bill Clinton:

Bob Dole:

☐ Support ☐ No Position ☐ Oppose

Bill Clinton: As we work to target our assistance programs toward the areas in which they can do the most good, we must also work to ensure that those programs are administered more efficiently. President Clinton regrets that Congress has decided to make excessive cuts in US assistance to sustainable development abroad.

Bob Dole: Foreign aid must be a precisely targeted instrument of foreign policy, largely designed to advance specific US foreign policy goals. In order to reduce wasteful spending, the foreign aid bureaucracy must be reformed. However, Bob Dole has been a strong advocate of providing humanitarian assistance where needed.

Diocesan Couples Mark Golden, Silver Anniversaries

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

CHARLOTTE — Ann and Gordon Forester offer this advice to newlyweds: Be unselfish, work together and make sure God is a part of your marriage if you want to live "happily ever after."

The parishioners at St. Paul the Apostle Church in Greensboro are not licensed counselors, but many would consider them experts: The Foresters have been happily married 50 years. They also were among the more than 100 couples from the Diocese of Charlotte who renewed their wedding vows at the annual 25th and 50th Wedding Anniversary Celebration Oct. 27 at St. John Neumann Church.

Natives of Chicago, the couple met in high school, went to each other's proms, and began dating. Their romance blossomed, but it would be five years before their wedding day as Gordon traveled overseas to serve his country in World War II. On June 15, 1946, the couple finally tied the knot.

"There were more weddings that day than any other in the history of this country (because of the war)," Mrs. Forester noted.

Over the years, the Foresters have learned to respect each other and also make sure God is a part of their lives. "It may not have been true in the very beginning, but we soon learned the Lord was very important to both of us to help us get through," Mrs. Forester said.

"Without Him, it couldn't have worked."

"With six kids, we would have never made it," Mr. Forester added.

For the past 16 years, the diocese has asked all parishes to submit the names of couples eligible for the celebration. After the names are compiled into a master list, each of the couples is invited to the fall celebration in Charlotte. All told, 257 couples were invited this year.

Barbara Evans, who assists the diocesan Office of Justice and Peace with special projects, helped coordinate what has become a well-attended event. "We had 113 couples sign up to attend the Mass, and nearly 450 scheduled to be here including family and guests," she said.

Bishop William G. Curlin addressed the celebrating couples in his homily. "Eighteen years ago this week, I saw my mother and father together for the last time. My mother was dying of cancer. When she passed away, my father turned to me with tears in his eyes and said, 'Son, you've lost your mother; I've lost the best friend in my life.'"

"We can see this in your lives as well," the bishop said. "Spouses who understand true friendship...a friendship rooted in the love which is selfless, generous, patient and kind."

Bishop Curlin also said happy marriages include God. "Today, we honor that unselfish love that is Jesus Christ;

Pope Says Church Accepts Evolution As Well-Supported

By LYNNE WEIL

ROME (CNS) — In a message to international scientists, Pope John Paul II said the Church accepts evolution as a theory well-supported by research in a variety of scientific fields.

At the same time, though, the pope said that the development of the spiritual aspect of human life cannot be explained scientifically.

In a statement Oct. 22 to the plenary session of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, the pontiff said there was meaning in the fact that several scientific disciplines had come up with evidence of evolution independent of one another.

"More than 'the theory' of evolution, it is appropriate to speak of 'the theories' of evolution," he said. "This plurality accounts, on the one hand, for the diversity of explanations that have been proposed as the mechanism of evolution and, on the other hand, for diverse philosophies."

The pope noted that he was not the first pontiff to state that science and Church can find points of agreement in this area.

For example, he said, Pope Pius XII wrote in a 1950 encyclical that there was no conflict between evolution and the doctrine of the faith, as long as there were certain firm points of faith where no concession can be made.

"Today, nearly half a century after the publication of the encyclical, new knowledge leads to recognition of the theory of evolution as more than a hypothesis," Pope John Paul said.

Charles Darwin introduced evolutionary theory in the 19th century with his book, "On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection."

The Vatican of late has shown a heightened interest in evolution theory.

At a June symposium, co-sponsored by the Vatican Observatory and encouraged by the pope, participants suggested that to view the development of human life in terms of an "ongoing creation" is a scenario that makes increasing sense,

Conference Explores Spirituality

HICKORY — A diverse slate of speakers will discuss how the leading voices of Catholicism and Lutheranism look at spirituality in the Fourth Annual Aquinas & Luther Conference at Lenoir-Rhyne College Nov. 10-12.

The yearly conferences are designed to be of interest to laity and clergy wanting to explore the thoughts of renowned theologians Thomas Aquinas and Martin Luther. Also, organizers of the conference say they hope to make a contribution toward the healing of the 16th-century breach in Christendom.

A highlight for this year's conference is an exhibit from Altenburg, Germany — where Luther spent some time — featuring artifacts from the region, including a replica of Luther's Bible.

Father L. Gregory Jones of Loyola College in Maryland will present the keynote address, focusing on "Aquinas and Luther on Life with God."

Co-editor of a leading theological periodical, Modern Theology, Father Jones has received various recognitions, including graduation from Duke Divinity School summa cum laude, and a Lilly Foundation Grant. He has written some three dozen book reviews and as many articles, has co-edited four books and written two. In the November issue of Christianity Today, Father Jones will be featured among a handful of "up and coming" theologians.

Dr. Deal W. Hudson, publisher and editor of Crisis magazine, will be banquet speaker. Crisis is a cultural magazine exploring society from the Catholic perspective. Hudson is also a published writer, and before coming to Crisis, he taught philosophy at Mercer University, New York University and Fordham University.

This year's lecturers include two prominent Roman Catholic scholars and two Lutheran scholars.

Father Romanus Cessario, professor of systematic theology at St. John's Seminary in Brighton, Mass., is associate editor of The Thomist, a journal of studies about Thomas Aquinas. Father Cessario is the author of several books as well, including Christian Satisfaction in Aquinas and The Moral Virtues and Theological Ethics.

Father Paul Wadell is professor of Christian ethics at Catholic Theological Union in Chicago. He earned degrees at the Catholic Theological Union, and obtained a Ph.D. in theology from the University of Notre Dame. Father Wadell has written many articles on the Christian moral spiritual life, and is the author of three books, including Friendship and the Moral Life.

Dr. James M. Kittleson is a professor of history at Ohio State University. He has received numerous honors and awards, and has published a biography, Luther the Reformer: The Story of the Man and His Career as well as many articles, one of which was recently published in Lutheran Quarterly.

Dr. Paul Rorem has received many honors and fellowships in the United States, Rome and Germany. He is a Benjamin B. Warfield Associate Professor of (Medieval) Ecclesiastical History at the Princeton Theological Seminary in New Jersey. Rorem has written extensively on spirituality, mysticism, and related topics. He is the principal contributor to the volume on pseudo-Dionysius in the Classics of Western Spirituality series, and has published a book, Pseudo-Dionysius: A Commentary on the Text and an Introduction to their Influence.

Dr. Larry Yoder, Lenior-Rhyne Professor of Theology and Philosophy and director of the Lineberger Center for Cultural and Educational Renewal, will serve as respondent, providing a summary of the conference.

The conference opens with a free vespers service and keynote address at St. Andrew Lutheran Church at 7:30 p.m. Nov. 10. The lecture series begins at 9 a.m. Monday and Tuesday at Belk Centrum on campus. The banquet will be held at 7:15 p.m. Nov. 11 in Cromer Center. Tickets for the banquet are available separately for $15 each.

Cost for the conference is $65 per person, with reduced rates of $25 for senior citizens and seminarians. Cost for Lenior-Rhyne students, faculty and staff is $15. The fee covers admission to all events, including the banquet. Other meals and lodgings are to be arranged by those attending. For information, contact Denise Smith, associate director of public relations, (704) 328-7109.

Diocesan Planner Brings Long Range Planning To Forefront

CHARLOTTE — In a diocese experiencing incredible growth, one key to planning for future needs lies in the ability to strategically identify growth trends to impact the development of agencies, ministries and parishes.

With strategic long range planning as a high priority, the diocese is a step closer to its goal with the addition of Director of Planning George Cobb.

"I look forward to working with George to develop a master plan to determine, prioritize and address the needs of our growing diocese," says Father Mauricio West, chancellor and vicar general. "It is my hope that he will assist us in asking important questions, directing our attention to new ministries, to reviewing our present emphases. I believe it is imperative that we become increasingly more pro-active in our response to the diverse needs of the diocese."

"Studying growth patterns will help the diocese determine where and when to develop new ministries, and build new parishes, schools, and other resources," says Cobb. With hands-on experience in construction and strategic planning, Cobb will spend a lot of time learning the needs of each area of the diocese.

In addition to the focus on strategic long range planning, Cobb says, "We need to maintain an awareness of how zoning and land use patterns affect our diocesan properties." Further, he looks forward to mapping parish boundaries. The information has always been there, and soon mapping will assist pastors and parishes to visualize their respective properties.

While designing maps to delineate boundaries is part of Cobb's parcel, by no means is he being pegged a mapmaker. "Planning," he says, "is a resource that will help pastors, principals and agency directors." And an opportunity for this planner by profession to fuse his expertise in strategic planning with the ministry and mission of the diocese.

The 41-year-old former transportation planner for the Gaston Metropolitan Planning Organization sees his role as one of facilitator. "The real planners will be from parishes, vicariates and even the chancery," says Cobb, who envisions a planning commission to assist in the voluminous task of evaluating and prioritizing the needs of the diocese.

The prospect of going from one county of responsibility to an area encompassing half the state is exciting to Cobb, who spent the past 17 years as a

Mass Honors Present Day Saint Lukes

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

WINSTON-SALEM — On Oct. 18, feast day of St. Luke the physician and evangelist, medical professionals from Winston-Salem and neighboring cities came together to honor their patron saint and to organize as a strong Catholic voice in medicine. Bishop William Curlin celebrated Mass at St. Leo Church, giving an inspirational homily filled with praise and encouragement for the professionals. The following day, the bishop celebrated a similar Mass for medical professionals in Charlotte.

"I know from my own experience God uses you as His instruments of healing. This is a wonderful gift that you share with the people of God," said Bishop Curlin. "Not only healing and your medical skill, but your compassion, tenderness and a sacred respect for all human life."

Dr. Doug Miller, internist and a parishioner at St. Aloysius Church in Hickory, was particularly moved by the bishop's words. "Although there are time restraints which sometimes interfere with my ability to minister to patients in that complete and loving way, I feel I am called to do so. The Catholic Medical Association will allow us to come together as Catholic physicians to find practical ways to accomplish what we are called by Christ to do," he said.

After Mass, a reception followed with guest speaker, Dr. William Colliton, clinical professor of obstetrics and gynecology at George Washington Medical Center and past president of the local chapter of the Catholic Medical Association (Catholic Physician Guild) in Washington. "When you turn to God in your practice, amazing things will happen," said Dr. Colliton. "But you can't give to your patients what you don't have. Organizations such as this can give you the strong spiritual formation you need to face the difficult patient whose illness is much greater than its physical component."

Dr. Colliton spoke of the challenge Catholic physicians face, how they must be true to the gospel, set the example, and not buckle under secular peer pressure. "The (physicians) guild is needed to reform and bring back the Judeo-Christian ethics in medicine. You must form yourself spiritually in the core (and then Jesus can use you to cure others completely)," he said.

Father Ed Vilkauskas, diocesan director of evangelization, who organized the events in Winston-Salem and Charlotte, sees the association as a vehicle to spread the faith. "From the positive response of those who came on Friday and Saturday, we appear to have the making of enthusiastic and committed core groups," he said.

Once formed, each chapter of the Catholic Medical Association will determine its own constituency and focus. Whether the group will include all medical professionals or separate into various occupations will be entirely up to the individual planners in the three cities where diocesan officials hope to organize chapters — Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Asheville.

"The fact that each chapter would be under the diocese but locally driven is appealing to me. We can be much more effective if focused on the specific concerns of our own community," said Dr. Robert Lee, radiation oncologist at Baptist Hospital in Winston-Salem and member of St. Leo Church.

"Health care professionals are in a strategic position as part of the healing ministry. Patients are often touched by the compassion shown to them. The professional also benefits by serving others. That service will improve and become more gratifying, as they become more grounded in their faith," said Father Vilkauskas.

That love in your life that has surmounted the obstacles, the challenges, the heartaches and disappointments, and still triumphs in your marriage."

As part of the ceremony, couples renewed the vows that they made many years ago. For Tracy and Mary Lou Page of St. Eugene parish in Asheville, 50 years of marriage rekindled memories of the day they met.

"I knew she was the one," Mr. Page said of that fateful Sunday afternoon.

Like the Foresters, the Page's romance was not deterred by World War II.

"I waited 18 months for him (to come home)," Mrs. Page said.

"I guess he was worth the wait," she smiled. "This is the third time we've renewed our vows, so I guess it's for good."

Pope Says Church Accepts Evolution As Well-Supported Theory, from page 1

scientifically and theologically.

In its late-October plenary session, the Pontifical Academy of Sciences set out to refine theological expression of evolution theory. Its main theme was "The Origins and the Evolution of Life: Reflections on Science at the Dawn of the Third Millennium."

In his statement, Pope John Paul explained that it is in the Church's interest to develop its scientific knowledge.

"In the domain of inanimate and animate nature, the evolution of science and its applications gives rise to new questions," he said. "The Church can understand its importance all the better by recognizing its essential aspects."

Speaking in general about the scientific method, the pope pointed out that "a theory proves its validity with the degree to which it submits to verification."

"It is constantly measured by the accumulation of facts," he continued. "Where it ceases to be able to account for these facts, it shows its limits and its inability to be adapted. It must therefore be reconsidered."

Later in his remarks, the pope noted that although this method has been used over time to refine the view of human biology and its evolution, the method cannot be applied to spiritual matters.

Pope John Paul said in considering the evolution of humankind, one is confronted with an "ontological leap" that cannot be explained through observation or measurement.

These means of acquiring knowledge, he said, fail to explain "the moment of passage into the spiritual," when the creature that became the modern human being acquired a soul. Only theology can fill that gap, the pope said.

In closing his remarks to the scientists, Pope John Paul evoked "an evangelical truth to cast a higher light on your research into the origins and deployment of living matter."

The Gospel and evolution theory do not mean the same thing, the pope concluded, when they speak of "life."

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Papal Ordination Celebrations To Include International Events

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Celebrations marking the 50th anniversary of Pope John Paul II's ordination to the priesthood are scheduled to include diocesan, national and international events.

Activities marking the Nov. 1 anniversary began Oct. 31 with the Austrian government's gift to the pope: a concert featuring the Salzburg chamber orchestra and the Mozart choir of Linz performing Handel's "Messiah" in the Vatican's audience hall.

On the actual anniversary date, the Diocese of Rome plans to honor its bishop, the pope, with a Mass in St. Peter's Basilica. Pope John Paul is scheduled to preside at the liturgy and all the priests of the diocese have been invited to concelebrate.

The heart of the celebration will be the Nov. 7-10 gathering of priests, bishops and cardinals from around the world who also are celebrating the 50th anniversary of their ordination in 1996.

Some 1,500 jubilarians are expected in Rome for the opening celebration of vespers with Pope John Paul and a reception in the audience hall.

The program for Nov. 8-9 will begin with morning prayer and a reflection on Pope John Paul's writings about the priesthood.

Several priests marking their anniversaries will share with the assembly experiences and reflections on their own 50 years of priesthood.

On both evenings, participants will divide into language groups for the celebration of Mass in one of Rome's principal basilicas. Presiding at the liturgies will be cardinals celebrating their 50th anniversary of ordination or top Vatican officials.

All of the world's cardinals, in addition to every priest and bishop ordained in 1946, have been invited to concelebrate the key event of the pope's anniversary festivities: a Nov. 10 Mass in St. Peter's Square.

Faith Doing Justice Conference Gets Readers' Support

With all due respect to Father Kirsch, with regard to his letter in the Oct. 18 issue of The Catholic News & Herald, I believe the information presented to him was much different than the information given me.

Father Kirsch stated that since Vatican II there has been an attempt to co-mingle sociology with theology. Was the Incarnation not a co-mingling? Was Jesus not about social work when He comforted, healed and made whole the people He met in His ministry? Did Jesus not proclaim the good news (theology) when He taught people about the kingdom of God? Is that not what we are called to do in this faith walk called life?

Did Jesus not commission His disciples and us to do the same?

I agree with Father Kirsch, abortion is a travesty. I was one, many years ago who picketed the abortion clinics. But I have come to realize, as the number of abortions increase, that going after the women who are aborting is not the total answer. It is just as important to find the cause and address the issue from the root level. I would like to comment that abortion was mentioned many times as a justice issue throughout the conference — not just by the participants but by keynote speakers as well.

I came to the conference searching, needing to find where my Catholic faith stood on justice issues. Not only were my questions answered, but I left empowered and confident that I can be about God's work with my Catholic faith as a guideline and my Church as a support.

Regarding Father Ed Kirsch's letter:

1. The word "social" has been used to deliberately indicate that our moral concern is not only personal and private but that sinfulness is built into the structure of our society. Examples: John Paul II, "The social message of the Gospel must not be considered a theory, but above all else a basis and motivation for action." The U.S. Bishops use the terms social ministry, social action, social concerns, social justice to describe "efforts on the social mission of the Church."

2. Concern about abortion not being mentioned: Our diocese has a Respect Life office coordinating life-related issues — abortion, euthanasia, capital punishment.

The Justice and Peace office has a very different agenda as reflected in the conference. Diocesan offices should not duplicate services and overlap programs.

3. Regarding the keynote speakers: Sister Evelyn Mattern founded the Justice and Peace Office for the Raleigh Diocese and served on the staff of the N.C. Council of Churches. Her modeling of the vowed Christian life, witness to justice in the face of personal threats, and prophetic stance on behalf of homeless immigrants is more important than the canonical standing of her community. I suggest also that the Church's integrity is far more threatened by sexism within the Church than by feminism.

The other keynote speaker is criticized as an "influential progressive." Is Father Kirsch endorsing "insignificant regressionism" as a standard for our diocese?

I was present at the conference and believe that sound Catholic teaching was well represented.

Rev. George Kloster, Pastor
St. Michael Church, Gastonia

I, for one, do not understand Father Kirsch's concern with co-mingling social justice with theology. If Father read the Bishop's Pastoral Letter on the Economy, he would observe numerous examples of sociology and theology working hand-in-hand. I do not believe that this concern has much validity on the world of today's Church.

I am confused by his diatribe on the absence of the word "abortion" from the agenda. Forty percent of his letter was spent on this subject. In order to satisfy him, I guess every article, every agenda and every publication written by Catholics should mention abortion. From discussions that I took part in and heard swirling around me, our desires to end abortion and capital punishment were strongly voiced.

Conspicuously absent from his letter were mentions of what was on the agenda. Some of the agenda items included: Parish Social Ministry, Scriptural Foundations for Economic Justice and Promoting Justice in Your Parish with the Campaign for Human Development and Catholic Relief Services.

I am sorry Father Kirsch did not join in this conference.

Protestants And Catholics Together: Unthinkable Or Inevitable?

My mom was the baptized Anglican, my dad the Catholic. Religion was always interesting in our home, especially on Sunday. In my earliest years I would sit by my mother's side at the local Episcopal Church, while my older brother went to St. Joseph's down the street. When I went to Catholic grade school, my church-going became strictly Catholic.

I believe it was just about the time of my First Communion that it occurred to me to ask my parents in what church they were married. I can still see them sitting on the couch, holding hands, and somewhat taken aback by the question.

"Actually," my dad stammered, "we weren't married in a church at all. We were married in the church rectory." "Why?" "Well, that's the way things were done then, but now things have changed." "What things?"

It was at that point my mom jumped into the conversation and brought to it a simple, gentle, and as always, a very reassuring perspective. "Tommy, all you really have to know right now is this: When you, your brother and dad and I all meet in heaven one day, I promise you, we will all be able to sit together."

That gracious moment helped me all through school, especially when one of the nuns seemed to stare right at me when teaching part of the catechism that said anyone who knows the true Church and did not join would not enter the kingdom of heaven. Somehow, I knew that my mother had it right, and that this nun was, perhaps, a bit overzealous. My mom expressed for me what Christ clearly meant in His prayer for all "to be one, Father, even as you and I are one."

This year Catholics are joining activities honoring Martin Luther on the 450th anniversary of his death. That would have been inconceivable to both Protestants and Catholics before Vatican II. But after centuries of turmoil and bitterness, understanding and tolerance have slowly cracked the wall of mutual distrust.

In fact, communication was begun as early as 1937 in France. Abbé Paul Couturier created a "base community" of Catholics and Protestants aimed at taking practical steps to overcome division and find common ground. With the Second Vatican Council of the '60s, the Roman Catholic Church turned a corner in its commitment to ecumenical unity. But the most vital dimensions of the ecumenical movement occur locally in families and parishes, in neighborhood and towns across the globe.

Thirty years of dialogue have led to new understandings about what Luther taught and accomplished. In February, three southwestern Pennsylvania Bishops — representing the Catholic, Lutheran and Episcopalian churches — signed a "Call Into Covenant." This agreement called upon local congregations of the three faiths to cooperate in parish events, share under-used facilities, and merge ministries to those in need. They are committed to mutual action in eradicating bigotry and intolerance about their respective faiths. Most important: They pray for one another and offer joint prayer in times of thanksgiving and crisis.

In a letter to priests of his diocese, Bishop Donald Wuerl of Pittsburgh, said Pope John Paul II's encyclical letter That They May Be One (Et Unum Sint) "places before us the commitment of the Church to that unity to which Christ calls us."

Meanwhile, in Beaverton, Ore., a small group of Catholics and Lutherans have worshipped together for 10 years. Both Catholics and Lutherans listen to Scripture and sit side-by-side during the homily, but part along denominational lines for the Eucharist.

Since my mom and dad were married in that rectory, it has become clear that each of us is called to express our religious identities by living our common Christian faith as far as possible. In doing so, we remain open to the promise that the Holy Spirit will surely lead us to that place where we will be able to sit together.

Were There Once More Gospels?

Q. In your column nearly two years ago, you mentioned other Gospels than the four we have. You specifically referred to the Gospel of Thomas and said the text is available. Can you tell us where?

How many other Gospels are there? Why don't we hear more about them?

A. We are aware of several Gospels and other writings composed by early Christians, which for a while held some prominence, but gradually fell along the wayside.

They include the so-called Gospel of Mary, the Proto-Evangelion ("original Gospel") of James, the Apocalypse of Peter and so on.

At least several seem to have connections with one of the gnostic sects, which for many years occasioned intense philosophical and theological conflicts within Christian communities of the first centuries.

For the most part we possess almost nothing of the actual texts, just a few isolated scraps of passages and a number of references to them in other documents.

The Gospel of Thomas is special for a number of reasons. While scholars knew it existed, and quotations from it were numerous, the full text only became available about 50 years ago.

As the astounding story goes, two poor Egyptian men were wandering along the upper Nile in 1945, near the modern city of New Hammadi, looking for fertilizer. Under a rock they discovered a large jar, which they suspected held a magic spirit or perhaps a treasure.

When they opened the jar, specks of brown papyrus flew out. Inside were 13 papyrus codices (books) from the ancient library of Nag Hammadi, including the complete Coptic text of the Gospel of Thomas.

Since then, this Gospel has proven a priceless resource for New Testament studies. It differs from the canonical Gospels in that it is composed entirely of 114 "hidden sayings the living Jesus spoke and Judas Thomas the Twin recorded."

Nearly half of these sayings appear one way or another in our four Gospels; but 65 are found only in Thomas. These parallels, and lack of parallels, significantly affect the study of the sayings of Jesus in the synoptic Gospels.

Thomas may even be among the resources used in some manner by the authors of Mark, Matthew and Luke as they composed their Gospels. Certainly a close relationship of some sort exists between them.

As helpful and remarkable as these

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

A Reader's E-Mail

Dear Andrew and Terri,

My husband and I have been married for 10 years. Our marriage has been difficult from the beginning. There have been other women; he went through a period of drug abuse; we have had financial problems because of his mismanagement; we can't come to terms on his roles and responsibilities with our six-year-old daughter; and I never know when he's going to walk out on us, as he has done frequently.

Although we are separated now, I still have feelings for him and I believe he does for me. We've spoken with our priest and began counseling. However, my husband feels that everyone wants to gang-up on him and won't continue with the sessions. Throughout our problems I have remained faithful to him and still hope for a good marriage, though my family and friends insist that I should divorce him. Can this marriage be saved?

We often hear from couples who have problems from the onset of their relationships, problems that often predate the marriage. For any marriage to work there must be ground rules held sacred. Among those rules are certainly sexual exclusivity and emotional fidelity. Another important rule is that the living arrangement is not jeopardized by day to day pressure. One cannot be held in suspense, unsure of when they will be abandoned.

It's clear who's controlling this relationship. The writer has been held an emotional hostage throughout the marriage. While it may be commendable that she has held up her end of the deal, she is obviously under duress.

Can this marriage be saved? We don't know. But we do know that love isn't always easy. And often when love is needed most it goes against what we are most inclined to do.

The writer needs to understand that forced love, even through emotional manipulation, is rape.

Love for a spouse flows from love for self. The writer should discern whether her love for her husband comes genuinely from her self-esteem, of lack of self-esteem.

The writer faces difficult options. Ending the relationship will be a painful loss, but will open her to the possibility of a promising life.

Continuing the relationship as it has been promises the same results she's been getting. Working toward a renewed, healthy and happy marriage will require effort, patience, forgiveness and a partner willing to give the same. Whatever option she takes will demand faith and courage. We pray for her courage and strength.

*A Turning Point:Pope Celebrates Priestly Ordination

By JOHN THAVIS

VATICAN CITY (CNS)—This month, Pope John Paul II celebrates 50 years as a priest—the anniversary of a turning point in his lifelong spiritual journey. Considering his later career as archbishop, cardinal and pope, some may view his priestly ordination as secondary. The 76-year-old pontiff does not.

The pope has underlined the personal importance of the occasion by inviting the world's cardinals and thousands of priests and faithful to Rome for several days of prayer and festivities.

after the death of his only brother. To her consoling words, the youth replied stoically: "It was God's will."

The young Wojtyla had many models who quietly led him along the path to the priesthood: Father Kazimierz Figlewicz, the parish priest and catechist whom the pope later called "the guide of my young and rather complicated soul"; Father Edward Zacher, his high school religious director who would often enthuse about the discoveries of science and who took the students on skiing trips; and Jan Tyranowski, a visionary who became Wojtyla's spiritual mentor and introduced him to the writings of church mystics.

Though perpetually busy, the future pope always made time for religion. In his late teens, Karol Wojtyla the actor, writer and laborer was also participating in daily Mass, spiritual exercises, Marian devotion, meditation on religious essays and Bible study.

In 1942, Wojtyla stunned fellow members of the underground Rhapsodic Theater by telling them he planned to join the clandestine seminary. It was not an easy decision, and the others tried to talk him out of it, citing his great talent on the stage. But soon afterward he began his studies under the guidance of plant during the day, and the seminary studies were carried out at great risk: Being caught meant deportation or execution. After one Nazi roundup, the archbishop told Wojtyla and six other seminarians they would be safer living at his residence, where they dressed as priests.

He thrived in this environment and was already viewed by the archbishop as a future church leader. Yet the young Wojtyla, who wrote poems and a doctoral dissertation on the mysticism of St. John of the Cross, was also attracted to writings.

But the years in Italy were not all books and lectures. In typical fashion, he spent much time visiting the sanctuaries, shrines and monasteries of the country, discovering places of prayer and spiritual renewal. Also typical was that he went to Sunday Mass at a working-class church in the Roman suburbs.

The Father Wojtyla who returned to Poland for parish work in 1948 was better educated, but with an intense pastoral enthusiasm that marked his years as a priest. In between studying for another degree in ethics, he would take young people on hiking and camping trips, join in their soccer games and lead them in philosophical discussions. As both priest and pope, he has seen in youths a real openness to the Gospel.

His advancement as bishop, archbishop and supreme pontiff has in some ways distanced him from those simpler priestly ministries. But perhaps no previous pope has dedicated as much attention to the priesthood and the challenges that confront today's clergy.

He has met with groups of priests in more than 100 countries and constantly reminds local bishops to pay attention to the pastoral and personal needs of their clergy.

The pope called a synod on the priesthood in 1990 and later wrote a 220-page document on the subject. Moreover, every year since 1979 he has written a letter to the world's priests — a kind of spiritual pep talk, assuring priests that he thinks of them often and prays for them.

In his 1996 letter, he recalled some of his fellow seminarians who had died in the war and looked back on his own ordination in strikingly personal terms.

"For us, the priesthood, attained in those circumstances, took on a special value," he wrote. "I still cherish in my memory that great moment."

Pope John Paul II baptizes a child in the Sistine Chapel earlier this year.

Better than anyone else, Pope John Paul remembers that, back in the 1940s, the priesthood was not the only option open to him. As a young student living in Krakow in southern Poland, he had shown great talent as an actor, philosopher, poet and dramatist — and had worked as a common laborer, too.

When he abruptly entered the clandestine seminary during the Nazi occupation in 1942, many of his friends were surprised. In retrospect, though, it seems apparent that the seeds of his vocation were planted at an early age.

As a schoolboy in his native town of Wadowice, Karol Wojtyla sometimes awed his classmates by the intense way he would pray in church. This habit of deep meditation remained with him for life.

His philosophical outlook and his spiritual acceptance of hardship were also evident in youth. A friend of the Wojtyla family once recounted how she met the 12-year-old Karol shortly Krakow Archbishop Adam Sapieha.

He continued to work at a chemical monastic contemplation. Twice during these years he tried to join the Discalced Carmelites but was turned away with the advice: "You are destined for greater things."

On Nov. 1, 1946, he was ordained in Archbishop Sapieha's private chapel. The next day, he said Masses for the souls of his mother, brother and father. Before being dispatched for more studies in Rome, he had time to perform a baptism for friends.

As a student at Rome's Angelicum University, Father Wojtyla further developed his keen interest in Thomistic personalism and mystical theology. He sharpened an understanding of the relationship of faith to reason, and of individual conscience to Church doctrine, which were basic to many of his later

Couple's Gift Means Secure Future for Parish

FOREST CITY — Croswell and Ethel Ragan always loved Forest City and the Catholic Church. The couple converted to the faith in their mid-sixties and were a generous and active part of the community there until they passed away within months of each other.

The Ragans had no children and no extended family within the area. As such, they willed all of their possessions to Immaculate Conception Church. Due to their generosity, an endowment has been established for the parish, increasing the number of diocesan endowments to 24 and the total assets of the Foundation of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte to $2.5 million.

Father Conrad Kimbrough, now of Holy Spirit Church in Denver, knew the couple when he and the Ragans were Episcopalians. "We met when I was first in Episcopal seminary," he said. "They were just joyful, happy people, and they were always Catholic-minded." Father Kimbrough later converted to Catholicism and the Ragans followed suit some years later. "I was so happy when they became Catholic," he said. "To be in the Catholic Church is the greatest thing in the world to me, and I think it meant the same to them."

Immaculate Conception pastor Father Gabriel Meehan said the Forest City gift was a wonderful surprise. "It will let us now start making plans for the future, plans including a new and bigger church. The Ragans' gift shows us the great love they had for their parish."

The current Ragan endowment totals more than $485,000 and is restricted for the use of Immaculate Conception. The gift will continue to generate funds for the church because, as an endowment, the principal is never used. The church will use income generated by the principal for future expansion.

"Through their gift, the Ragans left a legacy that will allow Immaculate Conception to continue to grow and meet the needs of the parish in perpetuity," said Jim Kelley, executive director of the Foundation. "More and more parishioners are following the Ragans' example by remembering the Church in their wills and estate plans."

Kelley said individuals establishing endowments take another step in living out the life of stewardship. "Just as we make gifts from our monthly income, we also have an opportunity to give from our accumulated assets to the Church of the Diocese of Charlotte," he said.

St. James Parishioners Lay A Firmer Foundation

CONCORD — Father Daniel Carboy likes to plan for the future.

As pastor of St. James Church, he is always looking for ways to keep the parish on financially sound ground. A fund drive helped build a new parish center nearly three years ago, but the center's dedication also produced another avenue for Father Carboy and parishioners to serve the faithful for generations to come.

"Bishop Curlin was here for the dedication with some friends, and afterward, I was talking to one of the Washington D.C. priests visiting," Father Carboy explained. "We got on the subject of money, and the pastor said he had $20,000 a year coming into his parish 'free' every year. I asked him how, and he told me they had a $400,000 endowment."

Soon thereafter, Father Carboy was presented with the opportunity to create an endowment for St. James when a parishioner donated $4,000. "I asked her if I could use the money to start an endowment, and she agreed," he said. Since that initial donation in the summer of 1994, the endowment has grown to nearly $20,000.

The money will continue to generate funds for the church because, as an endowment, the principal is never used. At St. James, the church also reinvests income generated by the principal.

"I think having an endowment is very important to the life of the church," Father Carboy said. "As a parish grows, so do its needs."

Each year, parishioners are given two opportunities to earmark donations specifically for the endowment; second collections are taken at Easter and in August (to commemorate the church's anniversary). "We have special envelopes we provide, and I explain the endowment process in the bulletin a few weeks before each collection. I tell them how this will better prepare the church for the future," Father Carboy said.

"Parishioners have been very generous," he added.

"It's a challenge to convince people of something that might happen 20 years from now, but I keep on trying to educate our parishioners," Father Carboy said. "I try not to talk about money very much, but they seem to be responding."

Although the endowment's funds have not been earmarked for a specific purpose, the pastor said it will serve the St. James family for many years.

"I think it's a great legacy to leave the next generation," he said. "The endowment keeps producing. And we can use the assets from it and it's still there. I like that idea."

Many churches do not plan for the future, but according to Father Carboy, creating an endowment is something he recommends other parishes to consider.

"It's almost like a young family," he said. "They start out with their jobs and have 'x' amount of money earmarked for food, clothing, electricity, and other necessities. They also need to plan for the future. The church is no different. We need to be prepared for the future as well."

Message from the President

On June 30, 1996, the Foundation of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte, Inc. completed its second year of operation. As President of the Board of Directors, I am proud to present the Foundation's 1995-96 Annual Report to the people of the Diocese of Charlotte.

During the past year, 7 new endowments were added to the Foundation to support the following: Bishop McGuinness High School, Charlotte Catholic High School, The Diocesan Support Appeal, Living Waters Catholic Reflection Center, Our Lady of Grace Catholic Church, Sacred Heart Catholic Church and Holy Name Catholic Church (in New Bedford, Massachusetts). Those additions increase our number of endowments 41%, from 17 to 24 endowments. One annuity trust was also established by an individual last year.

Our total assets at the end of the fiscal year were $2,556,242, an increase of 153% over the previous year's amount of $1,010,661. Invested assets generated a return of 16.5% for the year ending June 30, 1996, after generating a return of 15.6% the previous year. We believe those numbers represent a significant accomplishment for our first two years.

I want to express my gratitude to all who have helped make the Foundation so successful in its first two years. I am particularly grateful to the individuals, living and deceased, who have established endowments in the Foundation to support the work of the Church. I am also grateful to the pastors, principals and agency directors who established endowments for their respective parishes, schools and agencies. I applaud Bishop Curlin and our volunteer board members who bring leadership, enthusiasm, vision and a deep faith commitment to our efforts.

In this year's report, we have included a story of a couple who established an endowment for their parish in Forest City and a story of a pastor and pastoral council in Concord who established an endowment for their parish. We hope these stories will encourage other individuals, pastors and pastoral councils to do the same.

Our first two years have been good ones. All of us on the board are committed to expanding our current endowments and building new endowments to help ensure the future of our parishes, schools and agencies.

Sincerely yours,

V.M. Nussbaum, Jr., President

Board of Directors

The Foundation is governed by a Board of Directors composed of clergy and lay people. The Board's objective is to pursue a conservative investment policy consistent with reasonable growth while prudently safeguarding the principal. The directors are leaders in their parishes and communities, and are accountable to both donors and recipients. This accountability includes the professional investment of the Foundation's assets while ensuring that the funds are disbursed according to the donor's wishes.

The Catholic Heritage Society

The Catholic Heritage Society is the diocese's way of honoring the Christian generosity of Catholic friends who are providing for the future of the church. Membership in the Catholic Heritage Society is open to anyone who agrees to make a planned gift to the Diocese of Charlotte or any of its parishes, schools, agencies or organizations. Consider the following planned gifts:

■ A BEQUEST IN YOUR WILL is perhaps the simplest way to give. You can name the Foundation to receive a gift of cash or other property from your estate. You can stipulate that the Foundation receive a specified amount, a percentage of your estate, or the remainder after all the other bequests are fulfilled.

■ GIFTS OF CASH, SECURITIES, REAL ESTATE or other TANGIBLE ASSETS to establish an endowment are an ideal way of giving to the Foundation, particularly when the donated assets are highly appreciated.

■ GIFTS OF LIFE INSURANCE allow you to make a gift that might be larger than if you were to give an asset outright. You can give the Foundation a paid up policy that you already own, or you can purchase a policy to donate.

■ LIFE INCOME ARRANGEMENTS allow you to make gifts to the Foundation during your lifetime while retaining and even increasing your income from those assets for the remainder of your life. These include trusts and annuities.

These and other opportunities for giving to the Foundation of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte can be explored with you. The Foundation staff will be happy to work with you and your advisors to help determine which gift is right for you.

Palookaville

Despite Best Efforts, Lovable Trio Ends Up On Straight And Narrow

NEW YORK (CNS) — Out of work and out of dough, three pals decide to temporarily turn to crime in "Palookaville" (Goldwyn).

As the movie opens, Sid (William Forsythe) is playing midnight lookout as Russ (Vincent Gallo) and Jerry (Adam Trese) hammer through a jewelry store's basement wall. But the hapless novices have miscalculated and end up in a bakery with little more than donuts for their trouble.

A blue-collar Jersey City, N.J., neighborhood is their turf. Sad sack Sid lives alone with his two dogs since his wife split years earlier. Gutter-mouth Russ still lives angrily at home with nosy mom (Suzanne Shepherd), his sour sister and her cop husband (Gareth Williams).

Only mild-mannered Jerry is happily married and the father of a toddler. His stressed-out wife Betty (Lisa Gay Hamilton) works in a supermarket, putting up with the manager's unwanted overtures just to keep the household going.

The trio hits on the idea to rob the supermarket's armored truck after they rush the driver, who had a heart attack behind the wheel, to the hospital and return his truck to the market.

Jerry doesn't want to risk losing his family and Sid would just as soon start a modest car service for the elderly, but impatient Russ eggs them on. Soon they are buying toy guns and studying the 1950 movie "Armored Car Robbery" for tips on how to pull off the big heist.

Naturally, nothing goes as planned, especially when they are rounded up by the cops after their abortive attempt to score the big one.

Director Alan Taylor acknowledges as inspiration Italo Calvino's short stories about jobless post-World War II characters conniving to survive in a war-torn economy — and David Epstein's script transports their kind to New Jersey with similar humanity lurking under criminal intent.

The movie ends up a surprisingly warm-hearted comedy (albeit with too many four-letter words), one in which the basic decency of the trio keeps foiling their plans for greener pastures.

Some honest drama also materializes as Jerry's precarious economic status starts taking a toll on his marriage.

What is pleasing is that the narrative maintains a consistently wry and ironic tone without turning the would-be robbers into cartoon buffoons. The episodic situations resonate with droll humor to be found in the tiny details of their frustrating "self-unemployed" existence. When their big moment arrives, Sid can't even pull on a ski mask without it getting snagged on his glasses.

The threesome are nicely fleshed out, with Russ suffering a setback for his romantic insincerity while Sid finds romance with a student-salesclerk (Bridgit Ryan) in a second-hand shop.

The key performances are appropriately understated and by film's end viewers are likely to be won over by these lovable losers who end up on the straight and narrow despite their best efforts to the contrary.

Because of some sexual innuendo, brief nudity and recurring rough language with profanity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Video

"The Abominable Dr. Phibes" (1971)

Horror movie featuring superb art deco sets and the campy good humor of Vincent Price as the gruesome doctor of both medicine and theology who takes revenge for his wife's death by following the pattern of the 10 plagues found in Exodus. Despite a certain wacky unreality running through the whole exercise, director Robert Fuest uses some nasty close-ups that seem a little strong for all but devoted horror fans.

"The Beast With Five Fingers" (1946)

Minor horror story set in the Italian villa of a famous pianist (Victor Francen) whose sudden death brings terror after his sinister secretary (Peter Lorre) reports seeing the dead man's severed hand scuttling about, though the local police chief (J. Carrol Naish) is unconvinced.

Directed by Robert Florey, the picture's eerie atmosphere is sustained by Lorre's maniacal performance and fearsome visuals of the antic hand. Scenes of menace and suggestions of the occult but rational explanations are never far away.

"The Body Snatcher" (1945)

Gruesome chills from a Robert Louis Stevenson story in which a doctor (Henry Daniell) in 1831 Edinburgh buys cadavers for his medical school from a grave-robber (Boris Karloff) who turns to murder when cemetery guards cut off his supply. Produced by Val Lewton and directed by Robert Wise, the setting and characters hold interest while the dark, sinister atmosphere provides goosebumps along with some ghoulish plot twists. Minimal violence but much menace and suspense.

"Bride of Frankenstein" (1935)

In a horror sequel better than the 1931 original, the macabre Dr. Praetorious (Ernest Thesiger) stirs things up by persuading the reluctant Frankenstein (Colin Clive) to create a mate (Elsa Lanchester) for the unhappy Monster (Boris Karloff). Director James Whale treats the gruesome proceedings with dry wit (a prologue featuring Lanchester as author Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley) and dark humor (timorous Una O'Connor), though the picture is best remembered for the poignant sequence in which the hunted monster is befriended by a blind hermit (O.P. Heggie). Some stylized violence and considerable menace.

"Carnival of Souls" (1962)

Low-budget but effective horror tale directed by Herk Harvey follows the eerie experiences of a church organist (Candace Hilligoss) after she emerges from a car crash in a Kansas river until her reunion weeks later with others who died in the accident. Sinister, unsettling atmosphere and sexual situations.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

Piper Laurie and Walter Matthau star in "The Grass Harp," an adaptation of Truman Capote's novel about a boy's adolescence in a small Southern town during the Depression. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification for the film is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

People In The News

Cardinal Bernardin Halts Chemotherapy, Given Only Six Months To Live

CHICAGO (CNS) — Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago said Oct. 17 that he has halted chemotherapy for the cancer in his liver and has been told he has perhaps six to seven months to live.

The cardinal met briefly with reporters following a Catholic Charities luncheon.

He also told them he has canceled plans to attend the 50th jubilee in Rome of Pope John Paul II's ordination to the priesthood because "I have to conserve my energy. My biggest priority is to serve this local church."

But he said he plans to attend the Nov. 11-14 meeting of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops in Washington.

He heads a committee that is to present the bishops with a major proposal for restructuring the conference. "We're scheduled to make our final report next month, and my hope is that I will be there to make that presentation," he said.

Cardinal Bernardin underwent surgery in June 1995 for pancreatic cancer. This August he learned the cancer had returned in the liver and was inoperable.

He said he was told then that chemotherapy had about a 30 percent chance of slowing or halting the new tumors for a time.

"The fact of the matter is, the chemotherapy wasn't doing much good in terms of restricting the growth of the tumors.... The side effects of the chemotherapy were not commensurate with the results, so there did not seem to be any reason to continue," he said.

He said the chemotherapy caused fatigue and digestive problems.

He added that the cancer itself is a kind that causes deep fatigue. "It's a fatigue you feel all the time, and resting does not necessarily cause it to go away," he said.

He said he plans to continue working, but the cancer "has made me selective, because I don't have the energy."

"My immediate plan is to live day by day, as best I can," he said.

He said he planned to give a public talk the evening of Oct. 24 on his Catholic Common Ground Project to restore U.S. Catholic unity, following a meeting most of that day with his advisers on the project.

News reports which had described that meeting as a moving up of the project's first conference next March were mistaken, he said. There has been no change in plans to hold the first conference in March.

The Father Cuthbert Allen Visiting Fellows Program, initiated in 1984, brings speakers from a variety of fields to the Belmont Abbey College campus. The program honors the late Benedictine Father Allen, who gave nearly a half-century of service to the college. Former visiting fellows include Jesse Jackson, Ralph Nader, William Bennett, Colman McCarthy and novelist Clyde Edgerton.

Kilpatrick spent 52 years as a reporter, newspaper editor, columnist and television commentator. His principal column, "A Conservative View," appeared in some 500 newspapers at the time he stopped writing it in 1993.

Since retiring, Kilpatrick recently published his 11th book and continues writing two weekly columns — one on the U.S. Supreme Court, the other on the use and abuse of English.

apocryphal Gospels may be, we need to keep in mind that they do not and will not participate in the unique role the four canonical Gospels have in Christian tradition and life.

When we call Matthew, Mark, Luke and John the canonical Gospels, we mean they are the "canon," the rule of Scriptural faith, the measure against which all Christian belief must be tested.

We do not believe that everything in Christian life and doctrine must be found in the Gospels; we do believe that nothing in our teaching and practice may be contrary to the Gospels.

How did our four Gospels come to be accepted as authoritative presentations of Christ and his message, while the others were gradually laid aside?

The answer isn't entirely clear, but

Day of Recollection

BREVARD — The recent Day of Recollection for the Secular Order of Mary Community of Heralds of the Divine Will at Sacred Heart Church included Mass, Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament, and Benediction. Also, Father Carl DelGuidice, pastor, presented a teaching on Luke 10: 7-12, the commissioning of the Jesus' disciples.

New officers for year were installed. The officers are: Luise Arthen, prioress; Dorene Jerz, assistant; Claire Saunders, secretary; and Daryl Wilson, treasurer.

our faith is that the Holy Spirit guided the Christian communities to recognize and embrace Matthew, Mark, Luke and John as authentic sources for a true relationship with Jesus Christ.

Interestingly, the Church also has never considered combining the four into one. Each has its own unique, essential portrait of Christ, which would be lost if all were melted together.

The Gospel of Thomas is available, among other places, in a book of that name, published by Harpers.

A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about cremation and other funeral regulations and customs is available by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Questions should be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

Sponsor a child at a Catholic mission for just $10 a month

This is Conchita. She lives in Guatemala in a one-room house with a tin roof, a dirt floor and no electricity. Only four years old, she must help her mother carry water for cooking and bathing. She gets very tired but finds little comfort on her stiff wooden bed with a straw mattress. Because her father earns only $25 per month as a day laborer, there is no money for playthings, and even basic necessities are a luxury to her family of six.

But there is hope!

You can help one very poor child like Conchita through Christian Foundation for Children and Aging (CFCA), a Catholic sponsorship program assisting needy children at Catholic mission sites around the world.

For as little as $10 a month, only 33 cents a day, you can help a poor child receive nourishing food, medical care, the chance to go to school and hope for a brighter future. You can literally change a life!

Through CFCA, you can sponsor a child with the amount you can afford. Ordinarily it takes $20 a month to provide a child with the life-changing benefits of sponsorship. But if this is not possible for you, we invite you to do what you can.

CFCA works hand-in-hand with dedicated, trusted Catholic missionaries and lay leaders who know their communities and labor tirelessly to improve conditions for needy children and their families. Your sponsorship dollars help them do the work Jesus has called us to do.

When you become a sponsor you receive a photo of your child, their personal family history, a description of the country where your child lives, and the CFCA newsletter. Your new friend will write you — and you may write them as often as you like. But most of all, you have the satisfaction of helping a child in need.

Please don't miss this opportunity to make a difference.

New Contraceptive Welcomed

MANCHESTER, England (CNS) — A contraceptive device based on natural methods of family planning has gone on sale in Britain, with a welcome from pro-life groups and church leaders. Sold under the brand name "Persona," the hand-held device shows a green light on those days in a woman's menstrual cycle when it is safe for her to have sexual relations without conceiving and a red light during fertile times. On approximately eight days each month the device will show a yellow light, indicating the need for a urine test before the machine can decide whether it is a "red" or "green" day.

Widow Of Murdered Headmaster Calls For Anti-Violence Crusade

MANCHESTER, England (CNS) — The Catholic widow of a murdered London school headmaster has called for a national crusade against violence and a change in Britain's moral climate. Frances Lawrence's call for a national anti-violence movement came the week after a 16-year-old youth, Learco Chindamo, was found guilty of her husband Philip's killing. Philip Lawrence was stabbed to death outside his school in north London in December 1995, after he had gone to the assistance of a pupil being threatened by a teenage gang.

Honduran Government Criticizes Latin America's Covenant House

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (CNS) — Honduran government officials have publicly criticized children's activists from Casa Alianza, the Latin American division of the New York-based Covenant House. In recent months, Casa Alianza has criticized the Honduran government for jailing children in adult prisons, a practice contrary to the Honduran constitution and which Casa Alianza alleges has resulted in rapes, beatings, and deaths. Casa Alianza has taken its case to the Organization of American States.

In Oct. 17 newspaper ads, the press office of Honduran President Carlos Roberto Reina complained that Casa Alianza "has curiously limited itself...to denounce and point out problems, but not to contribute in a substantial way nor work with government institutions" to resolve problems of Honduran children.

Archbishop Urges Prelates To Keep Bosnia In Forefront

NEW YORK (CNS) — The U.S. Catholic bishops should continue to make Bosnia a priority, both for financial aid and in advocacy regarding U.S. government policy, according to Archbishop Theodore E. McCarrick of Newark, N.J. He made the recommendations in a telephone interview with Catholic News Service Oct. 24 after his visit to Bosnia Oct. 18-22. As part of his trip to the region, Archbishop McCarrick also visited Albania Oct. 13-17. He had been invited as an observer to look at preparations being made for that country's Oct. 20 elections. He said he found "safeguards in place" for a fair election, and said the Catholic Church has been making "great strides."

Parish Profile

Our Lady Of Grace

GREENSBORO — The founding of Our Lady of Grace Church occurred in January 1952, when Bishop Vincent S. Waters of the Raleigh Diocese established it as a division of St. Benedict Church, the mother parish of Greensboro.

Funding for construction had come earlier from Mr. Julian Price, a Baptist, whose wife, Ethel, a convert to Catholicism, died in 1944. Mr. Price donated $400,000 for the project, but died in 1946 before building began. Rising building costs delayed construction, but the Prices' children gave an addition $300,000 to ensure that the memorial church would be built.

Construction began in the spring of 1950. Modeled after the Church of Our Lady of Refuge in Brooklyn, N.Y., the church hosted its first Mass in July 1952 and was dedicated by Archbishop Amleto Cicognani (then-Apostolic Delegate to the United States) in September of that year. Msgr. Arthur Freeman was appointed the parish's first pastor.

The parish quickly established a school, which was dedicated by Bishop Waters in November 1953. Immaculate Heart of Mary Sisters had arrived in August from Scranton, Penn., to staff it, and would remain there for 26 years. The school opened in 1954 to 175 students in grades kindergarten through eight. Since 1980, an all-day staff has operated the school.

Additions and renovations to the parish property have accrued during the years following. The present rectory was purchased in 1954, and the convent in which the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary lived was expanded in 1963. The convent, which originally had served as rectory, was also furnished with a chapel at this time. In 1973, a house was purchased on Market Street to provide much-needed space for parish meetings and social activities. The structure, named St. Agnes House, was sold in 1982. A growing student body has led to further expansions of the school, which now teaches some 450 youngsters. In 1995, the church underwent a six-week period of refurbishing, at which time a Divine Mercy chapel was added to the sanctuary.

Construction of a new parish activity center was completed in 1976. Including administration offices, a gymnasium, a dining room and a kitchen, the building was also furnished with classrooms, the school library, and an audio-visual center to enhance the school. The founding bishop of the Diocese of Charlotte, Michael Begley — who had been serving Our Lady of Grace as pastor before his appointment — dedicated the three-story structure in November 1976. Fulton J. Sheen, former bishop of the Diocese of Rochester, N.Y., delivered the dedication address.

In 1977, the parish celebrated the 25th anniversaries of the church and school. As a special addition to the celebration, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McKinley Bryan — the latter of whom is the daughter of Ethel and Julien Price — donated money with which the "Jubilee organ" and its gallery were dedicated.

Growth of the parish has been steady. Even at the time of its founding, the congregation comprised 300 families, and by 1982 some 775 households made up the church community. In mid-1996, more than 1700 families called themselves Our Lady of Grace parishioners.

Marian Fathers of the Immaculate Conception arrived at Our Lady of Grace Church in 1988. Today, Marian Father Mark Lamprich is pastor of an active parish, whose members are faithful stewards in such efforts as youth ministry, the Community Life Commission, migrant ministry, a prayer "hotline" for shut-ins, a rosary group, interfaith projects and RCIA program. Plans are also underway to purchase a van for elderly parishioners and for those otherwise unable to attend parish functions.

Our Lady of Grace Church is more than a loving memorial to Mrs. Ethel Price. From its beginnings a half-century ago to the present, it has also served as a spiritual dwelling for the ever-growing numbers of Catholics who call the Triad region of North Carolina home.

Cardinal Bernardin Was One Of Century's Top U.S. Leaders

By JERRY FILTEAU

WASHINGTON (CNS) — With Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin's death from cancer Nov. 14, the U.S. Catholic Church lost one of its most notable leaders in the 20th century.

The 68-year-old Chicago archbishop was the only man to have served as both general secretary and president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops and U.S. Catholic Conference.

As death approached, Pope John Paul II and President Clinton both telephoned him Nov. 13 to thank him for his life and work. Clinton had awarded Cardinal Bernardin the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian honor, in a White House ceremony in September.

Cardinal Bernardin had surgery in June 1995 for cancer in his pancreas. He learned this August that his cancer had recurred in his liver and was inoperable.

He later abandoned chemotherapy and on Oct. 31 announced that because of constant fatigue and fever from the disease, he was handing over his day-to-day archdiocesan responsibilities to Auxiliary Bishop Raymond Goedert, his vicar general.

"The Diocese of Charlotte is deeply saddened by the death of Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin, one of the most distinguished church leaders in this century," said The Very Reverend Mauricio W. West, Vicar General and Chancellor of the Diocese of Charlotte. "We stand together with people of faith as prayers of condolences are offered for the soul of this renowned spiritual leader."

"Though suffering inoperable cancer, Cardinal Bernardin continued to reach out to people in need; supported by great belief in his participation in the resurrection of Christ, Cardinal Bernardin showed dignity and hope in the months preceding his death."

"A champion of humanitarian causes, Cardinal Bernardin leaves an indelible mark — on our nation and the Church — as we proceed towards the millennium. His legacy challenges us in faith to continue to seek Christ and to be authentic messengers of his Good News," he added.

A memorial Mass in honor of Cardinal Joseph Bernardin will be celebrated by Bishop William G. Curlin at St. Patrick Cathedral. Date and time are pending.

In a series of speeches in the 1980s Cardinal Bernardin articulated the "consistent ethic of life," a framework for applying Catholic social and moral teachings to public policy questions on the basis of the protection of fundamental human rights of life and dignity.

He led the pro-life efforts of the U.S.

bishops as head of their Committee on Pro-Life Activities from 1983 to 1989.

And he helped make them leading advocates of a world free of nuclear weapons as head of the committee that wrote their 1983 pastoral letter, "The Challenge of Peace: God's Promise and Our Response" — arguably the most effective and widely read pastoral letter they ever issued.

Cardinal Bernardin's leadership on the peace pastoral led Time magazine to feature him on its cover Nov. 29, 1982, under the headline "God and the Bomb." In 1983 he received the Albert Einstein Peace Award for his work.

Just months before he died he pulled together a diverse group of prominent U.S. Catholics to launch the Catholic Common Ground Project. He wanted the project to be a major national effort to replace rancor and division in the church with dialogue, reconciliation and a new sense of unity and mission based on all Catholics' common ground of faith in Jesus Christ.

The new hopes and possibilities he raised with the project led the National Council of Churches of Christ to establish a new award Nov. 11 to honor outstanding dedication to the unity of people. The council named the award the "Joseph Cardinal Bernardin Common Ground Award" and made him the first recipient in ceremonies Nov. 13 in Chicago.

Even as Cardinal Bernardin lay in the final stages of death he continued to make his mark on the life of the church and the nation.

Bishops Approve Plan For Young Adults, Elect Treasurer

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Getting down to business at what may be their last meeting as the National Conference of Catholic Bishops and the U.S. Catholic Conference, the U.S. bishops approved a plan for young adult ministry and elected a new treasurer Nov. 12.

Before spending the afternoon behind closed doors in executive session, the bishops also approved a 10-point statement of economic justice principles and voted on the eighth and final segment of the general Sacramentary as proposed for use throughout the English-speaking world.

The Sacramentary — the book of Mass prayers and instructions used at the presider's chair and at the altar — must be submitted to Rome for final approval.

The 76-page document on young adult ministry, titled "Sons and Daughters of the Light: A Pastoral Plan for Ministry With Young Adults," was approved on a voice vote.

Developed by the bishops' Committee on the Laity after national and diocesan consultations with young adults, it is designed to address spiritual and pastoral issues young adults face as they enter new stages in education, work, independence, family relationships and their place in society.

Bishop Tod D. Brown of Boise, Idaho, chairman of the bishops' Committee on the Laity, called the plan "an affirmation of young adults and their gifts."

The new NCCB-USCC treasurer is Bishop Robert J. Banks of Green Bay, Wis., who was chosen in a 137-111 vote over Bishop Daniel F. Walsh of Las Vegas, Nev. The bishops also elected more than a dozen new committee chairmen or chairmen-elect Nov. 12.

The statement on economic principles, approved in a unanimous voice vote, was jointly proposed by the bishops' domestic and international policy committees.

Just two pages long, "A Catholic Framework for Economic Life" echoes the much larger 1986 pastoral letter by the bishops, "Economic Justice for All."

The new statement emphasizes making economic decisions based on moral principles that focus on protecting the poor and vulnerable. And it encourages government, business and all of society to consider human consequences of economic choices.

Much of the meeting promised to be devoted to plans for restructuring the NCCB and USCC, the bishops' twin national conferences.

The 1996 meeting could be the last one the bishops conduct as NCCB-USCC. One of the restructuring proposals calls for merging the two conferences into one and renaming it the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, or USCCB.

Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago, who chairs the bishops' ad hoc Committee on Mission and Structure, was to have presented the restructuring proposals but was too ill to attend the Washington meeting. He announced this summer that he is likely to die within a year from cancer in his liver.

Bishop Anthony M. Pilla of Cleveland, NCCB-USCC president, read a handwritten note from the cardinal to his fellow bishops and then praised the Chi-

Charlotte Delegation Invested Into Holy Sepulchre

WASHINGTON — On Nov. 3, five members of the Diocese of Charlotte were invested into the Equestrian Order of the Holy Sepulchre of Jerusalem, Middle Atlantic Lieutenancy.

Mary Lou Hildreth and Mary Catherine Potter were invested as Ladies of the Holy Sepulchre, and Robert D. Potter was invested as a Knight of the Holy Sepulchre. Father Anthony J. Marcaccio, secretary to Bishop William G. Curlin, and Father John T. Putnam Jr., were invested as Clergy Knights of the Holy Sepulchre.

Bishop Curlin, Knight Commander of the Holy Sepulchre, was the homilist at the Mass in the Cathedral of St. Matthew the Apostle, Washington, D.C. The bishop appealed to the Knights and Ladies about putting their faith into action. "We do not have to look very far from this city to see the appalling condition of today's society," Bishop Curlin said. "The question I propose is whether we will accept Christ's challenge to be the light of the world."

"I believe that prayer is the key to our sense of God," he added.

The Equestrian Order of the Holy

Sepulchre of Jerusalem dates back to the first Crusades and the Knights established by Godfrey de Bouillon to guard the Sepulchre of our Lord immediately after their conquest of Jerusalem in 1099. They were approved as Order in a Bull of Approbation by Pope Pascal II in February 1113.

The Order has as its mission the protection of the Christian presence in the Holy Land by direct support of schools, hospitals and holy shrines. The Order's motto, Deus Lo Vult, "God wills it," inspires the Knights and Ladies of the Holy Sepulchre to crusade for equality of men, justice for all, and peace in the Holy Land so that Christian, Jew and Muslim may live side by side and in love of God and each other.

The Equestrian Order of the Holy Sepulchre of Jerusalem is under the personal protection of the Holy Father, Pope John Paul II, and is the only Order in the world to be accorded this distinction. The Middle Atlantic Lieutenancy includes the Archdiocese for U.S. Military Services, the Archdiocese of Washington, the Diocese of Arlington (Va.), the Diocese of Richmond (Va.), the Diocese of Memphis (Tenn.), the Diocese of Nashville (Tenn.), the Diocese of Wheeling-Charleston (W.Va.), the Diocese of Raleigh and the Diocese of Charlotte.

The new Knights and Ladies join several other Order members in the diocese. They include:

- Msgr. John McSweeney, Knight Commander, rector of the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville.

- William E. Rabil Sr., Knight Commander, and Rosalie D. Rabil, Lady Commander, of St. Leo Church in Winston-Salem.

- Edward C. Ruff, Knight Commander, of St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte.

- James E.P. Turner, Knight Commander, of Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville.

Mrs. Hildreth is a member of St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte. Mr. and Mrs. Potter are members of St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte. Father Putnam is studying canon law at The Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C.

cago prelate for "leading us through the most difficult moments, giving sound advice on many occasions, and ... helping us chart a course into the next millennium." The bishops responded by giving Cardinal Bernardin a standing ovation.

The first morning of the Nov. 11-14 meeting featured preliminary discussion of norms for Catholic higher education, guidelines for televising the liturgy, and a new statement of guidelines for the reception of Communion. Further debate and a vote on those agenda items were scheduled for later in the meeting.

In other action Nov. 11 and 12, the bishops:

- Approved a plan to provide $1 million to fund their national Office for the Third Millennium from 1997 to 2000.

- Ratified a $43.4 million 1997 budget, about $1.5 million above the 1996 NCCB-USCC budget, as well as priorities and plans for conference activities in 1997.

- Voted on proposed adaptations in funeral rites when cremated remains are present. The results of that written ballot were not immediately announced.

The proposal for Catholic higher education norms, to be voted on Nov. 13, is titled "Ex Corde Ecclesiae": An Application to the United States."

"Ex Corde Ecclesiae" was Pope John Paul II's 1990 apostolic constitution on Catholic universities. It contained general norms for Catholic higher education throughout the world and asked bishops' conferences to develop particular norms adapting and implementing the general norms.

In the process of working on appropriate implementation in the United States, bishops across the country have engaged in local discussions with Catholic higher education officials.

Bishop Pilla began the meeting with an address on the challenges confronting priests in the 50th anniversary year of Pope John Paul II's ordination.

"So many negative images of priests are carelessly, even heartlessly spread around, that today I believe it both a duty and a joy to speak words of affirmation and reaffirmation to our priests," said Bishop Pilla, who challenged his fellow prelates to be more collaborative with their priests, to "truly empower our priests in their ministry."

The day before the meeting started, the bishops were invited to attend workshops on various topics — the Church and science, marriage preparation, and ongoing implementation of their national vocations strategy.

Cardinal Bernardin Was One Of Century's Top Leaders, from page 1

One of his final acts was a letter to the nine U.S. Supreme Court justices pleading for reversal of two lower-court decisions that would legalize physician-assisted suicide as a constitutional right.

"There can be no legal and moral order which tolerates the killing of innocent human life, even if the agent of death is self-administered," he wrote.

Only days before he died he put the final touches on his last address to the nation's bishops — delivered on his behalf Nov. 13 by Archbishop Oscar H. Lipscomb of Mobile, Ala. — culminating Cardinal Bernardin's five years as head of a committee formed to restructure the NCCB and USCC to make them more effective. Later in the day the bishops were informed that the cardinal's health was deteriorating rapidly. By the next morning he was dead.

Before he died he was the senior active U.S. cardinal and long one of the most prominent U.S. prelates in international as well as national church affairs.

He represented the U.S. bishops at meetings of the world Synod of Bishops in 1974, 1977, 1980, 1983, 1987, 1990 and 1994. Beginning in 1974, he was elected five times to the synod's 15-member Ordinary Council, which follows up on each synod and plans the next. He was on the synod council when he died.

Born of Italian immigrant parents April 2, 1928, in Columbia, S.C., Joseph Louis Bernardin was ordained a priest April 26, 1952.

He was ordained a bishop April 26, 1966 — at 38, the youngest bishop in the country — and two years later was called on to become first general secretary of the newly formed NCCB-USCC.

It was in that post — working the two conferences through their formative years and guiding conference committees through the massive challenges and changes they faced in trying to implement the Second Vatican Council — that he quickly gained a national reputation as the one who could reconcile seemingly intractable opposing factions through creative compromises that met the key concerns on both sides.

In 1972 he was made archbishop of Cincinnati. Ten years later he was transferred to Chicago, an archdiocese torn apart in controversy over his predecessor, Cardinal John P. Cody.

He quickly gained the trust of Chicago's priests and people with his open, listening manner, describing himself as "Joseph, your brother."

When a scandal of sexual abuse of minors by priests hit, he formed a blue-ribbon panel to study the issue and recommend policies. The Chicago policies quickly became a model for policies in many other dioceses across the country.

He was regarded as a leading figure in Catholic health care because of his local and national efforts to help Catholic hospitals articulate a Catholic vision and strengthen their position as institutions in the rapidly changing health care environment of the '90s.

He was chairman of the board of trustees of The Catholic University of America from 1978 to 1981 and again from 1985 to 1988.

He also served the bishops' conference as chairman of the canonical affairs committee from 1978 to 1981.

In November 1993 Cardinal Bernardin faced one of the severest personal tests of his life when a young man with AIDS, Steven J. Cook, claimed he had once been sexually abused as a teenager by the cardinal when the cardinal was archbishop of Cincinnati.

Less than four months later Cook completely retracted his claim, which had been based on so-called "recovered memories" that came during therapy with an unlicensed hypnotist.

Cardinal Bernardin, widely hailed for his grace in dealing first with the accusations and later with his vindication, had a reconciliation meeting with Cook in December 1994 which many compared to Pope John Paul's reconciliation meeting with his would-be assassin, Mehmet Ali Agca.

Cook and the cardinal became friends, and Cook called and wrote several times when Cardinal Bernardin learned he had pancreatic cancer and underwent surgery in June 1995. Cook died the following September.

Many people, especially in Chicago, remarked in the final months of Cardinal Bernardin's life that the crown of all his achievements was the profound peace and grace with which he faced the news of his own death.

When doctors discovered in August that the cancer had returned to his liver and was spreading, the cardinal announced the news at a press conference.

He said that because of his faith, he looked at death "as a friend."

Charlotte Seminarian Ordained To Transitional Diaconate In Rome

ROME—Twenty-three seminarians from across the United States took a significant step in their faith journey in October, when they were ordained into the transitional diaconate. One of the almost two-dozen is Ray Williams, a seminarian of the Diocese of Charlotte, who is continuing his studies at the Pontifical North American College in Rome.

"I recall that I promised with a quiet joy to dedicate myself to a lifelong commitment ... as a sign of my interior devotion to Christ and His kingdom," said Rev. Mr. Williams of the ordination ceremony, which took place in the Basilica of St. Peter.

The Most Reverend Edwin F. O'Brien, auxiliary to the archbishop of New York and former rector of the North American College, served as the ordaining prelate during the Mass. More than 200 priests concelebrated, and Msgr. Timothy Dolan, rector of the college, presented Rev. Mr. Williams and the other seminarians to the bishop.

Father Conrad Kimbrough, pastor of Holy Spirit Church in Denver, N.C., vested Rev. Mr. Williams at the ceremony, and a host of family members and friends attended, including several clergy members of the Charlotte Diocese.

Despite being half a world away from his home parish of St. Eugene in Asheville, Rev. Mr. Williams said he was comforted by the thought of spiritual support.

"As we prostrated ourselves for the Litany of Saints, I remember thinking that, here and now for those of us about to be ordained deacons, the saints are praying, family and friends are praying; back home many of the good people of the Charlotte Diocese are praying for me. That was encouraging," he added.

He immediately went to work as a deacon during the Mass by joining in the distribution of the Eucharist.

With Father Frank O'Rourke and

Ray Williams

Father Mark Lawlor concelebrating at a Mass the day after, Rev. Mr. Williams preached his first homily in the chapel of Casa Santa Maria, a branch of the Pontifical North American College. (Father O'Rourke is the diocesan director of vocations and pastor of Holy Family Church in Clemmons. Father Lawlor is parochial vicar of St. Leo Church in Winston-Salem.)

Rev. Mr. Williams said he has since returned to his studies and greatly looks forward to his ordination to the priesthood on June 14, 1997, in Charlotte.

His journey of faith has been a lengthy one. Rev. Mr. Williams, the son of an Episcopalian father and Southern Baptist mother, graduated from Bob Jones University in South Carolina. Having double-majored in English and history at the conservative Protestant school, he went on to teach English in Nepal. He spent eight years there, where he began taking a closer look at the Catholic faith.

Following a period of work in Austria, Rev. Mr. Williams returned home to Asheville in 1990 and soon joined an inquiry class. He was received into the Catholic Church in September of that year, and after much prayerful thought decided to enter the seminary.

After preparatory studies at St. Mary Seminary in Baltimore, Rev. Mr. Williams arrived in Rome in the summer of 1995 to continue his training. Previously he had spent a summer in Rome to study Italian and also attended a conference on Cardinal John Henry Newman in Oxford. For 10 weeks during the summer of 1996 at St. Pius X parish in Greensboro, he assisted in parish and community efforts and worked with Father Frank Connolly, pastor.

At the Pontifical North American College, he receives formation training — homiletics and other pastoral skills, as well as spiritual direction. The seminarians, of whom there are some 140 at the college, study at different universities throughout town as well. Rev. Mr. Williams studies at the University of St. Thomas Aquinas, where he earned his Bachelors of Sacred Theology and is currently working towards a Masters in Theology, specializing in ecumenism.

Rev. Mr. Williams, who also serves as a campus minister at the University of Dallas in Rome, said he has enjoyed his experiences at the college and the friendships he has made there.

Although he said he fights pangs of homesickness from time to time, the newly ordained deacon remembers the purpose of his endeavor and calls out to everyone for their support.

"I'll be ordained with Arturo DeAguilar (studying at St. Vincent de Paul Seminary in Florida). We covet the prayers of the faithful of Charlotte that we might be priests who serve God and His people with all our hearts," he said.

THE CHANCERY

November 15, 1996

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

During his visit last Fall, the Holy Father, Pope John Paul II, offered powerful and challenging messages to Catholics in the U.S. Speaking with compelling urgency on themes of human life and dignity, poor families and children, and the need for us to remain compassionate, generous and concerned for others, he asked: Is present-day America becoming less sensitive, less caring toward the poor, the weak, the needy? It must not!

As our Holy Father reminded us, we must continue our long history of compassion and concern for God's poor. Through the Campaign for Human Development, we affirm our commitment to care for the less fortunate among us.

CHD gives the precious gift of hope to thousands of people who need it most, addressing the difficult social problems that can slowly suffocate hope in community after community: inadequate housing, impoverished children, crime, and much, much more. By focusing on the root causes of these problems, the Campaign builds strong communities where hope can grow.

CHD creates lasting change by empowering people to help themselves. All CHD programs are managed by poor and low-income people working to remedy the ills of their own community. By assisting and strengthening these local initiatives, CHD builds people's dignity, self-respect and confidence.

Knowing that our contributions give hope, I ask that you please give generously to the CHD appeal on the weekend of November 23-24.

Sincerely yours in Christ,

The recent effort to ban partial-birth abortion has really just begun. After all, we were not just opposing a Presidential veto; we were opposing a procedure which is a crime against humanity. As long as that procedure is still legal in this country we will still cry out against it. Hold your elected officials responsible! Continue to contact them — hold the consciences of your fellow citizens responsible! Sound the alarm against partial-birth abortion and all abortion.

Pope Resumes General Audience Talks With Address On "Magnificat"

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we now turn to the "Magnificat," Mary's song of praise at the Visitation. In the Old Testament tradition, Mary proclaims the greatness of God who called her, His humble handmaid, to be the mother of His incarnate Son. By sending His only Son, born of the Virgin Mary in the fullness of time, God fulfills the promises made to Abraham and offers salvation to all mankind. In the "Magnificat" Mary sings the praises of God's merciful and enduring love for His people.

I am pleased to greet the English-speaking visitors and pilgrims. Upon all of you and your families I cordially invoke the joy and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Pope Condemns Contraceptive Birth Control, Supports Natural Means

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II condemned contraceptive birth control and said natural family planning methods deserve better support in demographic campaigns.

In a message to bioethics experts Nov. 8, the pope said the Church needs to respond to population control programs that promote artificial birth control almost as a moral responsibility.

He criticized the "harmful campaigns of certain demographic policies that try to present contraception as permissible and proper, spreading and imposing an exploitative and utilitarian vision of the life of individuals and peoples."

"We need to respond with every initiative that can scientifically support, with correct information, the validity of natural methods," he said.

He said such an effort was needed to combat a false sense of sexual freedom, "for which contraception provides both the incentive and the instrument, weakening consciences and eclipsing values."

The Church, while teaching that contraceptive birth control is morally wrong, accepts "natural" methods that rely on periodic abstinence to avoid conception.

The pontiff said these methods, after meeting with initial misunderstanding among the public, today enjoy increasing scientific recognition as effective means of spacing births. He said they have also provided an inner peace to couples who understand the value and the spirit of sexual self-control.

At the same time, he urged Catholic experts to help expand education efforts among couples so that they can better understand what he called their "vocation as servants of life, in responsible cooperation with the providential wisdom of the Creator."

He said the Church faces an urgent task in promoting the "Gospel of life" against the current trends of unbridled hedonism and disrespect for human life, especially in the stage of its "mysterious and delicate beginnings."

Hard Times for Parents and Teens

A friend recently told me she was distressed because she couldn't seem to reach her 15-year-old daughter anymore. The girl was depressed because her boyfriend walked out on her saying, "You don't give me anything," meaning sex.

Think how pressured this girl is by the society she — and her peers — deal with every day, one that so often challenges a family's values!

My friend, a nurse and a working mother by necessity, also told me she is terrified when her daughter goes to a party. She tells her not to put her soft drink down, for fear somebody will slip a drug into it. She has seen this happen to girls who end up in the hospital where she works.

I could empathize. I learned a lot about young people last year covering a story for a magazine when, in a period of five days, eight teen-age girls in the quiet town of New Milford, Conn., attempted suicide.

I found that the girls had common problems — being harassed at school, ridiculed and shunned, detached from their parents, angry, hurting, lost, into drugs or alcohol, not connected to a church, feeling powerless, insecure and hopeless.

The picture I got was not one to give anybody hope — until I started talking to other teens. Then I found that the hopeless kids were not the majority.

I met teens full of energy, hopeful about the future and not pessimistic about life or the world. It was no mystery what made the difference. These teens still attended church, were involved in some way with helping others, had a good relationship with at least one parent and took school seriously.

When some of these teens decided to call a meeting for adults, I attended. They talked about the big issues they face every day: decisions about sex, worries about AIDS, violence, especially at school, and drugs, which they said are so plentiful in their high school that you don't even have to buy them. Here you had teens trying to maintain good behavior and asking adults to help.

So what happened? The adults started telling the teens that they didn't have it any harder than their parents did, that it was the same back then.

That's when the eyes of the young started to glass over. They know, even if adults don't, that things are not the same. That was then; this is now.

Our children are being shaped by a society vastly different from any before. And I believe their parents' '60s generation is, in great part, responsible for this.

They were of a generation that met in communes, sponsored "happenings" and broke sacred traditions — leaving home, taking drugs, having sex, rebelling against church and flaunting the wild look in hair and dress. It was a rebellion that tore away structures, foundations and boundaries society had been based upon.

It didn't leave our current youth much to hang on to. The buzz words to describe this today are "loss of family values," but ironically this is another way of saying that boundaries have been destroyed.

This is what our young people have inherited. Now we have to say "enough!" We have to help them reconstruct our world — make it healthy, beautiful.

Recent decades have been times for a lot of selfishness and self-preservation. We're due for an outward movement in which self-centeredness moves aside and God's love takes over.

I'm an optimist, having seen so many great young people. If we help them, I believe they can begin the process of making this world a sacred place.

Veterans Day: Muted Trumpets Play "Taps"

It was a cold and miserable night in Washington, D.C., when my brother called from Union Station. A career military man, he'd just gotten back from his first tour of duty in Vietnam. He had only a few hours before the train would carry him home to Erie, Pa., to his wife and three kids. Eager as he was to get home, he telephoned me at Catholic University where I was taking theology, saying, "I really need to talk."

In minutes we were sitting in a seedy all-night diner near the station. My brother was exhausted but direct. His anger, his frustration, his emptiness spilled out. It was not just that America was in turmoil over the war that disturbed him, it was that he had lost so many friends. "If you know anything about soldiering," he insisted, "you'd know that we hate war. Patriots don't glorify war, they know the monster for what it is." Then came his question: "But what about these boys now maimed for life, or dead? Does the Gospel of 'Blessed be the peacemakers' say anything to those of us who die for rights that are as precious as peace?"

My brother's battlefield was now in his heart, and his cry for peace of soul was aggrieved.

I told him, or I should say the Spirit said through me in that moment, that those who call themselves peacemaker must remember the veterans and victims of war. The suffering and loss of war are clear indications of the ongoing suffering of Christ. The Prince of Peace identifies completely with our sense of helplessness in the face of war. "Denny," I told my brother, "every time I hear 'Taps' I hear the voice of Christ."

Fight against a war or fight in a war and you still have the duty to think, to reason, to answer to your conscience and your God.

I still do. I wonder if other people in other times have done the same. One Civil War historian who wrote a vivid account of the Battle of Gettysburg forgot for a moment that he was trying to be objective and reacted as a human being: "My God, the world is so unchristian yet." "Taps" spoke to him, too, I think.

When that bitter, bloody war came to an end, there was much celebrating, of course. One news columnist wrote that in New York City 20,000 people uncovered their heads and sang together a hymn of praise and thanksgiving to God. Yet at the same time rockets fired their joyous reports in the air, the mournful "Taps" reminded survivors of all that had been suffered and sacrificed.

Peace carries risks and obligations. Some believe it is only to be found in justice and victory at war's end. Others believe that justice and mercy demand blood never be shed. Fight against a war or fight in a war and you still have the duty to think, to reason, to answer to your conscience and your God.

All injured by war, soldier or civilian, deserve the generosity of spirit and good will of those who would be peacemakers, who would "be called children of God." All killed in war deserve our prayer, including prayer that turns faith into action and makes peace a goal rather than a dream.

Long ago, in school, I learned the closing lines of Abraham Lincoln's Second Inaugural Address. So did my brother, and so did you: With malice to- ward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work that we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan — to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace, among ourselves and with all nations.

As Christian peacemakers we dare not allow our awareness of the enormity of each war's suffering to become a tired, faded memory. If our peace resolutions and our works of peace are to culminate in a legacy of peace for today's children and their children, we must hear the voice of the Prince of Peace — not only in the farewell of "Taps", but in the wake-up call of Reveille. It's a cry to forge peace between us and among us — brothers and sisters together. A whisper to seek it within His will and our immortal souls.

No Greater Love

A few weeks ago, on a golden afternoon, my 4-year-old daughter, Teresa, and I picked up my first-grader, Bobby, in front of his elementary school.

About 10 minutes after dismissal, a number of parents were still outside the school, when a mother, arriving in front of the school to pick up her child, lost control of her minivan. The van jumped the curb a few feet from where we were standing and began driving through a crowd of parents, teachers, students and the principal. I watched in horror as I saw my friend Maureen struck by the van. Seconds later, the school principal, Mr. Briketto, was also struck and knocked to the ground as he was pushing children out of the minivan's path. I saw a mother take her child and throw her into the arms of another to keep her from getting hit. This mother was then struck and dragged underneath the van. A pine tree finally stopped the out-of-control van, pinning the mother underneath it. I couldn't tell from where I was standing if anyone else had been hit or pulled under the van.

When I saw that the van had stopped and that my children were safe, I ran over to Maureen who was pleading with me and my son's teacher to find her daughter Christine, a classmate of my son's. I don't remember running over to the van, but by the time I got there, Mr. Briketto was already there. The mother couldn't be moved in case she had a spinal cord injury, so Mr. Briketto steered and eased the van off the mother as those of us there lifted up the back of the van. In absolute terror, I looked underneath the van praying to God that I would not see Christine's face or any other child's alongside the injured mother — who I then realized was Nancy, the mother of another first grader.

As heart wrenching as it was to see Nancy, I was relieved there wasn't a child under the van. I was also relieved that there were three nurses on the scene — two were mothers of students who moments before were in the minivan's direct path and were now treating Nancy with extraordinary skill and compassion.

Meanwhile, the rest of us tried to make sense of what had just happened. We learned that the driver of the van lost control of her vehicle when she saw that her second-grader was just about to slam the door on her 4-year-old daughter's hand. In her panic, she thought she was slamming her foot on the brake but her foot hit the gas pedal instead.

When the paramedics arrived, Nancy was airlifted to a trauma intensive care unit where she remained in critical condition for 10 days. Through prayer and Nancy's remarkably brave spirit, she was released from the hospital last week and is now receiving extensive physical therapy. Maureen was taken to a local hospital where she was treated for two hip fractures. Mr. Briketto finally agreed to have his shoulder x-rayed only after everyone was taken care of on the day of the accident. Following the accident, many of the neighborhood mothers and children who were at the accident scene gathered at our friend Maria's house so we could all be together. We prayed for everyone involved, especially for Nancy. And then we talked about how it could have easily been any one of us driving the van or getting hit by the van.

We've all had our days when we're the mother doing all the wrong things. The blood-curdling screams of our child in pain or fear can momentarily disconnect a parent's rational thoughts and actions. In our full and frenzied lives we're often balancing sanity and safety. While our right foot rests on the brake, our left foot impatiently taps as if somehow the red light will change faster or the kids will suddenly quiet down or the snarl of traffic will miraculously unravel. We want to believe that we're the perfect parent who never makes mistakes, who's always on time and whose patience never runs out. But we know better.

We're also the mother doing all the right things. We're picking up our children from school and holding their hand as we ask about their day. We're following all the rules of safety in the place we feel the safest and still the unthinkable happens. In truth, most days we're both mothers. We're filled up with stress, commitments and pressures but we're also filled up with a love and a protective instinct of our children that runs so deep it can almost be terrifying. It's this love that caused one mother to protect her daughter as her hand was about to be caught in a door and another mother to save her daughter's life while risking her own. Our lives can be changed forever in seconds. And that can make our world seem as out of control as the runaway minivan.

The images of the accident have been difficult to erase from my mind these past few weeks. But in recent days they are gradually being replaced with the more powerful images of a community that has reached out with love and kindness with meals, baby-sitting, car pools, thoughts and prayers.

The terrifying images of children being pushed out of harm's way are now the images I find most comforting. Without a thought, Nancy risked her life to save the life of her daughter. Shortly after the accident someone asked me if I could ever feel that my son was safe at school again. I saw firsthand how our principal risked his life to save the lives of his students as if they were his own children. I'm certain there's no place on earth that my son is safer.

In the months ahead, as Nancy, Maureen, Mr. Briketto and all their families struggle with emotional and physical pain, anxiety and confusion, may they never lose sight of the gift of love and life they gave on that autumn afternoon. In their most difficult hours, may they find comfort in the words Jesus spoke in the Gospel of John: "There is no greater love than this: to lay down one's life for one's friends."

Good Shepherd Receives Accreditation, Commendation

By PAUL FREDETTE
Correspondent

HAYESVILLE — The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organization, the nation's oldest and largest accrediting body for health-care providers, has awarded Good Shepherd Home Health and Hospice Agency its highest level of accreditation. For Tom Taaffe, Good Shepherd's executive director, the accreditation with commendation represents the "good housekeeping seal of approval" in the field of health care. He is proud that "everyone here has gone the extra mile on a day-to-day basis to provide the best possible home care to our patients."

Mercy Sister Joanne Kuhlmann, RN, performance improvement coordinator for Good Shepherd, learned of the letter of accreditation last month. "I was even more proud and happy that we had been commended as well as accredited," said Sister Kuhlmann, who was responsible for facilitating the accreditation process. She expressed both satisfaction and relief that the two-year process was finally complete. "We (the staff) had our share of ups and downs trying to reach consensus about policies and procedures which had to be implemented at least four months prior to the actual on-site survey by the Joint Commission," she explained, adding that the schedule involved quite a bit of teaching and preparation of the staff.

This accreditation, unlike the certification and licensing required by the state of North Carolina, is completely voluntary. Nevertheless, Taaffe indicated that the accreditation, which demonstrates compliance with national standards for home care, assumes ever-greater importance for the agency as advances in medical technology lead to increasingly complex standards in home care as well as hospital care.

Good Shepherd has been in operation for more than 40 years. It was founded by the Glenmary Sisters in the mid-1950s, and has been a diocesan agency since the mid-1970s. Currently the agency employs a staff of 65, which could increase to 85 in the next 12 months if plans to expand services beyond Clay and Cherokee counties are implemented. Taaffe explained that, of the several reasons for expanding the geographical boundaries of service to the residents of western North Carolina, the influx of managed care into the field of home health has proven paramount.

"It's no longer just the privately insured," explained Taaffe, "but managed care is now reaching into the Medicare, and down the road, the Medicaid population, too. We (Good Shepherd) must put ourselves in a position to compete for the managed care business." One way of accomplishing this is to become an organization large enough to attract insurers contracting for home care services. Another factor in this competition is the agency's willingness to "partner" with other providers in order to provide a continuum of care in a particular HMO (Health Maintenance Organization).

Taaffe finds the involvement in this transformation of the health care delivery system both exciting and challenging. "As a free standing agency we can present to the community clearly and unabashedly a mission statement that is strongly imbued with Christian values," he explains. Partnering with other providers depends on the acceptance of mutually compatible mission statements, but Taaffe also sees it as "an opportunity to insert into similar lay organizations some of our own values."

What continues to differentiate Good Shepherd from other providers, says Taaffe, is a clear mission statement, supported by the diocese, assuring that those who really need the services will actually receive them.

The steadily growing acceptance of the hospice program in the community — the agency served 150 terminally ill patients in the past year — has strengthened the staff's desire to expand services to the frail elderly as well. This has meant expanding their "in-home aid" staff to provide seniors experiencing minor disabilities with an alternative to nursing home placement. The new accreditation should only heighten the vitality of an agency already committed to the best quality home care.

MAGGIE VALLEY — The women of St. Margaret parish presented a check for $1,600 to Father Jim Byer, priest in residence, (right) and Father Eric Houseknecht, administrator, following a craft fair in Waynesville. ### Mensaje del Padre

Rev. VICENTE H. FINNERTY, C.M.

Es Pobre nuestro Dios

HERMANOS Y HERMANAS, NUESTRO Dios es pobre. Se acerca la Navidad cuando recordamos que Jesús nació de una mujer, de una virgen, pobre y en un pesebre. Sí, nuestro Dios es pobre. "Aprendan de mí que soy un pobre" (Mateo 11, 29).

Nuestro Dios-Cristo fue humilde. Trabajó con sus manos. Al final de su vida no tuvo ni casa: "Los zorros tienen madrigueras, y los pájaros del cielo tienen nidos, pero el hijo del hombre no tiene dónde reclinar la cabeza" (Mateo 8, 20). Por eso, hermanos y hermanas, nuestro Dios es libre.

No amó lo que a nosotros nos encadena: el poder, el honor, la riqueza. Amó lo que a nosotros nos haría libres: el bien, la justicia, la misericordia, la naturaleza, el hermano. Amó a su Padre. Pobre, como es, nuestro Dios ama lo pequeño, lo sencillo, lo olvidado, lo humilde, lo limpio, lo genuino.

El apego a la riqueza es como la grasa: mancha. La pobreza es como el jabón: limpia.

Es difícil nuestro Dios pobre, nuestro Dios limpio, nuestro Dios sin oro, nuestro Dios libre para la persona con sed de todo lo que encadena, con predilección por lo que brilla, por lo complicado.

Por eso muchas persona sienten la tentación de presentar a Dios y a su madre también ricos; de cargar de oro sus templos y sus imágenes; de vestir de seda a sus ministros; de ceder el primer puesto ante quien posee un mayor trozo de poder.

Pero nuestro Dios no cambia, nuestro Dios es pobre y amigo de los pobres. Nuestro Dios es de los libres, de los que saben amarlo todo sin que se les quede nada entre las manos.

Hermanos y hermanas, esta Navidad Dios se nos llega como Pobre y como Salvador. Desde su pobreza y pequeñez nos salva, nos libera de lo que nos encadena, nos hace libres para el amor. En este tiempo de Adviento, la Iglesia nos anima a que imitemos su pobreza y pequeñez, librándonos de lo que ata, llegando a ser el bien, la justicia, la misericordia, la luz para todos nuestros hermanos.

Sacerdote belga trabaja para liberar a inocentes de prisiones

LIMA, Perú (CNS) — Un sacerdote belga que ha vivido en el Perú durante varios decenios trabaja ahora para el gobierno, tratando de hacer que se liberte a los inocentes de la cárcel.

"Yo estaría dispuesto a desayunarme con el diablo si fuera necesario para sacar sólo a una persona inocente de la cárcel", dijo el Padre Hubert Lanssiers, de la Orden del Sagrado Corazón. "Lo que me hace tener noches de insomnio es el pensar que podríamos pasar por alto a una persona inocente que terminaría pasando el resto de su vida en la prisión".

El Padre Lanssiers, que es un defensor incansable de los derechos humanos, ha sido asesor extraoficial sobre derechos humanos del Presidente Alberto Fujimori durante los años recientes.

Se creó una comisión especial a tenor de la nueva Ley No. 26655 del Perú para revisar los casos de las personas declaradas culpables que aleguen ser inocentes de los delitos relacionados con el terrorismo en la lucha continua del Perú contra la subversión. El trabajo de la comisión involucra la evaluación de cerca de 700 casos tales, que comprenden a prisioneros peruanos.

En agosto último, el sacerdote aceptó la invitación del presidente para representar al poder ejecutivo en la comisión.

Durante más de 20 años, él fue capellán de prisiones en varias cárceles de Lima, incluyendo a la de Castro Castro, la prisión de seguridad máxima de Lima, y El Frontón, ahora cerrada, una prisión isleña donde el anterior gobierno del Presidente Alan García Pérez (de 1985 a 1990) sofocó un motín en 1986 bombardeando la prisión y matando a cientos de guerrilleros maoístas del Sendero Luminoso.

Antes de aceptar la designación por parte de Fujimori, el Padre Lanssiers se las arregló para obtener que los tribunales peruanos revisaran los casos de cientos de prisioneros inocentes, asegurando la liberación de casi 200 personas, como director de la Comisión de Diálogo.

Los grupos de los derechos humanos en el Perú y en el extranjero sitúan la cantidad de personas acusadas injustamente de actividades terroristas en un aproximado de 700. El gobierno alega que podría haber 200 personas inocentes encarceladas, pero el Padre Lanssiers dice que los números no importan.

"No existe la justicia si hay sólo una persona inocente en la cárcel", dijo el sacerdote.

Nuestra Iglesia: ¿un sueño o una realidad?

Por OLGA PARRA

LA IDEA DE CONSTRUIR NUESTRA PROPIA iglesia con un centro adyacente para los hispanos residentes en Charlotte y sus alrededores es un reto. Y digo que es un reto primero porque la comunidad hispana está formada de inmigrantes, unos con muchos años de vivir en este país están ya organizados y asistiendo a iglesias de parroquias americanas, otros recién llegados o con pocos años de vivir aquí, solos o con familias están comenzando a establecerse y segundo porque estamos hablando de un proyecto de gran magnitud en donde tendremos que poner juntos una serie de factores que harán de este sueño una realidad.

Definitivamente no va a ser fácil, pero siempre será posible, especialmente porque cuando hablamos de la comunidad hispana, hablamos de una comunidad trabajadora, entusiasta, positiva y determinada. Sí, determinada de hacer de ese sueño.....una realidad.

Posiblemente antes hubo la idea de hacerlo pero nunca se cristalizó. Hoy ha surgido la idea y trataremos de llegar a nuestra meta. Si consideramos el gran crecimiento de la población hispana en los últimos años, veremos que ahora un centro, una iglesia es una necesidad.

Necesitamos una iglesia donde además de reunirnos semanalmente a orar y celebrar el Día del Señor y otras festividades religiosas, sea el lugar donde podamos recibir los sacramentos del Bautismo, la Primera Comunión, la Confesión, el Matrimonio. Con la variación de culturas de cada país celebraremos los Santos patronales, Misas de quinceañeras y presentaciones de los niños al Señor. Un lugar donde los niños reciban sus clases de catecismo y donde los jóvenes y adultos se sientan libres de expresar sus inquietudes y a lo mejor encontrar solución a sus problemas, un lugar donde los niños que están semana tras semana encerrados en apartamentos puedan correr al aire libre como si fuese propio de ellos, un lugar finalmente donde podamos unirnos todos y encontrar esa paz espiritual que solamente viene de Dios.

Vivo aquí en Charlotte desde hace más de 30 años y he asistido a Iglesias como San Vicente, Santa Ana y San Mateo por lo tanto tengo una idea de cuanto cuesta construir un salón grande y una iglesia — contribuciones, colecta semanal, trabajo, tiempo y esfuerzo.... — pero lo han hecho. Así es que volviendo a la realidad y observando el deseo inmenso de los hispanos de tener su propia iglesia, pienso que vale la pena empezar a trabajar en este proyecto, que nunca podrá llevarse a cabo con una sola persona sino que va a ser la expresión de un trabajo de comunidad.

He podido ver semana tras semana como los jóvenes y adultos de los diferentes países hermanos han venido trabajando fuerte con la idea de recoger fondos para la construcción de la iglesia. Y así he podido ver la venta de comidas después de la Misa los domingos, la kermesse que tuvo lugar hace unas semanas, el kiosco con venta de comidas en el festival latinoamericano en el Mint Museum, la rifa de una camioneta. Todo eso es TRABAJO, TIEMPO, ESFUERZO Y BUENA VOLUNTAD con la única idea de cristalizar un sueño: NUESTRA IGLESIA.

Hemos podido recoger algún dinero, no lo suficiente para empezar la construcción, pero sí hemos logrado animar y envolver mucha gente en el proyecto incluyéndome a mí. Ahora siento que quiero anunciar a grandes voces que no es un sueño.... que va a ser una realidad. Trabajando todos juntos sentiremos que esta iglesia es más que un edificio, que es la labor de todos unidos. Recordemos que la iglesia somos nosotros.

TAL VEZ LO QUE MÁS ME HA afectado, fue la presentación de los planos de la iglesia que el comité de construcción presentó al consejo. Allí vi el amor, el deseo grande de seguir con estos proyectos. Nos contaba la arquitecta María Guerrero, que de paso les diré está haciendo una labor maravillosa, que pidió ideas a la comunidad y todo el mundo respondió, unos con ideas de una catedral, otros, más realistas tal vez, con un centro en el que podamos tener nuestra celebración semanal y al mismo tiempo usarlo para muchas actividades. También expresaron el deseo de tener unos campos donde puedan participar en deportes, un parque para los niños y hasta un lugar de meditación con una gruta de la Virgen.

MARÍA NOS DECÍA QUE ELLA SINTIÓ mucho apoyo de la comunidad con sus diferentes ideas, con el deseo grande de ayudar y hasta con la comida que la han traído mientras ella trabaja en el Centro Católico Hispano preparando los planos y la maqueta que presentaremos a la Diócesis en abril de 1997. Ya la diócesis tiene un terreno, que tenemos la opción de comprar, así es que hay algo de realidad.

¿Podremos realizar nuestro sueño? No lo sé, pero yo sé que en Charlotte hay gente muy buena y generosa y con Dios no hay nada imposible. También tenemos al Padre Vicente al frente y él quiere mucho al hispano y seguirá luchando por nosotros. Su entusiasmo es contagioso y cuando a veces vacilamos él nos alza la moral y nos da ánimo. Un día el obispo Curlin dijo algo muy cierto en una de nuestras Misas, “Creo que el Padre Vicente es un regalo de Dios para empezar estos proyectos”. Estoy convencida que tenemos un camino muy largo y costoso, pero lo que he visto hasta hoy me ha animado mucho y seguiré adelante... no sé el tiempo que nos tome, pero si lo logramos, lo disfrutarán nuestros hijos o tal vez nuestros nietos. Será una misión cumplida.

Obispo dice que gobierno aumenta conflicto militar en Chiapas

ANTIGUA, Guatemala (CNT)— El Obispo que dirige la Comisión Nacional de Mediación de México dijo que el gobierno está aumentando el conflicto militar en el estado meridional de Chiapas.

Monseñor Samuel Ruiz García, Obispo de San Cristóbal de las Casas, en Chiapas, dijo que el 60 por ciento del ejército mexicano está acuartelado actualmente en aquel estado mexicano.

“En algunos lugares hay 17 soldados por cada residente”, dijo él. “Y el ejército tiene una función nueva: Está desempeñando un papel político y no sólo un papel militar. No es un ejército que está allí solamente para patrullar, sino que con todos sus armamentos refinados, incluyendo tanques, está intimidando a la población”.

Monseñor Ruiz dijo que el gobierno de México “no estaba dispuesto a dialogar; ha habido una decisión para disminuir al mínimo las cosas que pueden ser concedidas ... ésa es la razón de que las pláticas se hayan estancado”.

El prelado agregó que el gobierno “cree que el país está bajo control, y así no habrá más cambio que lo que el gobierno decida conceder”.

Monseñor Ruiz dijo que el gobierno y los zapatistas, cuyo levantamiento armado de 1994 estremeció al mundo, se hallan muy separados sobre los asuntos fundamentales.

“Ellos continúan siendo dos enemigos que se hablan”, dijo él, “pero no hay noción para buscar el acuerdo común”.

El Obispo hizo sus comentarios el 10 de octubre, durante una reunión ecuménica en Antigua, a la que asistieron dirigentes protestantes y obispos católicos de toda la América Central y de México.

Monseñor Ruiz dijo que el ejército mexicano “ha descubierto que la fuerza fundamental del Ejército Zapatista de Liberación Nacional (EZLN) no está en sus armas, sino antes bien en su base social. De modo que el ejército permanece en Chiapas para cortar cualquier relación entre la población civil y el ejército zapatista”.

El Obispo agregó que, en el norte de Chiapas, “el conflicto ha sido inducido por actores” en connivencia con el gobierno, que ha “introducido una violencia arbitraria destinada a justificar el regreso del ejército, que había sido retirado después de la presión social”.

La marcha latina impulsa protección a derechos de inmigrantes

Foto CNS por Michael Alexander, del Catholic Standard

Los participantes de una asamblea por los derechos y el reconocimiento de los latinos se alinean en una cerca próxima a la Casa Blanca el 12 de octubre. Veinticinco mil personas desfilaron en el acontecimiento de Washington, llevando mensajes que pedían la protección para los inmigrantes.

WASHINGTON (CNS) — “¡Despierten, Estados Unidos! Esta es su familia latina!” dijo el Representante al Congreso Federal Ed Pastor, demócrata por Arizona, mientras se dirigía a una multitud de 25,000 personas que marcharon hasta la Casa Blanca el 12 de octubre para impulsar la protección de los derechos de los inmigrantes.

Pastor, presidente del Grupo Congresional Hispano, se unió a los inmigrantes latinos, a los activistas de los derechos humanos y a los representantes de los grupos latinos de todo el país en Washington. Ellos respondieron a un llamado nacional para manifestarse en la estela de un sentimiento contra los inmigrantes cada vez mayor en el país.

El llamado a la asamblea procedió de la Coordinadora '96, un grupo recién creado con sede en Los Angeles. Juan José Gutiérrez, director del grupo, dijo que está formado por un millar de organizaciones activistas latinas pequeñas en los Estados Unidos.

Los manifestantes representaban a una amplia diversidad de intereses hispanos. La multitud comprendía delegaciones de Nueva York, Chicago,

Los Angeles y Arizona; partidarios enmascarados de los zapatistas mexicanos; trabajadores de origen maya de una planta de procesamiento de pollos afectada, de Morganton, Carolina del Norte; partidarios de Gloria La Riva, candidata socialista a la vicepresidencia de los Estados Unidos; y representantes del Centro Católico Hispano, administrado por la Arquidiócesis de Washington.

El Representante a la Cámara Federal Luis Gutiérrez, demócrata por Illinois, y otros miembros del Grupo Congresional Hispano, también participaron.

La plataforma de la asamblea pedía la amnistía para los inmigrantes que hayan llegado antes de 1991, un jornal mínimo de $7 por hora, atención a la salud y enseñanza para todos los niños, y la creación de comisiones de ciudadanos para juzgar los casos de presunta brutalidad policiaca.

Aunque la asamblea fue notable por la diversidad de los intereses hispanos representados, las organizaciones hispanas nacionales veteranas, tales como la Coalición Puertorriqueña Nacional y el Consejo Nacional de La Raza no apoyaron a la marcha.

Video

The following are home videocassette reviews from the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting. Each videocassette is available on VHS format. Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"The Adventures of Pinocchio" (1996)

Charming tale about a kindly puppet carver (Martin Landau) whose enchanted wooden puppet (voice of Jonathan Taylor Thomas) yearns to become a real boy, but who must first learn not to lie and pass through several dangers before he can make his wish come true. Director Steve Barron nicely blends the live cast with the impressively lifelike animatronic puppet for a luminous storybook look, although there are a few scary moments for preschoolers. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences.

"Boys" (1996)

Dull adolescent fantasy in which a troubled prep school lad (Lukas Haas) falls for a young woman (Winona Ryder) in trouble over a stolen car and a missing baseball player. Written and directed by Stacy Cochran, the dragged-out proceedings invite little interest and less sympathy for the would-be rebel teen or his aimless rich girlfriend. Sexual situations and references, crude expressions, profanity and an instance of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Cold Comfort Farm" (1996)

Suddenly destitute in the 1930s Depression, a crisply optimistic London socialite (Kate Beckinsale) moves in with a near-dozen gloomy, eccentric relatives on a dilapidated farm, turning all their lives upside down and right side up in short order. Director John Schlesinger's sprightly comedy of manners deftly pokes fun at rich and poor alike in a delightfully wacky send-up of life on the farm. Brief sexual innuendo and an instance of profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Dorothy Day Movie's Box Office Performance Slow To Date

WASHINGTON (CNS) — "Entertaining Angels: The Dorothy Day Story" has yet to crack Variety magazine's list of top 60 movies since its debut in New York and Los Angeles in late September. And to make the top 60, all a film has to do is pull in about $50,000 a week. Paulist Father Ellwood "Bud" Kieser, who first met Dorothy Day at the Second Vatican Council and produced "Entertaining Angels" about her life, told Catholic News Service the movie's box office performance has thus far lagged behind "Romero," which he produced six years ago. "But we're not raising the white flag," he said. Indeed, "Entertaining Angels" is opening in six new cities Nov. 15 and eight others Dec. 6.

Secrets & Lies

Film Captures Emotion Of Reconciliation

NEW YORK (CNS) — A family is forced to confront its hidden secrets in the British import, "Secrets & Lies."

The story is set in motion by Hortense (Marianne Jean-Baptiste), a black optometrist whose foster mother has just died.

Curious to know about her origins, Hortense finds her birth records and learns she was given up for adoption by a white woman.

When she phones the woman's number, Cynthia (Brenda Blethyn) answers but at first doesn't want to meet the caller.

She eventually does and soon the serious, well-educated Hortense and the lonely, working-class Cynthia become friends, with the older woman taking a motherly interest in the younger.

At home, Cynthia has a surly grown daughter, Roxanne (Clair Rushbrook), whom she fears will wind up an unwed mother as she did and constantly hectors with unwanted advice about "safe sex."

Cynthia's brother, Maurice (Timothy Spall), is a successful commercial photographer who has a nice suburban home with cranky wife Monica (Phyllis Logan) and no children.

Maurice decides to host a party for Roxanne's 21st birthday and decides to bring Hortense along as a friend.

But the truth will out and when it does, it unleashes a torrent of pent-up emotions that brings the family's secrets and lies to the surface, where they can be honestly dealt with.

Written and directed by Mike Leigh, the movie is a series of rich character studies which are intertwined with great dramatic impact in the family gathering, which opens the way for reconciliation.

The central situation of Hortense's developing relationship with Cynthia is carefully contrived and emotionally convincing.

Interspersed with this are isolated scenes showing the other members of the family in characteristic activities which are fully understood only when all the characters come together at the birthday party.

It is an intricate drama of little human moments, perfectly captured by the actors and striking viewers with their emotional truth.

After being immersed in the flawed humanity of these various characters, viewers will not easily forget the pain of their self-deceits and the hope that comes from understanding others.

Because of sexual situations and references, much domestic tension and occasional rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Priest In Scotland Named Britain's "Preacher Of The Year"

ABERDEEN, Scotland (CNS) — At the end of Mass, the congregation of St. Mary's Cathedral burst into spontaneous applause. It was their way of acknowledging the honor bestowed on their parish priest, Father Bill Anderson, who a few days earlier had been named Great Britain's "Preacher of the Year." The Scotsman had beaten competition from hundreds of clergy of all denominations to win the award at London's Southwark Cathedral.

Cardinal Ordains Former Anglican Clergy, Some Married

LONDON (CNS) — Marriage and ordination are two sacraments that can enhance each other, Cardinal George Basil Hume of Westminster said as he ordained 11 former Anglican clergymen — four of them married men — to the Catholic priesthood. In the Nov. 1 ceremony at Westminster Cathedral he told the men and their families that the ordination was "God's will," although he stressed that celibacy was still normative for Latin-rite Catholic priests.

Scholars Present Research On Next Co-Patron Of Europe

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Theologians and historians met to present their research on St. Adalbert of Prague in preparation for his proclamation as a co-patron saint of Europe. "In April of next year, Pope John Paul II plans to add St. Adalbert to the ranks of the patron saints of Europe, joining St. Benedict, who was named patron of Europe by (Pope) Paul VI in 1964, and Sts. Cyril and Methodius, whom the pope proclaimed co-patrons of Europe in 1985," said Thomas E. Bird. A member of the Roman Catholic-Eastern Orthodox Theological Consultation and director of the Program in Slavic Studies at Queens College, City University of New York, Bird was part of the American delegation to the Oct. 29-30 conference on St. Adalbert in Kaliningrad, Russia, the town where tradition holds he was martyred at the end of the 10th century.

Time Columnist Praises Catholic School Nuns For Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Catholic schools get too little credit for teaching their students to reach far in life, writes Time magazine columnist Margaret Carlson in the December issue of Catholic Digest. "The nuns I had for 12 years of school in Pennsylvania made the life I came to live possible," Carlson said in an essay adapted for the national monthly magazine from a Sept. 23 article she wrote for Time. "The nuns were single-mindedly devoted to the task of enlarging our minds and saving our souls in the belief that we were all God's children; the doctor's daughter and the pipefitter's son; the 150 IQ and the dyslexic."

At Age 99, Lithuanian-Born Woman Realizes Dream Of Citizenship

WORCESTER, Mass. (CNS) — For 99-year-old Julia Jonis, what once was a dream is now a reality.

After coming to the United States from Lithuania 98 years ago, Jonis became a citizen in an October ceremony at the University Commons Nursing Care Center in Worcester.

Four generations of her family looked on and sang "God Bless America" after she was handed her citizenship papers.

Holding the document in her shaking hands, she kissed it and said, "Thank you ever so much. I've been waiting for this so many years."

Citizenship brought Jonis her first opportunity to vote in a presidential election this year, and the director of the city Elections Commission was on hand to register her to vote immediately after the ceremony.

BMHS Students Work With St. Leo School, Volunteer At Election Precincts

WINSTON-SALEM — Eight Bishop McGuinness High School students spent a recent afternoon working with 6th, 7th, and 8th graders at St. Leo's School assisting the St. Leo's students with a political project that was part of a four-week integrated unit coordinated by History teacher Mary Lou Schline.

Schline explained that this political studies integrates unit math, history, language arts, computer and science. The middle school students have been conducting polls, creating campaign slogans, writing speeches and discussing political topics.

BMHS students assisted the St. Leo's students with speeches they were preparing for a school assembly. Each student was to represent a political candidate. BMHS students shared information about their candidate's platform, experience and mannerisms; helped them identify and articulate issues; and critiqued their speeches.

Schline found the involvement of BMHS students to be "a wonderful help" and beneficial for younger students to see the enthusiastic interest the other students have in politics.

On Election Day, more than 30 Bishop McGuinness students who were members of the Harvard Model Congress delegation and Mock Trial teams worked at election precincts on behalf of pro-life candidates. The project was suggested by Ann Bagnal, Forsyth County Chairperson of Helms For Senate, and was coordinated by Student Council President Allan Huebner.

BMHS students volunteered hundreds of hours during the campaign on behalf of pro-life candidates, making phone calls, stuffing envelopes and participating in the Oct. 19 Walk For Victory. Faculty moderator Mike Streich said participation is "an excellent way for our students — the future leaders of our nation — to live out their commitment to the values we teach in the classroom."

Harvard Model Congress President Ryan Southern expressed the impact of political involvement for himself and his peers: "Real leadership starts with a Christian world view and that means integrity as well as not compromising your morals."

Forsyth Career Center Opens Doors To Catholic School

By MARY COYNE WESSLING

Correspondent

WINSTON-SALEM — Every school day, Sean Kenney leaves Bishop McGuinness High School's campus. He's not cutting classes—just going to another one located at the Forsyth County Career Center down the street.

Kenney, along with seven other BMHS students, is part of a unique program where students take advanced courses at the special center operated by the city-county school system. This is the first year private-school and home-school students have been permitted to enroll in classes there.

In order to participate in the program, the students had to rearrange their schedules and sign up for classes not offered at their school. They are responsible for getting to and from school each McGuinness students must attend classes even when their school has the day off.

Kenney is currently enrolled in an advanced psychology class at the center. Other students chose such courses as electronic music and landscaping.

"I really enjoy my class," said Kenney, a senior. "My teacher is great." Kenney compares his psychology class to a college course. "You're left on your own to keep up with the course work. It's a good opportunity to get ready for college," he said.

In order to make his class on time, Kenney leaves his history class five minutes early. He gets the homework assignment for that class from a friend later. For Kenney, it's a slight inconvenience, but worth the effort.

While the Career Center has offered a variety of advanced and technical courses to Forsyth County students for years, this is the first year BMHS students have participated.

"There's been an ongoing effort to bring Bishop McGuinness into this program," explained Carol London, guidance counselor at the school. "This has been a project of mine for 11 years."

London said when Don Martin became the new public school superintendent, the project went from the dialogue stage to reality. "Martin had always worked closely with the Catholic schools in Kentucky, where he was superintendent. He very much believes in making schools a community effort that includes Catholic schools."

In addition to Martin's open attitude, Bishop McGuinness had a dedicated advocate working on its behalf. Steve Huebner, then the home-school president, maintained the dialogue with Martin which eventually led to the school's inclusion at the Career Center. "Steve really deserves the credit," said London.

Private and home-school students, like their public school counterparts, are not charged tuition for courses taken at the center. The public school system benefits from having these students take the courses because it is allocated state money for each student enrolled at the center. The center offers far more advanced-placement classes than are available at any individual high school. It is hoped that more Bishop McGuinness students will enroll in courses there in the coming years.

day and for keeping up with course work at both locations. The challenge can be formidable. Some courses at the Career Center begin as early as 7:15 a.m. Others are held during some students' lunch periods or overlap a few minutes with their regular classes. And Bishop

ACC Commissioner Joins in BMHS Golf Marathon

WINSTON-SALEM — Atlantic Coast Conference Commissioner Gene Corrigan participated in Bishop McGuinness High School's third annual Golf Marathon on Oct. 28. Contestants played 100 holes of golf at Homestead Golf Club in Wallburg. Preceding the event, golfers solicited more than $9,000 in sponsored contributions.

The Golf Marathon is an annual fund-raising event organized by the BMHS Athletic Booster Club.

Corrigan was one of many individuals who, along with a host of businesses, supported the event. Before being named ACC Commissioner, Corrigan served as athletic director at the University of Virginia and at Notre Dame University. He is the father of six children and the uncle of BMHS alumnus and former basketball Coach Jim Corrigan.

Marriage Prep Programs Work But Need Strengthening

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Marriage preparation programs instituted in Catholic dioceses and parishes across the country work but need strengthening in some critical areas, according to diocesan family life directors speaking at a workshop on marriage preparation issues. Two of the key issues that need to be addressed better, speakers said, are cohabitation before marriage and two-career families. About 25 bishops attended the workshop in Washington, a prelude to their fall general meeting Nov. 11-14.

Athletes Improper Behavior Is Learned, Ethicist Says

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The suspension of 13 Boston College football players for placing bets on college and pro football and major league baseball games says a lot about what college athletes have learned from watching others, according to one ethicist. "The myth is that students are amoral or don't have values," said Kathy Shellogg, a lecturer in leadership studies at St. Norbert College in De Pere, Wis. "My experience is that they are copying our own behavior." The Boston College suspensions were announced Nov. 6, just four days after the Jesuit-run college had begun an investigation. Rumors about players placing bets had surfaced the week before.

Dismissal Of Decency Language In NEA Funding "Regrettable"

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The head of the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights called it "regrettable" that a federal appeals court has struck down decency standards for works by recipients of grants from the National Endowment for the Arts. "It's one more indication that our governmental authorities ... are willing to accede to the most irresponsible segments of the artistic community," William Donohue said two days after the Nov. 5 ruling by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco. But Georgetown University Law School professor David Cole, who handled the case for free on behalf of four NEA-funded artists and a coalition of 100 arts organizations, said the court ruled properly in keeping federal funding from being contingent on what he said were political considerations.

Bishop Says Inmates Were Denied His "Spiritual Comfort"

RICHMOND, Va. (CNS) — Bishop Walter J. Sullivan of Richmond expressed outrage after Virginia prison authorities refused to let him celebrate Mass and administer the anointing of the sick to three Catholic prisoners on death row. "I am outraged that actions by prison authorities would deny those on death row soon to be executed even spiritual comfort and forgiveness," the bishop said in a Nov. 1 letter to Ronald J. Angelone, director of the Virginia Department of Corrections. David Botkins, a spokesman for the corrections department, said Bishop Sullivan's visit coincided with a routine lockdown of prisoners, but could be rescheduled.

Bodies Of Three Spanish Marists Found In Refugee Camp In Zaire

MADRID, Spain (CNS) — The bodies of three Spanish Marist brothers working in a refugee camp were found Nov. 8 in the town of Bugobe, Zaire, said a statement from the order. It was not immediately known how the three brothers died, but murder by armed thugs in the region of Bukavu is suspected, the statement said. Brothers Servando Mayor, 44, of Hornillos del Camino; Julio Rodriguez, 40, of Pinel de Arriba; and Miguel Angel Isla, 53, of Villalain were confirmed dead by the Catalan Marists.

Central Americans Honor Pope With Esquipulas Peace Prize

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — Pope John Paul II has been awarded the Esquipulas Peace Prize by leaders of the six Central American Congresses for his work in favor of reconciliation and solidarity among different peoples. The award was made Nov. 9 in San Salvador during the third meeting of the Forum of Presidents of Central American Congresses and was received by Archbishop Manuel Monteiro de Castro, papal nuncio in El Salvador.

The papal nuncio said that the tribute represents "the high regard and immense affection felt by the Central American people for the pope."

Pope John Paul visited Central America earlier this year for the first time in over a decade.

Officials To Take Circumspect Approach To Theologians

ROME (CNS) — The Vatican's Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith is taking a more circumspect approach to its monitoring of theologians, congregation officials said. Viewed by some as a nemesis of creative theological thought, the congregation is reforming its procedures to better insure the rights of theologians who come under its review, said Archbishop Tarcisio Bertone, secretary of the congregation. At the same time, the congregation wants to avoid imposing a single type of theology when it acts to protect the integrity of church teachings, said Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, prefect of the congregation. Cardinal Ratzinger and Archbishop Bertone spoke at a one-day workshop at Gregorian University in Rome Nov. 8. Archbishop Bertone said that one of the changes foreseen is an "advocate for the author," named by the theologian and his bishop, during the second phase of the examination process.

Vatican, Israel Stress Peace To Prepare For Jubilee Pilgrims

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Israel is working at high speed to prepare to welcome 5 million Christian pilgrims in the year 2000, while acknowledging that the tourist boom won't occur without peace, an Israeli tourism official said. Shabtai Shai, director-general of the Israeli Ministry of Tourism, was in Rome Nov. 6-7 for meetings with Vatican and Italian officials. The central appointment of his trip was a meeting with Cardinal Roger Etchegaray, head of the Vatican's central planning committee for the year 2000.

HAYESVILLE — Even in the farthest western reaches of what is now the Diocese of Charlotte, Catholic history in North Carolina dates back more than half a century.

Catholic priests sporadically celebrated Mass in the remote mountain areas as early as the 1930s. However, Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh suspended their visits in 1953 because of the considerable distance the priests had to travel from Waynesville — the seat of the westernmost parish in North Carolina at that time.

The Glenmary Home Missioners arrived in the mountains in 1954, and in December of that year Bishop Waters established a parish comprising three counties: Cherokee, Clay and Graham. Glenmary Father Joseph Dean became the first resident pastor of the area, and celebrated his first Mass in Hayesville in early 1955.

Meanwhile, in nearby Murphy, a church dedicated to St. William had been constructed in 1952. Established as a mission of St. John parish in Waynesville, the Murphy church would go on to attain parish status itself. With Father Dean as its pastor, St. William assumed pastoral care of several missions, including the one in Hayesville.

As the Catholic community continued to grow in Hayesville, so did that of the Glenmary Missioners. Bishop Waters brought Glenmary Sisters to the area in the mid-1950s to assist in social work, religious instruction and home nursing. They established what would later be called Good Shepherd Home Health Service (later still the Good Shepherd Home Health and Hospice Agency), and in 1959 moved into a former motel-restaurant to set up their home, chapel, office and clinic there.

The chapel became the site for regularly celebrated Masses in Hayesville.

The sisters were certified by Medicare in October 1966 to carry on the work of their nursing service. Glenmary Sisters continued to staff the agency until the mid-1970s, when the diocese assumed responsibility for it.

In 1969, construction of an addition to the chapel began. Bishop Michael Begley of the newly created Diocese of Charlotte blessed the addition in May 1972.

During the years following, more and more Catholics — most from Florida — moved to Cherokee and Clay counties, especially from the mid-1970s on. Bishop Begley recognized the need for an increase in worship space for them and the growing local Catholic population, and in 1983 he approved plans to build new churches in both Hayesville and Murphy.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Berguin, members of the Hayesville congregation, donated more than five acres of land on which to build a church in town. Groundbreaking took place in February 1984 and by year's end, the new Immaculate Heart of Mary Church had been constructed. Bishop John Donoghue was the principal celebrant at the dedication Mass in July 1985, with Father Robert Healy, former pastor; Father T.J. Meehan, then-pastor; and Father Frank Ruff, president of the Glenmary Home Missioners, concelebrating.

In June 1988, diocesan priests began their pastorate of St. William Church in Murphy and its mission, Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in Hayesville. Church life in both towns has continued to thrive since then.

Father Edmund Kirsch was appointed pastor of the churches in 1991. In addition to a number of commissions and ministries which serve the area, Father Kirsch notes that members of the Immaculate Heart of Mary congregation offer their time at the Good Shepherd agency and at the Mountain Home Nursing Service. They are involved in a variety of community projects as well. In addition, Immaculate Heart of Mary Church has given a parcel of land — donated by a parish in Illinois that the land had been willed to — where a home for a needy family was built.

Although perhaps considered remote because of its geographic location, Immaculate Heart of Mary Church — with its active, faithful congregation — is an energetic presence on the western border of the Diocese of Charlotte.

Charlotte Mass Celebrates Life Of Cardinal Bernardin

By MIKE KROKOS

Editor

CHARLOTTE — Calling him a "bridge builder" and "true man of God," Bishop William G. Curlin Tuesday night celebrated a Memorial Mass in honor of the late Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin at St. Patrick Cathedral. The 68-year-old Chicago archbishop died of cancer Nov. 14.

"Cardinal Bernardin was a man of grace, patience, wisdom, love and courage. He had the gifts of the Spirit which bring people together in Christ," Bishop Curlin told the more than 125 people gathered.

"There was something truly Christ-like about the cardinal. You could see him at meetings, concelebrate the Eucharist with him, or even have a casual conversation, and you knew that you were in the presence of a man who believed Jesus is Lord and Savior," the bishop added.

Born in Columbia, S.C., Cardinal Bernardin was the only man to have served as both general secretary and president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops and U.S. Catholic Conference. He learned this August that his cancer had recurred in his liver and was inoperable.

During his final months, Cardinal Bernardin continued to champion humanitarian causes. Only days before he died, he penned a letter to the U.S. Supreme Court pleading for justices to reverse two lower-court decisions that would legalize physician-assisted suicide.

"Cardinal Bernardin told them, 'My suffering has value. I'm still a human being despite my suffering,'" Bishop Curlin said. "What a glorious sermon these past few months in his life have been, telling us no matter how difficult life is, no matter our weaknesses and suffering, we still experience the presence of God's love and grace."

Like Pope John Paul II's reconciliation meeting with his would-be assassin, Cardinal Bernardin befriended Steven J. Cook, who had accused the cardinal of sexual abuse as a teenager in Cincinnati. Cook later retracted his claim. "Cardinal Bernardin embraced his accuser and prayed with him, and communicated with him until the man's death," Bishop Curlin said. "What a powerful witness of real forgiveness."

Bishop Curlin also said he takes inspiration in the late cardinal's words. "I begin each of my priests' retreats with the words of Cardinal Bernardin: 'We as Christians are called to change the world. We are called to be tools of evangelization. Before doing this though, we must evangelize ourselves.'"

Bishop Curlin flew to Chicago early Wednesday morning to take part in Cardinal Bernardin's funeral later that day.

Pope, Castro Discuss Church's Role, Papal Trip

By JOHN THAVIS

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Opening a new chapter in Vatican-Cuban relations, Pope John Paul II and President Fidel Castro met to discuss a wider role for the Church in Cuba and a likely papal visit in 1997.

"Your Holiness, for me this is a great honor," Castro said with a slight bow as he entered the Vatican for the first time Nov. 19. The pontiff welcomed him with a handshake and led him into his office, where they spoke in Spanish without interpreters for 35 minutes.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said Castro renewed his invitation to the pope to visit the island nation, home to 4.5 million Catholics. The pope accepted, and both men agreed they would try to make it happen in 1997, though no date was set.

Castro later told reporters the pope would be free to go where he wanted and say what he liked during the visit.

200 Catholics Find Common Ground For Uncommon Gifts

By PAUL FREDETTE

Correspondent

LAKE JUNALUSKA — Familiar faces were easy to spot, smiles were everywhere and an abundance of warm greetings surrounded the 200 Catholics who gathered at The Harrel Center for Fire in the Mountains '96. Nearly every parish and mission in the western region of the diocese — the Asheville and Smoky Mountain Vicariates — was represented in this third annual celebration of faith and fellowship held Nov. 16. This year's theme focused on finding and utilizing the variety of gifts among community members which the Spirit sends "for the common good."

In remarks to participants, Bishop William G. Curlin encouraged everyone to build the presence of Christ in others, and to use their skills to fulfill their ministries through a personal conversion to Jesus Christ.

Presentations by Dominican Sister Donna Ciangio of the National Pastoral Life Center in Chicago were supplemented by "witness" talks from parishioners throughout the region who exemplified the day's themes in their respective communities. The presentations were followed by small group discussions that promoted an interactive exchange of ideas and experiences.

Richard Wolf, recently appointed Coordinator of Faith Formation for the western region, was impressed with the enthusiasm of the participants, many of whom were attending for the third time. "It is fulfilling my best hopes. We have nearly doubled last year's attendance. We wanted more young people to attend and they are here," he said.

Wolf was most appreciative of all those involved in the planning process and encouraged by the dynamics of the day. "If people can work in small groups this easily, experience such a high comfort level and stay on the topic, they are already moving in the direction of building small faith communities," he said.

Janet Hart leads an opening hymn during a prayer service.

Dr. Elinor Ford, last year's keynote speaker, welcomed the participants and offered them the example of the late Father Henri Nouwen as a guiding image for the day-long gathering. "Henri felt he had received more from these people whom the world said had no gifts to offer than he himself was ever able to give," she said. Citing from the Canadian priest's last book, Can You Drink This Cup?, published the week he died, Ford invited everyone to examine their own cup of life and the gifts it contained, to raise it confidently, and to drink from it courageously "so that God can fill it again with grace and love for the world."

Sister Ciangio, who worked full-time with the Renew program since 1981, presented various approaches to the challenge of surfacing the gifts to a larger group. Citing recent statistics indicating that one in four Americans belongs to some group (most often some form of support group), Sister Ciangio stressed the need to move beyond the "gas station" mentality of church. She described such people as "driving up to get nourished, paying for the service and driving off again, without ever getting the notion of being a member of a parish community."

Sister Ciangio referred extensively to a study conducted by Notre Dame University two years ago. It revealed that, while half of parishioners do experience their parishes as communities, 39 percent of Catholics still have an individualistic notion of religion.

Despite all of the factors creating resistance to a more communal experience of church, Sister Ciangio has confidence in the strength of the movement in this direction, not only in the American Church, but around the world. She is especially heartened by the cumulative "wake up call" effect of programs that invite conversion and growth like Renew, and the gradual implementation of the Catechumenate throughout the Church. But she questions whether many parish communities are really prepared for new members who have experienced the Catechumenate.

"Do they have a sense of responsibility for helping the faith development of these new people? Is there some way to channel people into existing groups in the parish that will help them continue their growth and development?" she asked.

New Administrator Plans To Take Things 'One Day At A Time'

CHICAGO (CNS) — Though Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin is gone, his spirit, his vision and his administration will continue "one day at a time," according to the newly elected archdiocesan administrator, Auxiliary Bishop Raymond E. Goedert.

In accordance with the requirements of the Church's Code of Canon Law, Bishop Goedert was named archdiocesan administrator by the 12-member Archdiocesan College of Consultors on Nov. 14, the day Cardinal Bernardin died.

"It's hard for me to know what day today is," Bishop Goedert said Nov. 15. He had slept only in cat naps over a difficult two days that included visiting with and praying for Cardinal Bernardin, grieving his loss, addressing local and national media, and working with and consoling fellow archdiocesan officials and staff.

The 69-year-old Bishop Goedert, who described himself as "a hardware man's son" when he was ordained a bishop in 1991, said that "people should not expect any big changes" in the Chicago Archdiocese.

"My job now is to keep the ship afloat," he told The New World, Chicago's archdiocesan newspaper. "Anything that the cardinal had initiated, we will complete, but we won't be introducing any new changes."

Bishop Goedert is no stranger to leading the archdiocese. In June 1995, when he was vicar general, he was chosen by Cardinal Bernardin to oversee the running of the archdiocese while the cardinal was suffering from his first bout with cancer.

Bishop Goedert expressed a deep gratitude for the lessons he learned from the way Cardinal Bernardin handled and accepted his death.

The outpouring of support and prayers from religious leaders of all faiths is a testament to Cardinal Bernardin's impact, the bishop said.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Says Catholic-Orthodox Divide Hurts Splendor Of Christianity

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The spiritual richness of Christianity cannot shine with its full splendor while Catholics and Orthodox remain divided, Pope John Paul II said.

In a series of Sunday talks since early in the summer, the pope has been proposing to Catholics various traditions and practices of the Christian East that could enrich their own faith lives.

In his Nov. 17 Angelus address, Pope John Paul addressed leaders and members of the Orthodox churches: "To our Orthodox brothers and sisters I would like to express my intense desire to undertake together, with renewed trust, the journey toward unity.

"I know that they, too, deeply feel this need," he told several thousand people who stood in the rain in St. Peter's Square for the midday event.

The pope told the crowd that one of the most obvious clues to the rich faith tradition of Eastern Christians is seen in "the sense of mystery which emerges from their icons."

For hundreds of years, Christians in the East and West have worked to place art at the service of faith, he said.

"But from the East, where icons had to be defended with blood during the iconoclastic crisis of the eighth and ninth centuries, there arrived a particular summons to jealously preserve the religious meaning of this art," the pope said.

Contemplating an icon, along with participating in the liturgical and ecclesial life of the Christian community, helps people grow in their experience of God, he said.

"The spiritual riches of the church — of East and West — cannot shine in all their splendor before the eyes of modern men and women without this witness of full reconciliation," he said.

Pope Urges Action In Zaire Crisis

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Moments after inaugurating a World Food Summit in Rome, Pope John Paul II urged international leaders to turn their words into action for an estimated 1 million hungry refugees in eastern Zaire.

Echoing widespread frustration among church and relief officials, the pope criticized as inexcusable the delays in sending food and medical supplies to the isolated camps, many of which were recently overrun in ethnic fighting.

The world must send relief "without delay," the pontiff told a general audience at the Vatican Nov. 13.

"How can one remain indifferent toward people who have been pushed to the limit, while they could be receiving urgently needed food and medicine stocked up in great quantities not far away?" the pope said.

He said the inaction was an offense to the lives and dignity of African refugees, and thus "an offense to God."

"No uncertainty, no pretext, no calculation can ever justify additional delays in humanitarian assistance!" he said.

The pope's remarks came as several major countries, led by Canada, were preparing to assemble a four-to-six-month mission aimed at guaranteeing the free flow of relief in the region. Negotiations were continuing about whether and under what circumstances the multinational mission could use force.

"This is a drama that is constantly present in my soul," he said. The pope has personally visited Zaire, Rwanda and Burundi and has made countless appeals for ethnic reconciliation in recent years.

He recalled that church workers have been among those who have shed their blood in efforts to improve the situation in Zaire. An archbishop and three missionary brothers were killed after fighting began there in late October.

The pope prayed that their sacrifice and that of other victims would help defeat forces of hatred and "help bring about in the beloved continent of Africa an era of mutual respect and brotherly welcome."

Thanksgiving:

The Who And The What Of Our Thanks

In one of my favorite books, The Giving Tree, Shel Silverstein tells the story of the relationship of a boy and a tree.

For a long time, the boy and the tree enjoy fun time together. As the boy grows older, the tree shares its gifts to satisfy the needs of a maturing young man — apples for eating and money, branches for a house, a trunk for a boat.

After a while, the tree is reduced to nothing more than a discouraged, lonely stump. One day, the boy, now a tired old man, returns to the tree to be told, "I have nothing left to give you." The old man replies, "I don't need very much now, just a quiet place to sit and rest." Can you imagine the stump straightening itself up with joy as it discovers renewed love and caring.

I like to think of Thanksgiving as a total giving, including our failures and accomplishments. It is worthwhile to mention the story behind Ernest Hemingway's title, "For Whom the Bell Tolls," which is based in part on the works of John Donne, the great religious poet of the 17th century. Donne had been thinking of the custom of ringing the church bell on the occasion of the death of a native. Often people came running to find out who had died, to discover for whom the bell was tolling. Donne's remark about this custom was: "No man is an island, entirely of himself; every man is a piece of the continent; a part of the mainland... Any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind, and therefore, never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee." A beautiful reminder of the gift of life.

By reading the Bible, we learn that failure is as important as success. With an open heart and mind, we discover some important hints: we should expect some failures and yet be thankful; we learn from failures and therefore should be thankful. Don't give up because of failures, for they are important for success. There is a success without succeeding many times in our Christian journey.

Thanksgiving, after all, is to be thankful for what we have and are, not for what we don't have or are not.

A Voucher For Quality Education

Ever since elementary and high school classes resumed in New York City public schools in September, officials have been wrangling over John Cardinal O'Connor's offer to help ease the city's unparalleled overcrowding in city classrooms. The Cardinal offered to take the lowest performing students into Catholic schools where there is a proven track record of success.

The debate that followed was predictable: public versus private education, state and church separation, financing issues, etc. What gets lost in the flurry of headlines and sound-bytes is, of course, the fundamental question of what makes a school good.

Any good school is a moral universe, a place where students will learn ethics and citizenship — if they are inspired to do so by leaders who compel their attention. If a school wishes to teach its young that they are responsible for one another and to a wider society, and that privileges carry obligations, it must operate according to these ideals. And these ideals are evidenced first and foremost in the teacher.

What do we expect of the "ideal teacher"? Well-known educator, Dr. Charles B. Conant, set down five major qualifications: A good teacher must (1) have a contagious enthusiasm for the subject being taught, (2) regard teaching as a joy — which means enjoying time spent with students, (3) have a passionate interest in their development, (4) know the subject well enough to stimulate great effort from pupils: and (4) possess the teaching skills necessary to relate successfully to students.

When asked the secret of successful teaching, Thomas Carlyle, the Scottish writer and historian replied: "Be what you would have your pupils be. All other teaching is unblessed mockery."

That is precisely the method of effective teaching in both private and public education. But in Catholic schools the unrivaled example of the best teacher is Christ. Even if we should presume to use Dr. Conant's criteria as a measure of Jesus' performance as a teacher, He would receive high marks indeed.

Clearly, Peter and the other apostles caught His enthusiasm. When He said, "Follow me," they followed. Finding joy in their company, Jesus prayed to the father: "I have made your name known to those whom you gave me...so that they may have my joy made more complete." (Jn. 17: 6, 13)

Again addressing His father, Jesus revealed His passionate interest: "The glory that you have given me, I have given them, so that they may be one as we are one." (Jn. 17: 22) Jesus certainly stimulated His pupils to great effort. After Peter's first preaching effort some three thousand were baptized in one day.

Did Jesus have the skills necessary to relate successfully to His pupils? When Nicodemus, a Pharisee, came to Him in search of the mystery of life, he acknowledged, "Rabbi, we know you are a teacher who has come from God; for no one can do these signs that you do apart from the presence of God." (Jn. 3: 2)

Through the ages, even those who do not accept Jesus as Lord and Savior recognize Him as one of the world's great teachers. For those who do accept Him, Jesus is not only the teacher, He is the lesson.

And because of Him, others will be able to look at us and our schools and see both good teachers and followers of Christ in our contagious enthusiasm, the spirit of joy in our hearts, passionate interest in the welfare of all our sisters and brothers, and outstanding skill in relating successfully to one another.

As Jesus is what He teaches us to be, so may we be what we would have others be.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Reconciliation After Abortion

Q. Several years ago I wrote to a priest about this matter, but he didn't respond. I'm not sure why.

I hope I can somehow get through it this time. Years ago I had three abortions, which my doctor recommended very firmly since my ex-boyfriend was a heroin addict.

I was young and afraid, but I have never forgotten it nor can I get over wondering, "What if — ?"

I could never express how I wish it never happened or how I could change things. I am now the mother of three beautiful children, and when I look at them I only wish there were six.

Am I forgiven or am I lost or am I still a Catholic? I hope so.

After all these years I'm not sure what I should do. I am sorry and afraid.

A. I wish you had some idea of the number of women who are in the same lonely and unhappy situation you are. It may at least help to know that you are not alone in your remorse over past abortions.

What you have done is a terrible violence against the gift of life, which you obviously realize, but God, the Church and the sacraments are there waiting for you to come home.

There may be some sort of parallel here between abortion and divorce. Having heard so forcefully the Church's position on the permanence of marriage, some Catholics came to believe that once divorced, even apart from remarriage, one was out of the Church forever.

Similarly, many who have had abortions believe there is no way back to God or faith.

It's clear you will never be happy until you are once again united to your Church's worship and sacraments, beginning with the sacrament of reconciliation.

There are many parishes and priests close to where you live. Pick one you don't know if you wish, perhaps one you have heard will be gentle and welcoming, look up the times for confession and come back. You have waited long enough.

Q. My question is about the words "Thy kingdom come" in the Our Father. They seem to imply that the kingdom of God is in the future, at least after we die. However, our priest recently spoke in a homily about the kingdom being here now, and quoted Jesus saying the "kingdom is among you."

This is probably too trivial a question, but which one is right? I'm not even sure I know what the kingdom of God is.

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

Finding Blessings In Our Shepherd's Last Days

The death of Cardinal Bernardin is a painful and inspiring reminder of a family ordeal we experienced a few years ago. Andrew's uncle Jimmie, who at the time of his death in 1992 was Archbishop of Atlanta, had been diagnosed with inoperable lung cancer. Jimmie faced his impending death with great dignity and courage. Like Cardinal Bernardin, he continued his duties caring for the archdiocese until his strength would no longer allow it. He encouraged us by his example to face this family transition with faith. Jimmie's advice was to not get caught up in worry and fear over his dying. In retrospect we see very clearly how our willingness to watch him accept death in peace and hope, and to pray constantly allowed his death to become transforming for us and our family.

We are reminded of Jesus in the garden when He told his friends to "watch and pray." Yet they faltered in sleep. Too often we found ourselves in a slumber of fear, worry and even anger. Too often our prayers were demands for a miracle and an insistence that "this cup" was God's mistake.

However, Jimmie's peaceful acceptance of his dying was a powerful example for us to follow. So often in his life he had shown us through his example how to live in faith; during the last days of his earthly life he showed us how to die in faith.

Walking that journey with Jimmie in constant prayer and watching his physical deterioration took us into a deeper journey with God. Looking back we see how we are different because of this. Our lives have been irrevocably changed because our faith has been deepened.

In a similar way our shepherd, Cardinal Bernardin, said to his flock, "Watch and pray" as he faced his transition with courage and dignity. We had watched him over the years as he reached out to us with encouragement and affirmation. We knew true leadership through his openness and hospitality, and his willingness to say, "I don't know the answer" and "I'm sorry." We had heard him say, "I love you." By his leadership our experience of Church was richer and more hospitable.

We knew so well that this was not a time to slumber in worry. Nor was it a time to fear what the future may hold for us. This was a time to pay close attention to the living example of a man who had gifted us with a spirit of collaboration and loving leadership; a time to let go of our anxieties and to trust in God.

In the final days of our shepherd's earthly life, we remained steadfast in our faith in the risen Christ who has shown us through His own example a sweet victory over death. And though we don't know what the future holds for this flock, we know that through this faith journey with our brother Joseph, we will never be the same. Our lives will be transformed by faith. We are so very blessed!

Bishops Approve Catholic Education Norms

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Catholic bishops Nov. 13 overwhelmingly approved a major new document governing Catholic higher education in the United States. After years of controversy and struggle over what at times appeared to be irreconcilable differences over the relationship between bishops and Catholic colleges and universities, the bishops approved the document by a vote of 224-6. Wide support has gradually emerged for the document as well in the Catholic academic community. Until about two years ago many leading figures in that community had been deeply suspicious that any such document would undermine cherished commitments to academic freedom and institutional autonomy that they considered essential to their institutions' survival and credibility in the world of American higher education.

Presentation of Mary

Stories from the apocryphal gospels tell of Mary's parents, Joachim and Anne, presenting their 3-year-old girl at the Temple. It is said that in thanksgiving for their first and only child, the couple left Mary there to reside and to dedicate herself to a spiritual life. The feast is marked Nov. 21.

Archbishop Theodore McCarrick closes his eyes in prayer during the last session of the U.S. bishop's fall meeting Nov. 14 in Washington.

Bishops Approve Modified Guidelines For Communion

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Catholic bishops approved new guidelines for receiving Communion, modifying them from the floor to address their concerns about members of the Orthodox Church receiving Communion in Catholic churches. The guidelines were approved on a voice vote with just one bishop's audible dissent Nov. 14, the last day of the bishops' fall general meeting in Washington. Archbishop Oscar H. Lipscomb of Mobile, Ala., convener of the joint committee that drafted the guidelines, urged throughout debate for their placement in missalettes used in Catholic churches. The revised guidelines, Archbishop Lipscomb said, would more closely conform to canon law and Pope John Paul II's exhortation on ecumenical cooperation, "Ut Unum Sint."

Space Jam

Feature-Length Cartoon Is Creative Yet Simple Fun

NEW YORK (CNS) — It's superstar athlete Michael Jordan to the rescue when the Looney Tune characters get in a jam — a "Space Jam" (Warner Bros.).

The movie is a madcap mix of animation and live action, blended well enough to make the elements come together in a frolicsome fusing of cartoon chaos with helpful humans.

Bugs Bunny (voice of Billy West) and his pals are in a bind, having agreed to a crucial basketball match. If they lose, they must relocate to the boring distant planet their animated alien opponents come from.

Most unfairly, to ensure victory, the sneaky aliens have simply stolen the talents right out of the bodies of top NBA basketball stars. But they overlooked basketball's best, former NBA genius Jordan (playing himself), who left the game to explore his baseball potential.

And so Jordan finds himself sucked into Looney Tune Land where such crazy critters as Daffy Duck, the Tasmanian Devil, Tweety Bird, Sylvester, Porky Pig, Elmer Fudd and Yosemite Sam want to continue to live — if Jordan will lend his helping hands.

Newest Looney team member Lola Bunny (voice of Kath Soucie) has Bugs bug-eyed and the game is on.

As directed by Joe Pytka, the movie zooms along its zany path and there is virtually no awkward pairing of cartoon and real characters. Jordan looks comfortable in the role and the script incorporates his real-life love for his late father into the story line convincingly.

The mostly computer-generated animation is bright, colorful and more dimensional than the usual flat-looking cartoons.

Although the various state-of-the-art visual effects may be highly sophisticated, there is simple, unsophisticated fun to be had from this creative, feature-length cartoon.

Only the customary presence of frequent cartoon violence prevents it from being appropriate for children of all ages.

Due to some comical cartoon violence, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Motivational speaker Jack Corcoran (Bill Murray) attempts to coax Vera into boarding the Kansas City bound train in "Larger Than Life." Each videocassette is available on VHS format. Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"Faust" (1994)

Playfully absurd fantasy in which a man (Petr Cepek) finds himself in a Prague theater playing the role of Faust, sometimes on the stage or in a medieval setting but most often in a marionette version, all of which inevitably ends with Mephistopheles (again Cepek) claiming his soul. Writer-director Jan Svankmajer's Czech production is a surrealistic blend of live action, puppetry and clay animation but the traditional story gets lost in a welter of shifting scenes and bizarre images with Faust as a contemporary Everyman bumbling his way through a mythic world of good and evil. Sparse dubbed dialogue. A demonic incantation, some bawdy humor and sexual innuendo. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Independence Day" (1996)

Compelling sci-fi thriller in which huge alien spaceships level three American cities before the president (Bill Pullman), a computer whiz (Jeff Goldblum) and a Marine pilot (Will Smith) mount a last-ditch effort to disable the spacecraft's impenetrable shields. Director Roland Emmerich's patriotic-themed disaster flick is powered by an action-packed storyline, spectacular special effects and sympathetic characters who provide some human dimension to the proceedings. Intense depiction of massive destruction but little gore, brief sexual innuendo and minimal profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Kazaam" (1996)

Trashy comic fantasy in which a 12-year-old brat (Francis Capra) and a 5,000-year-old genie (Shaquille O'Neal) tangle with some nasty thugs running a rap-music racket, after which the boy reconciles with a father he hasn't seen in 10 years as well as the man his divorced mom plans to marry. Directed by Paul Michael Glaser, the witless proceedings are noisy, the characters are generally unlikable and there's nothing magical about the clumsy special effects. Stylized violence, menacing situations, domestic tensions, coarse language and a profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Mrs. Winterbourne" (1996)

After surviving a train wreck, an unwed pregnant teen-ager (Ricki Lake) is mistakenly thought to be the widowed daughter-in-law of a wealthy matron (Shirley MacLaine) whose son (Brendan Fraser) promptly falls in love with his bogus sister-in-law. Director Richard Benjamin's sappy mistaken-identity tale fills this contrived Cinderella story with cardboard characters and cheap sentiments. A live-in relationship, fleeting violence, recurring profanity and minimal rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Pallbearer" (1996)

Comic misfire about a well-meaning wimp (David Schwimmer) who's persuaded to eulogize a high school classmate he doesn't even remember, then is seduced by the deceased's grief-stricken mother (Barbara Hershey), though he's only interested in wooing a former classmate (Gwyneth Paltrow). Directed by Matt Reeves, the script gives trite treatment to the personal crossroads faced by the title character and his twentysomething pals. Fleeting bedroom scenes, recurring profanity and an instance of rough language. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Phantom" (1996)

The comic-book jungle hero of the title (Billy Zane) is a mysterious masked figure who sets out to prevent an evil millionaire (Treat Williams) from securing three magical skulls which have the power to rule the world. Directed by Simon Wincer, the fantasy adventure is set in the 1930s and features a colorful collection of dashing heroes, mustachioed villains and desperate damsels in distress. Some stylized violence and frequent menace. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Rediscovering the spirit world in Advent

By Father Lawrence E. Mick
Catholic News Service

Jean Auel writes often of the spirits and totems embraced by different tribal groups in The Valley of the Horses, her best-selling novel about early humans at the end of the last ice age. Though her writing is fiction, Auel is probably correct in believing that primitive humans were concerned about the spirit world.

Every known culture seems to have some sense of spiritual realities beyond what humans can see and touch and control. In diverse ways, all humans seem to think about the spiritual, talk about the spiritual, seek to commune with the spiritual and call upon spiritual beings for help.

While recognition of a spiritual realm may be universal, the way that the spiritual is envisioned varies greatly. Some of the deepest human questions concern how the spiritual should be understood, and how the spiritual and material worlds are related.

A critical question is how big a gulf there is between the spiritual and material realms.

One approach identifies the spiritual with the material world. Called pantheism, this view believes God is identical with the whole created universe. There is no gap at all.

In another approach, the material and the spiritual are completely opposed to each other. This view assumes that to become a spiritual person, one must shun the material world as much as possible. Such an approach tends to view the material world, especially the human body, as evil or at least as the main source of temptation.

A variation of this second approach can be found in a contemporary materialism that attempts to find meaning and happiness by dealing only with the material world. Here, nonetheless, the underlying assumption is that the material world has no spiritual component or connection.

Though both of these approaches have influenced Christians in various ways through the centuries, an authentic Christian worldview steers a middle course between them. This course is based on the fundamental fact that Jesus Christ, the Word of God, became flesh and lived among us.

Christians do not believe that the universe is God; there is a distinction between God and the world God created. But in Jesus, the created and the divine are joined inseparably and forever.

Jesus is both God and human, divine and created, spiritual and material. In him, we see God made visible. We hear God speak to us. We feel the touch of God's healing power. We experience God's presence and power at work in our midst. We are drawn into the very life of God through the saving grace Jesus brings.

This is what we celebrate each year at Christmas — not just that Jesus was born 2,000 years ago, but that he continues to live in our midst. Christmas is a celebration of the incarnation, the enfleshing of the Son of God.

In the Christmas season we celebrate the implications of this amazing truth: that God has become one of us so that we might become like God.

All the church's life and liturgy are ultimately based on the truth of the incarnation.

In worship, the church uses created things and people as the means to encounter God. A purely spiritualist approach is not Christian. Instead, water and oil and bread and wine play roles when people are initiated into the body of Christ. We use human words and actions to express and experience God's presence and power in our midst.

Though Christians sometimes have held a rather negative view of the human body, the liturgy always has incorporated the body into worship.

The body is washed and clothed at baptism, anointed in confirmation and fed in the Eucharist. The body also is anointed in ordination to ministry and in the sacrament of the sick. Reconciliation is expressed by an imposition of hands, and weddings speak of the physical union of husband and wife as a sign of God's union with us.

We also use our bodies to express our prayer and our worship. We stand and sit and kneel. We travel in processions and other forms of ritual dance. We bow and prostrate ourselves as signs of reverence. We kiss the cross on Good Friday and bless our bodies with holy water every time we enter and leave the worship space.

We share signs of peace with each other and wash each other's feet. We take the body and blood of Christ in our hands and into our bodies, the primary tabernacles where Christ wishes to dwell.

Advent is a good time to reflect on the wonder of the incarnation. The eternal Son of God took on our human form, forever linking the human and divine, the spiritual and material. God came to share our life so that we might share the life of the Trinity.

That is the wonder of the Christmas we now are preparing to celebrate.

FAITH IN THE MARKETPLACE

This Advent, how can you adjust your focus in order to improve your preparations for Christmas?

"I'd like to focus more on my family, on my parents and grandparents, not just my immediate family. I'd like to be more available to them to help them, not so much with gifts, but with my time and presence." — Antoinette Cheek, Greensboro, N.C.

"Basically, slowing down my life, because I think that will help me focus on the importance of the Advent season and what Christmas is all about." — Sister Paula Nasenbeny, OSF, Lemont, Ill.

"To receive the sacrament of penance. I think that's very important to prepare for Christmas — to focus on God's forgiveness and to ask for forgiveness for the times we've hurt people, even inadvertently." — Ana Maria Middlebrook, Mission, Texas

"I could take a look at the spiritual aspects of Christmas and focus less on the gift-giving, commercial aspects of the season. We get so wrapped up in what we're giving, we forget why we're giving." — Denise Jawdy, Corry, Pa.

"I try to take my cue from the actions and life of Jesus Christ. Being generous with your time, money and talents is an everyday thing, but during Advent, keeping that orientation may be easier — because so many people are focused in that direction." — John F. Walsh, Westfield, N.J.

An astonishing thought for Advent

By Dan Luby
Catholic News Service

It starts with hunger in a belly that cannot fill itself. The limitation and needs which go with the territory of the human body are part of our experience from the beginning of our lives until the end.

To be sure, there are times for some of us when our bodies are a source of joy: strong, beautiful, immensely complex in organization and diverse in form.

There are more times, however, for more of us, when our bodies seem to betray us.

—Our arms are too short to reach the top shelf.

—Our face doesn't strike the desired chord in another's heart.

Reflection on the mystery of the incarnation, which we will celebrate at Christmastime — that God takes on our full humanity, including a finite human body — may provide us with an antidote to such an impulse.

Becoming human is the amazing way God entered into irrevocable communion with us. This is an astonishing

At times our bodies seem to betray us. We find fault with our appearance, our frailty. "Reflection on the mystery of the incarnation, ... that God takes on our full humanity," offers a way to turn frustration into hope.

assertion. And it suggests that in the limitations and glories of the body we can connect with the God who created us.

Because of our bodies, we share with the Lord himself the experience of a life charged with immense beauty and richness: the sight of a sunrise over a snowy winter field; the freedom and power felt when our bodies respond to the demands of work; the heart-filling sound of our names on the lips of people who love us. In these and 1,000 other ways our bodies enable us to experience and share creation's goodness. They become signs of that goodness.

It would have been enough for God to save us from outside our humanity, stepping in only as our Creator. But through the incarnation, our salvation is accomplished from the inside.

On a real bad day, the difficulties our bodies pose for us can seem almost unlimited. No amount of theologizing will render the hard facts of pain and sickness and limitation easy to bear.

Vision still grows cloudy with age. Chronic ailments still impede us from doing what we long to do. Physical needs that can't be met still contribute to strained relationships in families and among nations.

But this Advent, try to remember the unimaginably deep bond which the incarnation forges between us and God. It offers a way to turn the pains and frustrations of human frailty into occasions of hope and signs of communion.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

It's easy to welcome Advent, even if it isn't easy to carry out our plans — this year, again — to get ready for Christmas in an all-new way. Advent seems healthy!

For one thing, Advent urges us to live with expectation, anticipation. This church season gives us a push in the direction of hope — something it's hard to live without. It's good to feel we're looking forward to what comes next in our lives.

Of course, in Advent what comes next is Christmas. So the season sets a tone — proposing that we live as though wonderful things still await us, as if, yes, there is always something more to come, something to celebrate.

But Advent doesn't only set a future-directed tone. With its focus on the incarnation — God becoming one of us — it recasts our thinking about our "world": the people, work, concerns and activities that tend to absorb our energies.

By anticipating the incarnation, Advent reminds us to make time for recognizing and drawing out whatever is best about the "universe" we occupy.

Whatever causes us anxiety isn't the whole story. The fuller Advent story is that God not only hasn't abandoned us, but that God awaits us here and now at every turn.

Salvation history: God's promise in human history

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

Abraham and Sarah were childless and quite advanced in age —eagerly "heir-minded" but definitely not "heir-conditioned" — when God told Abraham he would become the father of a people so numerous as to be beyond counting. This was the beginning of what we call "salvation history," the process by which God works out a plan to save humanity.

Scripture says that when Sarah overheard the messenger of God make the promise to Abraham, she doubled up with laughter. With the passing of each childless year, the promise seemed sadly more laughable.

FAITH IN ACTION

Advent each year ought to be different since we ourselves are not the same, observes Passionist Father Isaias Powers in Welcoming Christ, Daily Meditations and Prayers for Advent (Twenty-Third Publications, Box 180, Mystic, Conn. 06355. 1996. Paperback, $0.99; bulk-order discounts). During one meditation he imagines Jesus' mother saying: "Being born without sin is a gift ... I didn't deserve.... God deserved it!... You, too, have received a whole assortment of God-given favors at your birth ... bones that could grow, a brain that could learn.... If you develop gratitude for the good beginning God has given you, that ... is itself the first step of Advent."

Reflection: Father Powers suggests this Advent prayer during grace before dinner: "Jesus, make me more a giving person and less a griping person. And let me be more spontaneous in giving thanks for the uniqueness I was born with and for all the care that keeps me going. This way, I can thank you for your mother, too."

Abraham hoped against hope "that he would become 'the father of many nations'.... He did not weaken in faith when he considered his own body as (already) dead.... He did not doubt God's promise in unbelief; rather, he was empowered by faith and gave glory to God." Abraham was convinced that what God promised, God was also able to do (Romans 4:18-21).

Abraham's faith paid off, and his trust was vindicated marvelously. He did have a son, Isaac, and salvation history was on its tumultuous way.

But bear in mind that salvation history is history nonetheless, and human history can be pretty messy at times. It involves people as well as God, flesh-and-blood human beings who can be weak, fearful, treacherous, prone to doubt God's love, to be skeptical that God's promises will be kept.

Moses undertook the leadership of a fractious people, convinced that God would lead them into a land of their own. When they were well on their way, Moses sent a body of scouts to reconnoitre the land. They returned with the disappointing report of strongly walled cities with fierce defenders.

One scout, Caleb, was not so pessimistic. But in spite of his confident assurances that the people could take possession of the land, they believed the majority report and turned on Moses for leading them on a dangerous wild-goose chase. Moses could do nothing to dissuade them from turning away into a circuitous route, and the entrance into the promised land was delayed.

Undaunted by this disappointment, Moses continued to lead them, and eventually they entered Canaan and took it by a flanking movement. It was, after all, the promised land, and God, who had made the promise, fulfilled it spectacularly.

Centuries later, when the people were in apparently hopeless exile, God promised to bring them home. This was simply incredible but, as God told the prophet Ezekiel, "I have promised, and I will do it" (Ezekiel 37:14).

Which is just what God did!

—Sleep overcomes us when we need to be awake.

—Our knees grow stiff.

—Sickness or flaw or unmet desire mars our sense of success.

There is no doubt that we live "in the flesh" — no doubt either that our flesh, the bodily dimension of being human, is often experienced as burdensome.

And what bears more eloquent testimony to the reality of our bodily limits at this time of year than the transformation of the Advent season of holy waiting into a frenzied commercial festival of stress and fatigue, sore feet and headaches?

Whenever we are forcefully confronted by the weakness inherent in our bodily existence, we can succumb to the impulse to identify our true selves only with the spiritual and to disown our eminently finite bodies. Doing so, however, rejects not only the reality of who we are, but also the saving power of the incarnation.

Pope, Gorbachev Exchange Words Of Appreciation At Vatican

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II and former Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev exchanged words of appreciation for the efforts each other made on behalf of justice.

The pope and the former communist leader, who was visiting Italy, met at the Vatican Nov. 18.

They had met twice, in 1989 and 1990, while Gorbachev was still president of the Soviet Union and was introducing political and economic reforms in his country.

"Your Holiness, I recall our first meeting here which led to the start of so many changes both inside and outside of the Soviet Union," the papal spokesman quoted Gorbachev as telling the pope.

"I must show you my high esteem for your words then — and still now — about justice in the world, freedom and your efforts to keep this world more united," Gorbachev said, according to Joaquin Navarro-Valls, the spokesman.

The pope responded by thanking Gorbachev for visiting again and praised the efforts he had made to reform communism before the Soviet Union splintered apart.

"With your words of that time, you wanted to underscore the trend toward change — not so much in what form justice would take, but in the very substance of justice," Navarro-Valls quoted the pope as saying.

The pope also told Gorbachev, "I recall with great affection that you were the first to invite me to Russia."

At that point, Navarro-Valls said, Gorbachev interrupted the pope saying, "I am still very hopeful that we will see each other there."

The idea of a papal trip to Russia frequently is mentioned at the Vatican, but always with the understanding that Vatican relations with the Russian Orthodox Church would have to improve before the visit would be possible.

As with their previous meetings, Pope John Paul and Gorbachev also exchanged gifts.

The former Soviet leader left with another set of papal medals, which change each year.

"Your gifts are very important to me," Navarro-Valls quoted Gorbachev as saying. "When there is a museum of 'perestroika,' these gifts will hold a prominent place."

"Perestroika" was the Russian word used to describe Gorbachev's policies of liberalization and gradual openness to the West.

First East Coast Family Conference Draws 1,500

STAMFORD, Conn. (CNS) — The first East Coast Catholic Family Conference attracted about 1,500 adults and children from Toronto to Texas to hear speakers talk about the Christian values found in the Bible and how they can be applied to today's family.

The Nov. 9-10 conference in Stamford was modeled after the annual National Catholic Family Conference in Long Beach, Calif., and was organized around the theme "Building Families in the '90s."

"Because of my own interest in and the obvious need to strengthen marriage and family in our time, I began to check into the possibility of getting a family life conference in our area," said its coordinator, Father Peter J. Towsley, parochial vicar at Holy Family Parish in Fairfield.

It turned out to be "an overwhelming success," added the priest, who organized it with the help of St. Joseph's Communications.

Speakers included Scott Hahn, a theology professor at the Franciscan University of Steubenville, Ohio, and Kimberly Kirk Hahn, who talked about their conversion to Catholicism and how their new faith has helped their marriage grow and its effect on their family life.

Sharing "One Life In God"

Catholics And Lutherans Gather, Share Faith At Yearly Conference

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

LENOIR — The Fourth Aquinas-Luther Conference Nov. 10-13 at Lenoir-Rhyne College was a rare opportunity for renowned scholars, writers, historians, clergy and lay persons to gather around the same table to share their faith. Once-feuding Lutherans and Roman Catholics of the 16th century were united together in Christ, reflecting on the theme of this year's conference, "On Life in God."

During the four lectures and two keynote speeches, three recurring themes surfaced: survival tips in an anti-Christian or Post-Modernistic culture; convergent and contrasting views on Aquinas and Luther; solid arguments for unity — one Church in Christ.

Sharing A Rich Spirituality

Dr. L. Gregory Jones, professor and chairperson of the Department of Theology at Loyola College in Baltimore, delivered the keynote address, "Life in the Fountain of God's Love," at the opening Vespers Service. The title was inspired by the words of St. Catherine of Siena.

Jones discussed the need to distinguish between "authentic Christian understanding and the practices of spiritual living from their corrupting counterfeit alternatives," by sharing the common desire of Aquinas and Luther to live a rich spiritual life through the Way of the Cross.

Dr. Deal Hudson, publisher and editor of Crisis magazine, said that Lutherans and Catholics did not have time to argue endlessly over divisive issues such as "justification by faith" but instead must focus on a more urgent problem — the current and dangerous Post-Modern Age.

The Need For Unity: Mending The Body Of Christ

Dr. Michael McDaniel, director of the Center for Theology at Lenoir-Rhyne College and organizer of the event, set unity as the tone for the conference. "Lutheranism has run its course," he boldly said, adding that Martin Luther's objectives had been met.

Even though this opinion was not completely shared by Dr. James Kittelson, professor of history at Ohio State University and author of a biography on Martin Luther, it showed that some in-roads have been made in Lutheran-Catholic dialogue. Dr. Kittelson pursued the topic with rhetorical questions: "Who's giving up what?" and "Why the need for unity?" The answers came swiftly from other panelists with quotes of Scripture and an explanation of how the broken body of Christ needed mending so that its voice could be strengthened.

Lutheran and Catholic scholars unanimously agreed that Pope John Paul II was the modern theologian of today. Dr. McDaniel then showed the crucifix with the figures of St. Peter and St. Paul he wears around his neck given to him by the Holy Father when he was serving as the Lutheran Bishop of North Carolina. Pope John Paul II said, "May the theology of Paul and the Church of Peter forever be together at the foot of the cross."

A Look Toward The Future

With concern for youth growing up in a confused time, Dr. Paul Rorem, Princeton professor of Ecclesiastical History, believes the Holy Spirit will bring forth 21st century theologians. "They may come from unexpected places such as Asia or Africa and we must (then) humbly learn from elsewhere," he said. Dr. Rorem felt that probing traditional teachings in the formation of the soul provides an engaging and provocative alternative to the pop spirituality circulating today.

"People are not aware of their own Church tradition. There are some Catholics who think St. Thomas Aquinas is irrelevant for our time, but this is not so. His theology offers a whole way of life, an education in genuine happiness, learning to love the right things," said Father Paul Wadell, professor of Christian Ethics at Catholic Theological Union in Chicago.

Dr. Deal Hudson, publisher and editor of Crisis magazine, said that Lutherans and Catholics did not have time to argue endlessly over divisive issues such as "justification by faith" but instead must focus on a more urgent problem — the current and dangerous Post-Modern Age. He defined this age as "giving up on the whole" where there is an unhealthy emphasis on differences and fragmentation. "Post-Modernism says all knowledge is socially determined by sex differences, ethnic differences, class or power," he added.

Hudson pointed out the effects of such a notion are further fragmentation in religion with gender theology, sexual preference theology and third world theology. "There is nothing good about it," he said. "Luther and Aquinas said that sin affects our practical judgment." He also believes for Post-Modernists, there is no definitive right or wrong.

Dr. Hudson added there is hope. Catholics and Lutherans are the pivotal figures to defeat Post-Modernism, he said, since they share a belief in the Word of God. He also encouraged reading Aquinas' works. "When I read it (Summa Theologiae), I always feel a call to holiness. I always feel convicted I could live a better life!" he said.

Regardless of their background, participants left united in their desire to learn more about their faith and traditions, and the theologians who continue to lead Christians to a "Life in God."

any conditions on me either," he said.

"He will be treated with respect when he comes," the Cuban leader said. Cuba is the only Spanish-speaking country in Latin America the pope has not visited.

Castro also told reporters he hoped his meeting with the pope would help build a climate of Church-state trust.

"We want to work with the Catholic Church. We're willing to keep improving these relations and to satisfy (the Church's) aspirations. But that is not accomplished from one day to the next. Time is needed," he said.

The unusual meeting brought together two 20th-century protagonists from opposite ends of the ideological spectrum. Castro heads one of the last communist governments in the world, one which harshly persecuted the Church when it came to power in 1959, and Pope John Paul is widely credited with hastening the fall of European communism.

Navarro-Valls said the two leaders spoke in a climate of "open dialogue," and their talks focused on "normalization of the Church's life in Cuba and of the role of believers in Cuban society."

A carefully worded Vatican statement summarizing the meeting did not explicitly mention human rights, but Navarro-Valls said the issue surely was covered in the talks.

In the past, the pope has strongly insisted on respect for religious freedom as the first of all human rights, and Castro's communist government has recently shown signs of moderating its restrictions on Church activities.

The Cuban president, who once attended a Jesuit school, expressed to the pope his admiration and appreciation for the Church's work in his country, especially its education and social welfare programs. The two also spoke about conditions in Latin America, the history of the region and environmental issues, Castro said afterward.

"I was impressed with the pope's kindness. He let me do most of the talking and listened attentively," Castro said.

Castro left the pontiff with the words: "I hope to see you soon in Cuba." Pope John Paul replied: "Thank you for your visit, and my blessings on the Cuban people."

Navarro-Valls underlined the historic nature of the encounter.

"The most important thing that happened was that President Castro was here discussing these key points with the Holy Father. The result is open to future developments," he said.

He echoed other Vatican officials, who said privately that the dialogue with Castro and his government was certainly more open than in the past, but by no means easy. The Church there is still pressing for greater operating space for its missionary, social, educational and mass media activities.

Navarro-Valls said one topic in this second round of talks was the activity of bishops and priests in Cuba; the Vatican has pressed for freer entry of non-Cuban pastoral workers in the country, citing a priest shortage, and Cuba recently showed some flexibility on the issue.

The two sides also talked about the process of national reconciliation in Cuba, which the Vatican spokesman said included all Cubans living inside or outside the country. More than a million Cubans have left the island since Castro came to power; most have settled in the United States.

They discussed development in Cuban society and Cuba's place in the international community. Both have been conditioned by a long U.S. economic embargo against Cuba, which the Vatican opposes for humanitarian reasons.

Castro departed the Vatican via St. Peter's Basilica, touring the church for about 20 minutes and pausing before the crypt leading to the tomb of St. Peter. He was able to admire Michelangelo's "Pieta" statue up close, stepping inside a glass partition that normally keeps tourists at a distance.

New York Publisher To Print English Release Of Pope's Book
VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The New York publishing house William G. Berry will print and distribute Pope John Paul II's new book in the United States, England and Australia.

The book, "Gift and Mystery: On the 50th Anniversary of My Priestly Ordination," is expected to be released in English by the end of November, Vatican officials said.

The 119-page Italian edition, published by the Vatican printing press, was distributed to the media Nov. 15.

Archbishop Crescenzo Sepe, secretary of the Congregation for Clergy and apparent force behind getting the pope to write a personal account of his vocation, said the Vatican consulted with national bishops' conferences in choosing publishers for the various language editions.

The archbishop said the pope wrote the book between July and September as an act of thanksgiving for 50 years of priesthood and as an offering of love to his brother priests, not as a money-making project.

In fact, he said, the retail price of the Italian edition, 15,000 lira — the equivalent of $10 — is about half the standard price for a hardcover book in Italy.

CHRISTMAS STAMP —

Postage stamps for the 1996 holiday season include this Madonna and Child stamp, a detail from the oil painting, "Adoration of the Shepherds," done by Italian artist Paolo de Matteis in 1712.

Stamp Of Madonna And Child Among Holiday Postal Offerings

WASHINGTON (CNS) — This year's U.S. holiday postage stamps include not only a Madonna and Child for Christmas, but also one commemorating Hanukkah, the eight-day Jewish Festival of Lights.

There also are secular images of the season: ice skating, tree trimming, a child's dream of Santa.

This year's Madonna and Child stamp is a detail from the oil painting "Adoration of the Shepherds," done by Italian artist Paolo de Matteis in 1712. The painting is in the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts in Richmond, where the stamp was to be issued in a Nov. 1 ceremony.

De Matteis did the painting for a leading art patron of the time, the Duchess of Laurenzano. It is considered one of his masterpieces, and typifies the late Baroque or early Rococo style of Naples, according to Postal Service spokesman Robin Wright.

The Hanukkah stamp was unveiled earlier this year as the first stamp in a new series called "Holiday Celebrations." It was issued jointly by the United States and Israel during October and shows a contemporary menorah of nine multicolored candles.

The Postal Service said the "Holiday Celebrations" series will reflect a different cultural or ethnic holiday each year, and it announced Oct. 30 that the 1997 stamp will feature the African-American holiday Kwanzaa. According to Wright, future stamp issues might highlight the Islamic fast of Ramadan or Cinco de Mayo, the May 5 Mexican holiday marking a military victory.

The Postal Service already has announced that its 1997 holiday stamps will include another Madonna and Child, along with holiday wreaths and American holly.

A. Your question is not trivial at all. Ideally, our whole spiritual lives should be founded on that reality.

The Gospels speak of that kingdom dozens of times as a truth which frames our relationship with God here and in eternity.

Essential to our understanding of that image is the realization that Christ's kingship, God's reign, is not a place or something else static, to be "completed," finally finished, sometime here or in the future.

God's reign, like God's love, is something active, dynamic, ongoing, continually at work in creation.

Thus this kingdom/reign is his gift to us now and manifests itself as we human beings react to each other socially, religiously, politically and in a myriad of other ways.

As the New Testament indicates often, this presence of God, his rule, is not something we merit, or even "build." He gives it to his people when they are communities of faith and fidelity to him.

Understood this way, the reign of God is always here and always coming, as long as a relationship between God and creation exists.

It's no wonder that Jesus, Matthew and other evangelists place such great importance on this reign in our life in Christ. I'm glad you want to delve into it more thoughtfully.

A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about Mary, the mother of Jesus, is available by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Questions should be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

World And National News Briefs

Cardinal Bernardin Hailed For Witness In Life And Death

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Chicago's Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin was "our nation's pre-eminent Catholic Church leader of the 20th century," said Cardinal Roger M. Mahony of Los Angeles. "He was a peacemaker. He cut through difficult issues. He had remarkable gifts.... There is no one to take his place," said retired Archbishop John R. Quinn of San Francisco. Cardinal Bernardin's death from cancer Nov. 14 at the age of 68 brought an outpouring of such tributes, from non-Catholic leaders as well as Catholics. Hundreds of cardinals, bishops and civil dignitaries were expected at his funeral at Holy Name Cathedral in Chicago Nov. 20. Named to represent President Clinton were Vice President Al Gore and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican Raymond Flynn. Cardinal Mahony was to be chief celebrant with Msgr. Kenneth Velo, president of the Catholic Church Extension Society, as homilist.

Both Parties See Good Coming From Church-Labor Dialogue

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Leaders in both the church and the labor movement said Nov. 13 they have seen an ongoing church-labor dialogue bear much fruit, and added their hopes for still more to come. Retired Bishop James W. Malone of Youngstown, Ohio, a self-described "son of a steelworker" who put in some time in the steel mills himself, said the joint work of the church and organized labor is "an important challenge." AFL-CIO president John Sweeney, another participant in the dialogue sessions since their beginning five years ago, said he wanted "to salute all of the bishops for all the good work that you do." Bishop Malone and Sweeney made their comments during a reception to celebrate the dialogue. It was held in conjunction with the U.S. bishops' fall general meeting in Washington.

State Department Committee On Religious Freedom Named

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Twenty religious leaders and academics, including two Catholic bishops, have been named to a new U.S. State Department Advisory Committee on Religious Freedom Abroad. Archbishop Theodore E. McCarrick of Newark, N.J., and Bishop Ricardo Ramirez of Las Cruces, N.M., will join representatives of Muslim, Protestant, Jewish, Bahai and Orthodox congregations on the committee, which was formed at the direction of the White House to call attention to the problems of religious persecution abroad. The committee will be chaired by Assistant Secretary of State John Shattuck, who heads the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor.

Bishops In Statement Decry Taped Confession

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Catholic bishops expressed outrage over the case in Portland, Ore., involving the secret taping of a sacramental confession by county jailers. "We are dismayed by this violation of fundamental religious and human rights," said Cleveland Bishop Anthony M. Pilla, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops and U.S. Catholic Conference. His statement, dated Nov. 13, was issued on behalf of the conference during the bishops' annual Nov. 11-14 meeting in Washington.

Assisted Suicide Cases Said To Put Nation At A Crossroads

WASHINGTON (CNS) — With the Supreme Court considering two physician-assisted suicide cases, the "assisted suicide agenda" is shaping up as a battle over discrimination against illness and disability, said a statement from the U.S. bishops. "No court, no legislature, no human being has the right to say that any human life is worthless or that any human being is of less value than another," said the Nov. 13 statement issued by Cleveland Bishop Anthony M. Pilla, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, on behalf of the organization. The conference filed friend-of-the-court briefs a few days earlier arguing that lower court rulings, which found laws prohibiting assisted suicide to be unconstitutional, were misguided and not constitutionally supportable.

Order Confirms Murder Of Four Spanish Marist Brothers In Zaire

MADRID, Spain (CNS) — Four Spanish Marist brothers serving refugees in Zaire were killed by a group of Hutus militia living in the relief camp who had fled from Rwanda two years ago, according to an investigation by the religious order. The Hutus militias of the former Rwandan regime killed the Marist relief workers on Oct. 31 — not Nov. 7, as authorities of the religious order initially believed — to gain control of the camp where some 30,000 refugees were living, according to the report by the General House of the Marist Brothers in Rome.

World Bank Head Says Reducing Debt Key To Food Supply

ROME (CNS) — Reducing international debt, particularly in developing countries, is a key step to ensuring an adequate supply of nutrition around the globe, the head of the World Bank said Nov. 14. World Bank President James Wolfensohn said he agreed with Pope John Paul II's observation during his opening remarks at the World Food Summit that countries "bearing the sometimes stifling weight of international debt" cannot count on being able to feed all of their people. Recent Vatican documents have focused on the effects of debt on societies, and Pope John Paul has made debt forgiveness a central issue of social justice connected with the Great Jubilee of the Year 2000. The pope and Wolfensohn were featured speakers among the dozens of leaders of governments and international agencies who addressed the summit Nov. 13-17.

Local citizens reach for food at a distribution point Nov. 6 in Goma, Zaire. Relief agencies are in a better position to handle the current humanitarian crisis in Central Africa than they were when Rwanda's government was overthrown and much of the population fled widespread massacres two years ago, said representatives of those groups. But a more complex response is required than the planned United Nations-led military intervention and the delivery of emergency food or medical aid, said administrators of five relief agencies, including Catholic Relief Services. They spoke at a press conference in Washington Nov. 15, the same day hundreds of thousands of Rwandan refugees began to return home on foot from the Zairian refugee camps where they have spent the last two years.

Our Lady Of The Rosary

LEXINGTON — As a parish, Our Lady of the Rosary celebrates its 50th anniversary in 1996. But even before a house in Lexington was purchased for use as a mission church there, Catholics had settled in the Davidson County seat as early as 1917.

For more than 25 years, Lexington Catholics traveled to Salisbury for Mass. Eventually, however, they saw their attempts to have a mission established come to fruition. Charles Coira, a Catholic businessman, led the effort, and in January 1944 Father Thomas Colgan, pastor of St. Edward parish in High Point, began celebrating Mass in the Coira home.

The Lexington "church" remained a mission of St. Edward's until April of that year. From that point, Sacred Heart parish in Salisbury assumed its pastoral care.

In November 1946, at which time about 15 Catholics gathered for Mass in Lexington, a house was bought on the present site of Our Lady of the Rosary Church. The house was renovated for use as a chapel and rectory.

That development proved monumental for the town's Catholic population, small as it was. With the purchase of the house came parish status, and the congregation could then call itself the parish of Holy Rosary Church.

The Raleigh Diocese installed Father Edward Sullivan as the first resident pastor of the new parish. Catholic congregations in Asheboro, Thomasville and Mocksville were acknowledged as missions of Holy Rosary during the years following. In time, each of them became parishes in their own right.

In 1950, an African-American mission was formed in Lexington and staffed by clergy from Christ the King Church in High Point. The mission continued to celebrate Mass until 1954, when its congregation was brought into that of Holy Rosary.

Such mission work marked an enlarging Catholic population in North Carolina during the 1940s and '50s. Industrial expansion from the north was mainly responsible for the growth. By the mid-1950s, worship space in Lexington had become insufficient for the crowds.

Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh approved construction of a new church and rectory, and building was underway in September 1957. Bishop Waters dedicated the buildings in July 1958.

The parish comprised almost 50 families then, and steady growth ensued. Construction of a separate four-room rectory was completed in 1969; the former living quarters were converted into offices and a parish hall. A mobile unit was added to the church grounds in 1974 for use as a nursery and for meeting space.

In compliance with new liturgical standards, the church was modernized in 1977. Parking lots were added in the late 1970s and early 1980s. In 1981, the parish received a modification of a different kind: Its name was changed from Holy Rosary to Our Lady of the Rosary. A nearby building was also purchased that year, named Our Lady of the Rosary Center, and modified to include classrooms for religious education, a kitchen, and a parish hall.

To create more worship space, the church was again renovated in 1988.

Since its inception, the parish has been staffed with diocesan priests, although during the 1970s into the '80s, Oblates of St. Francis de Sales Fathers served the Lexington church.

Father Joseph Kelleher arrived at the parish in 1991. He calls the congregation a "generous" and "dedicated" one, which — in addition to a variety of parish activities and efforts — devotes time to an active Bible study program. The church family has come together each year for a quarter-century to celebrate its Christmas Bazaar, which builds camaraderie within the parish and features a plethora of crafts, food and amusements.

It was an evangelical spirit of faith that led those few Catholics to travel from Lexington to Salisbury for Mass during the first half of the century, and that same dedication exists today in the parish of Our Lady of the Rosary.

Asheville DRE Looks For Love, Spirit In Students

By PAUL FREDETTE
Correspondent

ASHEVILLE — The Catholic cradle of Mary Ann Poli's formative years was the ethnically Slovakian parish of Sts. Cyril and Methodius in Warren, Ohio. When she moved to Asheville in 1988, Poli brought with her an experience of faith nurtured by the parochial elementary school where she had taught for 12 years. In 1987

this small school with less than 200 students finally succumbed to consolidation—the fate of many parish schools in recent years. Despite the heartaches surrounding its closing, Poli believed enough in the value of Catholic education to continue her profession as a teacher at Asheville Catholic School.

Although she found graduate work at the Franciscan University of Stuebenville, Ohio, (where she obtained her MA in theology) a satisfying experience, Poli credits her undergraduate years at Villa Maria College (now Gannon University) in Erie, Pa., with providing her the environment of faith and freedom she needed to make life choices. "The Sisters of St. Joseph were very caring and fostered a close family-style community among the 500 women on campus at the time," she said.

For Poli, who has contended since infancy with disabilities resulting from polio, attending Villa Maria College was the realization of a long-held dream. "I was never able to attend our parochial school because it was not accessible to people with physical disabilities," she said. "My parents arranged for me to attend schools that were all on one level."

Poli looks back with admiration at the influence of the Sisters of St. Joseph upon the students. "Their presence was significant but surprisingly unintrusive. They allowed the young women to live their own lives," she said.

Poli graduated from Villa Maria convinced that Catholic schools could create this same kind of community without getting bogged down, like the public schools, in government regulations. She came to Asheville Catholic in 1988, with a wealth of teaching experience and critical appreciation for the educational tone that administrators can set in a school.

Her background stressed the notion that faith permeated the culture, but she began to observe a steadily increasing tendency — by teachers and administrators alike—to separate Catholicism from culture. "I first recognized this when I was asked to become a religion teacher. I found myself teaching all the religion classes," she said. "It was considered a specific subject like art or geography, not something that pervaded the life of the school as I had experienced at Sts. Cyril and Methodius."

She taught at Asheville Catholic for seven years, first as a teacher's aid, then as a full-time religion teacher. She eventually headed the religion department before deciding to leave in 1995. By then Poli's outlook on religious education had changed. "Although I made very good friends there, I realized I was growing in a different direction," she said. "I've come to believe strongly that some Catholic schools are having an identity crisis. They aren't sure whether to be religious schools that promote faith or private schools that provide an alternative to public education."

For the past year and a half, Poli has been settling into her new position as

The faith formation office of St. Vincent de Paul distributed 200 boxes parishwide, and will deliver the filled packages to Operation Christmas Child.

Cardinal Asked That Little Sisters Of Poor Get Memorials

CHICAGO (CNS) — It wasn't until the night Cardinal Bernardin died that the Little Sisters of the Poor learned he wanted any memorial gifts in his name given to them.

"We are filled with deep gratitude," said Sister Marcel McCanless, assistant administrator of the order's Helen Kellogg Center in Chicago, where the cardinal's mother, Maria, lives.

"He always shared his gifts with us. He frequently sent over flowers, cookies, cakes — he was so generous," Sister McCanless said.

Mrs. Bernardin, now 92, has lived with the Little Sisters of the Poor since 1982, when Cardinal Bernardin was named archbishop of Chicago. But the order's ministry in the Chicago area goes back more than 120 years.

The Little Sisters of the Poor are a mendicant order founded in 1839 in France by Jeanne Jugan, who was beatified in 1981. "Blessed Jeanne instructed us to show tenderness, love and the compassion of Christ to the aged poor," Sister McCanless said.

Today about 3,500 members carry on that ministry on five continents in 200 residences, serving nearly 23,000 elderly men and women.

"The cardinal came here every day before his illness," Sister McCanless said. "He was 'Father Joseph' when he was here. The door was always open when he was visiting with his mother. He was part of our family."

Sister Beatrice Scully in Palatine, where the sisters also have their provincial house, said the congregation has made no immediate decision on how gifts in the cardinal's name will be used, but the donations will probably help "put bread on the table, pay the bills, keep the lights on."

"As a mendicant order, we go out and beg for food and donations," she said. Every day members of the order go out to South Water Market in Chicago to collect donations of produce. Other food is brought to their door by donors.

Sister Scully said that since it serves the needy elderly, the congregation always faces administrative costs. "Since Medicare and Social Security for our residents only cover about 54 percent of our expenses, we depend upon God's goodness for the rest," she said.

Memorial gifts in Cardinal Bernardin's name can be sent to: Little Sisters of the Poor, 2325 N. Lakewood Ave., Chicago, IL 60614

Director of Religious Education at St. Joan of Arc Church in west Asheville. She finds it refreshing to have more control over presentations that are not limited by class periods and to stimulate growth not measured by grades. It has been freeing, she says, to deal with only one pastor, (not six) when planning the liturgical celebrations she believes are so important.

Since her work encompasses the coordination and oversight of all levels of formation from RCIA to children's sacramental preparation, Poli has not been spared the more taxing aspects of transmitting religious values. Despite frustrations, she has developed a strong determination not to let anybody go unloved. The "problem kids" in the school have become her "special kids" and she is energized by the conviction that "we can all discover a loveableness in one another."

Mother Teresa Consents To Cardiac Procedure, Moved To Heart Clinic

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa agreed to undergo an angiogram to help doctors determine if angioplasty was necessary and was moved to an Indian heart clinic Nov. 26.

As she was carried from Woodlands Nursing Home on a stretcher, eyes shut and arms folded, a silent crowd of some 200 people — including nuns from her Missionaries of Charity — stood watching.

Mother Teresa was taken by ambulance to B.M. Birla Heart Research Center, accompanied by a doctor, a nurse and four nuns.

"Generally she is all right," said the heart clinic administrator, A.K. Chatterjee. "She has been placed in the critical care unit where all heart support arrangements are available."

In a medical bulletin, Woodlands Nursing Home stated that the angiogram results would reveal if angioplasty were necessary.

Chatterjee said doctors were to determine the date of the angiogram, which was likely to occur Nov. 27.

"When she agreed, we decided to do it quickly unless she might change her decision," said Dr. Sudipto Kumar Sen, medical director of Woodlands Nursing Home. Sen said Nov. 25 that the 86-year-old nun had been reluctant to consent to any invasive procedure.

Mother Teresa underwent angioplasty at the Birla clinic in 1993 and at the Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation in California in 1991. She was fitted with a pacemaker in 1989.

An angiogram involves inserting a catheter and injecting a radiopaque substance into the blood vessels to help take X-ray images and show any blockage. Angioplasty repairs damaged blood vessels using a tiny inflatable balloon.

The Missionaries of Charity founder and Nobel laureate was admitted to Woodlands Nursing Home early Nov. 22 with acute left ventricular heart failure.

She was released from the same hospital Sept. 25 after a 10-day stay recovering from a head injury suffered in a fall from a chair at the order's motherhouse. Upon her release, physicians expressed concern about her persistent irregular heartbeat.

She was hospitalized Aug. 18 to Sept. 6 for cardiac problems, malaria and a lung infection.

In a ceremony in Calcutta led by U.S. Ambassador to India Frank Wisner Nov. 16, she received honorary U.S. citizenship, one of only five people in U.S. history to receive the distinction.

For All They Did, And Still Do The Collection For Retired Religious Dec. 7-8

November 19, 1996

Dear Friends in Christ:

The national collection for the Retirement Fund for Religious will be taken up in the parishes of our Diocese on the weekend of December 7-8, 1996. This year's theme is "They Shaped Lives and They Still Do."

We are becoming more aware of the retirement crisis faced by elderly sisters, order priests and brothers, who once served in our institutions. Many of these congregations do not have enough money to pay for the care of their retired elderly members, largely because there are fewer wage-earning members in the communities today. Some people who benefited from the dedicated service of our now retired religious are unaware that most religious congregations in this country are in financial need.

Many of the religious communities have embarked on efforts to cut costs and raise additional moneys to meet expenses. They have sold property, converted existing structures to maintain them more economically, and developed joint, intercommunity efforts for cost-efficient care of their elderly members.

We hope you will be mindful of this great need and that you will respond generously.

Please be assured that the retired religious who benefit from these funds pray daily for their benefactors. Your generosity on their behalf is not forgotten.

Wishing you and yours God's abundant blessings, I am

Sincerely in Christ,

Very Reverend Mauricio W. West, V.G.
Chancellor

Holtz Resignation Brings Disappointment, Confusion

By JOHN DEBOY

NOTRE DAME, Ind. (CNS) — For many, the announced resignation of University of Notre Dame football coach Lou Holtz was a shocking disappointment.

For others, the news brought with it confusion and some unanswered questions. And for a small minority, it marked a welcome end to the most recent chapter in the storied history of Notre Dame football. But despite differing opinions, students, administrators and athletes seemed to agree the program won't be the same.

At a televised press conference Nov. 19, Holtz — winner of more football games at Notre Dame than any Fighting Irish coach other than Knute Rockne — announced his resignation, effective at the end of the 1996 season.

With nearly 11 seasons and one national championship under his belt as Irish head coach, Holtz simply said that the time was right for a change.

"I cannot honestly give you a reason for my resignation, except to say I feel it is the right thing to do," said Holtz, who is 59. "People will say there has to be more to it than this, but believe me, there isn't."

Holtz's announcement sparked an outpouring of reactions among students on campus.

Freshman Pat McCusker was impressed with the way Holtz handled himself during the announcement.

"It's very respectable how he talks about the university," McCusker said. "It shows he's a real classy guy. It's one aspect we're going to miss. That dimension is going to be hard to be without."

Junior Julie Lyzinski said that the entire campus nearly stood still when the announcement was made.

"You would have thought the president had just died," said Lyzinski, who watched the press conference from the student center.

"It was amazing. The place was packed and there wasn't a sound. It's like the end of a tradition," Lyzinski continued. "I'm glad to have experienced Lou."

While several students expressed sadness at the thought of Holtz's upcoming departure, many among them felt that the coach's decision to leave was the right one.

"Holtz's resignation obviously marks the end of an era," said senior Damian Guevara. "But it will be exciting to see who succeeds him. This program needs a fresh start."

Members of the Notre Dame administration praised the coach for his on-the-field achievements as well as his contributions to the Notre Dame community.

"Lou Holtz's record on the field speaks for itself; despite his demurs to the contrary, he has joined the pantheon of Notre Dame coaching greats," said Father E. William Beauchamp, Notre Dame's executive vice president.

"More importantly," Father Beauchamp added, "in his faith, in his family life and his commitment to the ideals to which Notre Dame aspires, Lou Holtz has been an able and admirable representative of the university to a vast public audience."

The football players were predictably surprised and saddened when Holtz informed them of his decision.

"I'm just kind of taken aback by all this," said senior tailback Robert Farmer. "It was just kind of upsetting to hear that Coach Holtz was going to resign."

But while most players said that they were disappointed to see Holtz go, the majority appeared supportive of their coach's decision.

"I do believe that, knowing the man for five years, anything he does is well thought out," said senior tight end Pete Chryplewicz. "Anything he does is a smart decision on his part. As hard as it may seem, I think he knows what's best for Notre Dame and himself, and that's the course of action he took."

During the press conference, Holtz,

"I'd be walking across campus, I'd be walking to church and someone would say, 'Hi, coach.' ... To the Notre Dame family, I can't say anything but 'I've been blessed.'"

a Catholic, reflected on the pride he has enjoyed while serving as a representative of one of the world's premier Catholic universities.

"I will always cherish the fact that I had the opportunity to be a representative of Our Lady's school, both on and off the field," Holtz said. "To a Catholic such as myself, no man could ask for a more important role in life."

Just days after Holtz announced his resignation, the Fighting Irish Nov. 23 rolled to a 62-0 blowout home victory over Rutgers, a resounding triumph that gave Holtz his 100th win as head coach at Notre Dame — leaving him just five victories short of Knute Rockne's record.

According to many on the football team, by defeating Rutgers — the last home game of the 1996 season — the players were thanking their coach for 11 years of service to the university and the football program.

"Coach wouldn't let us make this into a victory lap for him," said quarterback Ron Powlus. "But we wanted him to go out in style. We went out hard in the first half, then the second half was a victory lap."

Throughout the game, chants of "Lou, Lou" reverberated throughout Notre Dame Stadium, and numerous students and fans held up signs which read, "Thank You, Lou" and "We Love Lou." Afterward, Holtz addressed the student body from the field.

"You have no idea how much you mean to me. How much you supported me. How you lifted me up when I was down, when I was depressed," Holtz said to the students. "I'd be walking across campus, I'd be walking to church and someone would say, 'Hi, coach.' ... To the Notre Dame family, I can't say anything but 'I've been blessed.'"

Holtz, who will be succeeded by defensive coordinator Bob Davie, has indicated that he has not ruled out the possibility of assuming leadership of another football team in the near future.

"I just have to see what I can do, and what I want to do, and what options are available to me," he said. "One thing is certain: I am a natural-born teacher. It's something I enjoy and it's something that comes easy to me. And I miss a relationship with the players already and it hasn't even started."

But Holtz said his most important priorities were to help his 8-2 team finish the 1996 season successfully — the Irish were scheduled to play at the University of Southern California Nov. 30 — and to aid Davie in making a smooth transition to the head coaching position.

Holtz indicated that despite the sadness he feels in leaving Notre Dame, he believes he made the right decision.

"In closing, I thank the University of Notre Dame, the players, the coaches, the clergy, students, faculty, fans, subway alumni and others for their support — but more emphatically, for their prayers. They can rest assured God answered them," he said Nov. 19.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Jesus' Early Life With Mary Shows Principles Of Faith, Pope Says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Gospel accounts of Jesus' early life and his relationship with the Virgin Mary help people to understand the principles of the faith, Pope John Paul II said.

"In every age, those who wish to meet Jesus must find him with his mother," the pope told pilgrims from around the world at his weekly general audience Nov. 20.

"In the account of the birth of Jesus, the evangelist Luke reports some facts that help us better to comprehend the meaning of the event," Pope John Paul said. "Informing us of the circumstances in which the voyage and the departure (from Nazareth to Bethlehem) take place, the evangelist presents a situation of discomfort and of poverty that provides a glimpse of some of the fundamental characteristics of the messianic reign, a reign without earthly honors and power."

The pope said Luke's account of Mary and Joseph being turned away from the inn affirmed the observation made in the Gospel of John that Jesus "came to what was his own, but his own people did not accept him."

The fact that there was no room for his mother at the inn "foreshadowed the numerous refusals that Jesus was to undergo in his earthly life," and showed "how Mary was already associated with the destiny of suffering of her son."

The pope said the significance of Mary and Jesus was also underscored in Luke's description of the shepherds who set out for Bethlehem to experience the "great joy that will be for all the people," and encourtered "Mary and Joseph, and the infant lying in the manger."

"In the face of these extraordinary events, Luke tells us that Mary 'kept all these things, reflecting on them in her heart,'" the pope said, adding that this description calls to mind "another mother, the church," which throughout time offers renewed impetus for theological reflection.

Pope Urges International Community To Honor Pledge To Aid Refugees

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II urged governments and church organizations not to falter in their commitments to help the starving refugee population in eastern Zaire.

The pope made his remarks during a general audience Nov. 20.

Governments, which a few days before had pledged participation in a multinational humanitarian aid effort to the region, were at the time reconsidering their pledges in light of changed circumstances: Most of the Rwandan refugees were returning home and it appeared that they would need less assistance than was originally predicted.

"Such a re-entry, which hopefully concludes another sad chapter of the country's history, nevertheless demands immediate and wide-ranging measures," the pope said.

Father Catoir's Comments Ignore Moral Crisis In Church

To The Editor,

This is in regard to "Spirituality for Today" by Father John Catoir (Nov. 8 issue). For the second time Father Catoir has given evidence that he is unaware of or ignoring the moral crisis in our society and the disheartening apostasy within the Catholic Church. His argument is that the debate within the Church concerns pastoral practices, not deviations from doctrine. This could not be further from the truth.

Over the last 10 years national polls have found that only about 30 percent of those who call themselves Catholics believe in the real presence of Jesus in the Holy Eucharist. In our own diocese, many are resisting the authority of the Holy Father and don't believe he is infallible in matters of faith and morals. Interpretations of the Bible by the magisterium are being questioned seriously. Devotion to the Blessed Mother is being "controlled." Pro-choice Catholics probably outnumber pro-life Catholics in our own diocese. It was Catholic senators who prevented the veto of the partial-birth abortion ban from being overturned.

The meaning of being Catholic is being turned on its head. It's time we took a stand on who can call themselves Catholics. If we continue to be timid about confronting apostasy, we risk losing the deposit of faith handed on to us by Christ's apostles.

Pray The Rosary To End Abortion

To The Editor,

On the feast of the Immaculate Conception, let's ask our Lady of Guadalupe, patroness of the pro-life movement, to intercede for all unborn babies and help bring an end to abortion.

I ask that all families and households in the Diocese of Charlotte pray the five Joyful Mysteries of the Holy Rosary on Sunday, Dec. 8 at 3 p.m., the hour of mercy.

Let us all pray for the intention of bringing an end to abortion, which kills 4,400 babies every day, and for all unwanted unborn babies; let us pray their mothers would allow them to live.

If we all unite our prayers into one big offering, Our Lady of Guadalupe will do the rest.

And remember, the family that prays together stays together.

Looking Forward To Parish Profiles

To The Editor,

Congratulations on your series "Parish Profiles" and for including a picture of the pastor of the church profiled. I look forward to reading them in The Catholic News & Herald each week.

We visit Asheville fairly often because my husband was born there. I had seen the beautiful Basilica of St. Lawrence but did not know it was a Catholic church. Also, I wondered what happened to Msgr. John McSweeney. Now I know.

Then I saw Father Aloysius D'Silva is now at St. Lucien. I haven't kept track of Father John Pagel, and I was pleased to read about both of them.

We attended Father Carl Del Giudice's first Mass at Our Lady of Consolation Church. Now we meet him again.

Thank you for all this Good News. I truly think we do not appreciate our priests enough. This newspaper series is one good step toward honoring them.

Father Thomas J. McSweeney

A Real Taste Of Thanksgiving

While the Thanksgiving Day observance may not change our circumstances, the Thanksgiving state of mind can change what circumstances do to us.

An elderly woman bowed her head and said, "Thank You, Lord, for these vittles." Someone overheard and asked, "Lady, what are vittles?" "This little bit of food I've got here in front of me," she said. "You are going to have that food to eat whether you thank God for it or not," she was told.

"Well, perhaps so," the woman replied, smiling, "but everything tastes better when I'm thankful."

A simple statement, but one we forget, as did the children of Israel on their way to the Promised Land. God promised to provide for them and He did, leaving fresh bread from His "heavenly bakery" every morning on the ground. For forty years, they were humbly grateful, when one morning, they began to grumble. "Manna, again?!!!" they complained. The miracle they received every day was no longer satisfying. Once the spirit of thanksgiving gives way to ungratefulness and one begins to take things for granted, things "taste" different.

It was on Thanksgiving Day in the McSweeney home some years ago when my family gathered about the dining room table to feast on all the goodies my mom had prepared. The privilege of praying grace before the meal went to my eldest niece.

She marched through the words in the routine manner that all of us had more or less been accustomed to: "Bless us, O Lord, and these Thy gifts which we are about to receive from Thy bounty, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen." The standard quick blessing accomplished, several hands hastily went for the bread basket.

But before anyone could say, "Pass the butter," my youngest niece, then eight years old, blurted out: "I want to say grace again!" We all looked blankly at each other. Her dad asked her, "Why?" Without losing a beat, she said: "Because Kelly said it with her lips, and I want to say it with my heart!"

Out of the mouths of babes!

Actually, my niece's observation brought several things to mind when it comes to the way we give thanks. Those of us who have come to treat the abundance of the earth as only so much more Manna probably take for granted God's caring presence in all the other areas of our lives. If Thanksgiving is only so much lip service, how can anyone truly become a caring presence in the lives of others?

My prayer with you is that each of us will give each other permission to speak from the heart this Thanksgiving. Let us give thanks for the bread of sustenance that is shared with those less fortunate, for the bread of understanding that brings peace to fractured families and nations, for the bread of deep friendship between husband and wife, for the bread of companionship for those who are lonely, for the bread of forgiveness for those that hurt us, for the bread of reconciliation for those we have hurt.

If you and I let our hearts do the praying this Thanksgiving, we will experience the presence of God in the daily bread of our lives. And suddenly everything will begin to taste better.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Non-Catholic Godparents

Q. Must a child have godparents who are practicing Catholics for the child to be baptized into the Catholic faith? My husband and I have four children, are regular churchgoers and see to the religious upbringing of our children.

Three children are already baptized, and I receive varied answers at every baptism. The youngest is now to be baptized.

Of the six Catholic godparents in our family, three are divorced, only one still attends Mass regularly and none plays an active role in our children's religious life.

It might be better to have a good Christian with good morals than to choose people solely because today they are practicing Catholics. How does the Church truly feel about this?

A. Let's look first at Catholic policy about baptism sponsors. It's quite clear, in theory at least, so I don't understand why you should be receiving different answers.

At least one of the sponsors at baptism should be a practicing Catholic, who is baptized, confirmed and is receiving the Eucharist. A second "Christian witness" may be a baptized Christian of another denomination.

These regulations are found in canon law (874), in the Introduction to the Rite of Baptism and in the Church's 1993 norms for ecumenism (98).

To me and probably to you, these policies make sound sense. The sacrament of baptism is not merely a social formality, but a solemn initiation into the Catholic community of believing Christians.

Parents and godparents promise they will not leave their son or daughter spiritually hanging alone in the cold. They will model their faith for the child as it grows, not only by being "good people," but by living out the prayer and sacramental life of the Catholic faith.

They also commit the child to assume, in time and with their guidance, his or her personal responsibility to live that faith as a member of the Catholic community.

That said, I have two suggestions. By these policies the Catholic Church agrees with you that a committed, loving Christian of another faith can be an invaluable support and help to the Catholic parents and godparent in the Christian upbringing of the child.

If you know someone like this, which you apparently do, explore that option.

Second, you might examine the qualifications you look for in your choice of godparents.

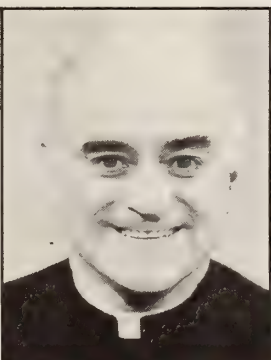

Having baptism sponsors who fail their responsibilities is not uncommon. But your experience is uncommon, with all six godparents seriously abandoning their commitment to your children one way or another.

Is it possible you look more at friendship and relationships, the desire to make someone happy, than at their

Spirituality For Today

Father John Catoir

Parental Love Under Challenging Circumstances

You may remember a column of mine a few weeks ago when I shared the letter of a mother who rejected her lesbian daughter. I argued gently that Christian love will find a way to love the person in spite of his or her moral situation.

It seems to me that once you've made your position clear on the moral issue, you've done your duty and expressed your conscience. After that there is a more important value to deal with; namely, parental love. It would be terrible to reject your own flesh and blood when with a little patience and understanding you might be able to keep the relationship alive.

The word "agape" refers to Christian love. Jesus loved sinners. He died for them, and said, "Love one another as I have loved you." This admonition cannot be taken lightly.

After I told that mother to love her daughter and not despise her, she replied in these words:

"I said some hateful things to my daughter. She didn't speak to me for three weeks. Your letter came and offered me hope and a way to find some peace. My daughter came over the next night, and we had a long heart-to-heart talk.

"I told her how very sorry I was for my mouth. She told me she was sorry too. I told her I would put aside my feelings about her being a lesbian. She told me how much she loves me and wants me to be her mom, which I very much needed to hear. I thank you deeply for your kindness, sincerity and deep faith in our Lord. I will always cherish your words."

I asked for permission to share the above excerpt with you, and she replied: "Yes. I'm very glad you got my message about the love and peace I feel now. Having Jesus in my life in this way is all that keeps me going. You filled my hurting soul with words of love and wisdom. For this I thank you once again."

Her letter warmed my heart. The reason I am sharing it with you is to point out that the fruits of the Holy Spirit are love, peace and joy. Jesus once said, "By their fruits you shall know them." The fruits of the evil one are hatred, rejection, self-righteousness, isolation and misery. Whenever I see good fruit flowing from my words, I know I'm on the side of the angels.

"Agape" is a term which speaks of the benevolent, disinterested, unselfish love of God. It is the very opposite of hatred.

With "agape," God's love in us, we are free to love everyone. Jesus even encouraged us to love our enemies. Since this is true, surely we can love our own sons and daughters, brothers and sisters, friends and neighbors, even if we disagree with them. Live and let live.

"Judge not and you will not be judged."

Stewardship <sup>Q & A</sup>

Why give thanks?

We humans are arrogant cusses. Our vocabulary is full of phrases of self-praise. You've heard them: "He's a self-made man." "She pulled herself up by her own bootstraps." "Everything they've got, they earned."

To hear us talk, you'd think we might spend this Thanksgiving season patting ourselves on the back.

Individual initiative and determination do play a large role in human life. But we tend to exaggerate. A self-made man? Hardly; we all work with materials given us by birth and circumstances. And try pulling on your bootstraps. All you'll get is a sore back and, if you pull hard enough, broken bootstraps.

It is true, we do best if we do our best. But that is only the beginning of the story. Our own efforts did not enable us to be born in this land of opportunity. The way we take care of ourselves and others has a great impact on whether we live healthy and happy lives, but we have hardly any control over whether illness or accident will hit us or our loved ones. Our own inner resources have a lot to do with how we deal with adversity, but little to do with whether we will experience it.

So on this Thanksgiving Day, as all days, it is worth taking a few moments to think about things that we have no control over that make our lives worth living. Whether you thank God or good fortune, you know that much of what you value most in life you have not earned. It is a gift. Once we understand the importance of the gifts we have received, we are able to see the importance of gifts we give—to family and friends, of course, but also to fellow human beings less generously blessed by birth and circumstance, and to future generations. The best way to give thanks for the priceless gifts we have received is to give generously in return.

Knights Operation Exodus Effort Continues To Broaden Horizons

By STEVE UZZELL

MATTHEWS — Since 1992, Knights of Columbus councils in Mecklenburg County have served the community through Operation Exodus, a non-profit effort through which countless hours have been logged and dozens of projects have been completed for the physically disabled.

With assistance from the Independent Living Rehabilitation Program of Charlotte, which locates and qualifies needy clients, the Knights councils have extended their ministry to diocesan and state levels.

Knights of Columbus Council 7343 of Matthews recently completed an Operation Exodus project for Thomas Rorie, who was paralyzed in a 1989 auto accident.

"We visited Thomas and asked what his needs were," said Bill Hamm, council coordinator. "Then we presented the project plans to the council."

"It certainly fit into our category of needs, based on his available resources and means to accomplish the task," he added. "We approved the project and funded the money for materials."

With funds set aside for use in projects not covered by the Independent Living program, the council reconstructed the interior of Rorie's home to include a sliding glass door. The result gives Rorie more space to maneuver his wheelchair and provides greater visibility to the outdoors.

"It's twice as wide, twice the view, twice the light and twice the enjoyment," said Rorie of the addition. A songwriter and musician, he added that the project has been wonderful for his creative spirit.

"It makes a difference in the way you feel, what you see. Visual things help the creative juices start to flow," he said.

Although his accident left him paralyzed from the shoulders down, Rorie is an indomitable fighter who has turned to music with hope and purpose. He founded One Call Ministries, through which he — along with musician Randy Jenkins — performs as a determined witness to others. He is planning a pre-Christmas benefit concert at Ovens Auditorium in Charlotte.

Rorie praised the Knights and volunteers who offered their time to the project. "I'm very blessed to be here," he said of the fortunate things that have come his way. "A multitude of things will point to glorifying God."

L'Osservatore Editor Says Evolution Text Had Discrepancy

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The English-language edition of the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano, has pointed out a discrepancy in its translation of a message by Pope John Paul II on evolution.

In his message to the Pontifical Academy of Sciences Oct. 23, the pope said that over the last 50 years, new knowledge has emerged that shows the theory of evolution to be "more than a hypothesis." His point was that evolution was now accepted by a wide range of scientific disciplines doing independent research.

In the English-language L'Osservatore, however, the pope's sentence was translated as meaning that new knowledge has "led to the recognition of more than one hypothesis in the theory of evolution."

U.S. Father Robert Dempsey, editor of the English-language L'Osservatore, said Nov. 19 that the newspaper had published an overly literal translation of the French-language message that "obscures the real meaning of the text."

The pope's real meaning, he said, was that it is now possible to recognize that the theory of evolution is more than a hypothesis.

This was also the meaning provided in the official Italian translation, published Oct. 23 by the daily L'Osservatore Romano.

Waugh Carries On CDA Tradition

ASHEVILLE — Members of Asheville Court 412 of the Catholic Daughters of America were happy to recently learn that Iris Waugh agreed to host another spaghetti supper for the group (her last, she says). Waugh (pictured) is chairman of the Court's Ways and Means Committee, and her annual dinners have been the organization's principal fund raiser and social event. Many Basilica of St. Lawrence parishioners and community members enjoy the meal and fellowship. She is also a member of the basilica's choir. A native of Jamaica, Waugh has lived in Asheville for 29 years.

Room At The Inn: A radiance amid the ruins

The success of Good Counsel Homes in New York and New Jersey led several North Carolinians to start Room At The Inn off South Boulevard in Charlotte almost two years ago.

by Tom Ashcraft

The harvest of 40 years of sexual revolution, helped along by a welfare state which rewards irresponsibility, has come in. It is not a pretty sight.

The statistics on illegitimacy, abortion, child abuse, domestic violence and teenage suicide present a bleak abstract of contemporary life in the U.S. The individual stories known to or lived by, each of us, however, convey the real extent of human tragedy; the pain has piled up.

Out of this welter of social and personal disintegration, a light shines nonetheless. Groups of Christians, bristling at the cheapening of human life by legal abortion, have joined together to serve single mothers and their endangered children. "Baby saving" and "mother saving" homes have sprung up around the country. While the politicians fiddle, these pro-lifers act.

The success of Good Counsel Homes in New York and New Jersey led several North Carolinians to start Room At The Inn off South Boulevard in Charlotte almost two years ago. It's been a struggle, but they're now operating on a budget of $220,000 a year and doing some amazing things to help young women and their babies.

Room At The Inn does not shy away from its religious mission. Its motto is "Making Christ present to single, pregnant mothers and babies in need." Although this group home is open to women irrespective of faith, the accoutrements are plainly Catholic.

On the second floor there is a chapel where the Blessed Sacrament is reserved, and Saint Joseph is the inn's patron saint. Morning and night prayers are mandatory. Volunteers from the Knights of Columbus maintain the grounds. The women must attend church on Sunday, but which one is up to them.

The purpose of Room At The Inn is to help mothers carry their unborn children to term. After birth, whether to opt for adoption is up to the woman. If the woman keeps the child she may continue to stay at the Inn with her baby for a year. This after-birth care for mother and children distinguishes the Inn from ordinary maternity homes.

Both pre- and post-birth, the new mothers are taught how to be responsible for themselves and their children. During the day, they must be either in school or at a job. Sitting around watching soap operas or talk shows is not an option. If they already have a child, the Inn provides day-care services. On Tuesday nights, classes are offered in parenting, budgeting, nutrition and chastity.

Room At The Inn has a curfew of 6 p.m. on weekdays, 11:00 p.m. on weekends. If a mother has a court order requiring the father to support the child, she may date that man. Otherwise, dating is out. As explained by executive director Albert Hodges, the idea is that a woman's first priority is to change her life and learn responsibility - dating is for later after this lesson is learned.

No one is turned away for lack of funds, but any income earned while living there is divided three ways: one-third to the ministry, one-third to the woman's savings account, and one-third for her personal needs. Currently there are six mothers in residence, three of whom are with child, and five born children.

Hodges has been accused of running a tight ship and pleads guilty. There are only two constants in life, he says: one's personal accomplishments and Jesus Christ. The Inn takes no government money, and he calls welfare "economic slavery" for those who stay on it. His goal is that every mother will give birth to her baby and leave able to support herself and her offspring. Moreover, he hopes that she gains a love of Christ.

Among the Inn's many stories,

Martha's (not her real name) is typical. Astonished to find herself pregnant at age 18 and just out of high school, she turned to her mother who advocated abortion as the "easy way out." The father of the baby offered no support at all. Rejecting abortion after a first stop at an abortion clinic, Martha found Room At The Inn. They took her in and gave her love and support. She gave birth to a baby girl. Later the Inn's staff continued to help through some serious surgery for the baby.

"Room At The Inn has given me the strength and the hope to carry on and be successful as a mother and as a person," Martha says. "I thank God for allowing me to see my daughter live and grow." The light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not.

Elizabeth's Story

(used with permission)

When I found out that I was pregnant again, I was devastated. My son, Nicholas, was already one year old and we had just been evicted from our home. My baby's father was long gone. I was afraid for our future.

We spent a while moving about from friend to friend, even staying at a homeless shelter. There were no homes anywhere in the Carolinas for single, pregnant women who already had a child. Just when I had nowhere to turn, God led me to Room At The Inn.

Room At The Inn not only gave me a warm house to live in, good food to eat, and clothing for my kids and me, I also found true friends and the love of Christ. They picked me up and caressed my heart whenever I needed it and made me face reality whenever I needed that, too.

Today, thanks to Room At The Inn, I am a working brick mason and am supporting my family off welfare. I love my job! I am excited about my life and what it has in store for me and my children.

Most importantly, Room At The Inn encouraged my relationship with Jesus. Today, I am an active member of my church and enjoy the peace that comes from knowing Christ. I'm also committed to wait to have sex until after I'm married.

Things are so different for Nick, Anni and me, thanks to Room At The Inn. We have been shown God's mercy through this ministry. What would have happened to us without them?

Jennifer's Story

(used with permission)

Coming from a large Catholic family, I never thought that abortion would be an option in my life. But, once I found out that I was pregnant, abortion kept rearing its ugly head as an easy choice for me. I had just been offered a job working for the president of a New York modeling agency and having a baby would end all of that.

But God is good and sent a dear Christian friend, Megan, who reminded me that "God orders all things mightily". With His help and her friendship, God made a place for me at Room At The Inn.

Once at Room At The Inn, they hooked me up with Catholic Social Services who handled my adoption. Throughout the whole process I was given the emotional support I needed to make my decision. I chose to place my son for adoption. I will never forget the look in the eyes of the parents who adopted my child when I presented him to them in a private ceremony— at my special request — at Saint Patrick's. Even though it was hard at the time, I never doubted my decision, and I know that I will never regret it.

My spiritual life took on a whole new meaning while I was at Room At The Inn. Jesus has become more real, and I know that He is always there for me to lean on. Look at all He has done for me!

Martha's Story

(used with permission)

I couldn't believe my ears when the doctor told me that he couldn't finish the abortion because my baby was too far along. I was almost 6 months pregnant and I didn't know what to do. The clinic staff made an appointment for me at a clinic in another state and I left.

My mother told me that I had to get an abortion or leave home. She was a single mother all of her life and didn't want me to go through that. My baby's father refused to help. I wanted to keep my baby, but no one would help me.

Fortunately, the local crisis pregnancy center told me about Room At The Inn and I moved in. They gave me a home to live in, home cooked meals, and baby items. Most of all, they loved me and gave me support during the lonely times and whenever I felt abandoned.

Halli was born a little early and with breathing problems. We spent 6 weeks in the hospital, and they gave me the support I needed to get through this troublesome time. After we came home, the staff went through special training so that they could help me feed and care for my daughter.

Today, I'm so glad that I didn't follow through with my abortion. Halli is almost 8 months old and is doing very well. My mother is now proud of her granddaughter and is a big help to me. Halli and I could never have made it without Room At The Inn. I thank God for them everyday and for all they did for me while I was there.

Room At The Inn ... Giving Life a Chance!

What is Room At The Inn?

Our mission of helping single, pregnant women is not an easy one. Many of the mothers who find Room At The Inn arrive broken in heart and in spirit - often rejected by their families and the fathers of their babies.

Room At The Inn is a unique, comprehensive program helping single, pregnant women with or without previous children to have a safe and healthy pregnancy and delivery and to return to school or work after the birth of their child.

We provide housing, food, clothing, counseling and love in a structured environment. Transportation to the hospital, medical and social service appointments, and to work and school is provided. Training in parenting, nutrition, budgeting, chastity and job skills is offered in our home as well.

Child care is provided to allow our moms to finish their education or to return to work.

All medical appointments, medications and immunizations are tracked and supervised.

Room At The Inn is a place where young mothers learn to become responsible for themselves and their children. All of our mothers do the cooking and cleaning in the home. Each resident contributes to the upkeep of the home to the extent that she is able.

While at Room At The Inn, all residents work to pay back past creditors and to restore their credit rating and good name. Our moms explore careers in fields that will enable them to support themselves without welfare. We provide the support and love that they need to make the transition to a life filled with hope and opportunities.

Offering homeless, single women facing crisis pregnancies and their children a new start is what Room At The Inn is all about.

Advent, 1996

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

It was only two short years ago that we opened our doors and took in our first young mother, a fifteen year old who was six months pregnant and alone.

Since then we have seen the birth of dozens of babies and heard the joy of children's laughter throughout our home. Children really do make the world a happier place.

Looking back, it is amazing to me to see all that God will do when people say yes to Him: young women facing up to their responsibilities as new mothers and mustering up the courage to change old ways of behavior; staff members and volunteers who daily experience the difficulties and demands of residents who come to us so wounded; and finally, the people of God who reach out and make Christ present to these forgotten ones - the least of His brethren.

This year has also been a challenging year for us financially. We struggle daily to pay our bills and to keep our doors open and food on our table. We do not receive money from any level of government. Yet, because we place our trust in God's good providence, we stay open.

This Advent, would you help us? We rely on the generosity of God's people and your support truly makes a difference in the lives of single, pregnant women and their children. An envelope is enclosed in this newspaper for your convenience.

Room At The Inn is a story of joy and love. But, it is also a story of struggle and hardships. Just like that night two thousand years ago when another Baby was born. Please keep us in your prayers as we remember His birth and may He bless you for your kindness and concern as you join us in making Room At The Inn.

Sincerely Yours in Christ,

Sling Blade

Thornton Writes, Directs, Stars In Drama Worth Watching

NEW YORK (CNS) — The world of a mentally retarded man is portrayed in the challenging drama, "Sling Blade" (Miramax).

The story is about Karl Childers (Billy Bob Thornton) and what happens to him after his release from the asylum to which he had been committed as a boy for murdering his mother and her lover.

The movie's ominous title refers to the sickle-like instrument he used as the murder weapon.

Released and completely on his own, Karl returns to his Southern hometown, gets a job repairing small engines and lives in a shed behind the store.

When he helps young Frank Wheatley (Lucas Black) lug some heavy bags, the boy becomes his friend and introduces him to his widowed mom, Linda (Natalie Canerday), and soon she invites Carl to live in the shack behind their house.

Karl not only has a job where he is appreciated but now feels part of a family for the first time in his life.

Linda's construction-worker boyfriend, Doyle Hargreaves (Dwight Yoakam), makes Karl's life miserable.

Worse, Doyle is physically abusive to Linda and Frank when he gets drunk and Karl comes to fear for their safety.

By this time, it is fairly obvious where the story is going and how Karl will protect his friends, but the ending is no less powerful for that.

Also written and directed by Thornton, the movie is worth watching for its gentle depiction of a man with limited intelligence but an abundance of good will.

Thornton's performance as Karl is entirely sympathetic, warmly convincing and yet tinged with an element of unpredictability in his reaction to things.

Most of the people Karl meets are decent folk who accept him despite occasional misunderstandings.

The one who seems to understand Karl's problems the best is Linda's friend, Vaughan Cunningham (John Ritter), a homosexual trying to escape notice in a Bible Belt community.

The heavies in the piece are the insufferable Doyle and Karl's drunken father (Robert Duvall), who refuses to have anything to do with his son.

Though the plot becomes increasingly contrived in arriving at its dark conclusion, one is left with a keen awareness of Karl's potential to contribute to the community instead of being locked away from it.

Because of some chilling off-screen violence, alcohol abuse and occasional rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Against All Flags" (1952)

Colorful swashbuckler in which an English sea captain (Errol Flynn) joins a pirate crew in order to enter their impregnable island fortress, then destroy it. Directed by George Sherman, the formula plot focuses on the hero's problems with a suspicious buccaneer (Anthony Quinn), a lovely pirate captain (Maureen O'Hara) and the Grand Mogul's captured daughter. Stylized violence and romantic situations. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"All the Brothers Were Valiant" (1953)

Middling 19th-century sea yarn about the captain of a New England whaler (Robert Taylor) who finds his missing brother (Stewart Granger) in the South Seas, then has to keep him from seizing the ship to search for a fortune in pearls. Directed by Richard Thorpe, the adventure combines the themes of greed and sibling rivalry with more talk than action. Stylized violence, some of it quite nasty. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Captain Blood" (1935)

Swashbuckling adventure begins in 1685 England as an Irish doctor (Errol Flynn) is unjustly arrested with a band of rebels against King James II, then condemned to slavery in Jamaica under a brutal commander (Lionel Atwill) until the plucky doctor organizes their escape by sea to become pirates. Directed by Michael Curtiz, the lively proceedings include well-staged sea battles, the doctor's romance with the commander's niece (Olivia de Havilland) after rescuing her from a French buccaneer (Basil Rathbone) and justice for the rebels from the new English monarch, William of Orange. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Donovan's Reef" (1963)

Throwaway situation comedy with World War II vets (John Wayne, Lee Marvin and Jack Warden) beachcombing on a South Pacific isle when the daughter (Elizabeth Allen) of one of them makes a surprise visit. Director John Ford plays around with his familiar themes of male camaraderie and manly rivalry as well as the freedom of nature versus the restraints of civilization, but the result is less than original and only fitfully engaging. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

tion of America.

"The Fighting Seabees" (1944)

Patriotic World War II programmer in which a civilian contractor (John Wayne) joins forces with a Navy officer (Dennis O'Keefe) in training a naval construction battalion, called the Seabees, which proves itself by building a fuel depot on an island under Japanese attack. Directed by Edward Ludwig, the formula plot includes a war correspondent (Susan Hayward) who's torn between the two until Wayne becomes a posthumous hero. Wartime violence. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Morituri" (1965)

Murky World War II espionage thriller about an unwilling German pacifist (Marlon Brando) forced by a British agent (Trevor Howard) to undertake the disablement of a Nazi freighter (captained by Yul Brynner) on the high seas. Director Bernhard Wicki gets plenty of tension aboard ship but never seems quite certain whether he's making an action picture or some kind of allegorical statement on war. Stylized violence, drug use and sexual situations. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Mystery of the Mary Celeste" (1935)

Creaky British melodrama based on the 1872 mystery of the U.S. brig Mary Celeste, discovered derelict on the high seas with no clues as to what had happened to its crew. In speculating on what might have occurred, writer-director Denison Clift imagines the doomed ship sailed by a mutinous crew (notably one-armed Bela Lugosi), though the movie's sinister atmosphere and heavy-handed portents of disaster have little to do with the ultimate outcome involving a revengeful lunatic. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

Doctor Stops Performing Abortions After Cardinal's Death

MERRILLVILLE, Ind. (CNS) — Dr. John Nwannunu estimates that he has performed hundreds of abortions since he began his family practice at a clinic in Merrillville more than two years ago. But no more. Nwannunu called Bishop Dale J. Melczek of Gary Nov. 15 to say that he will no longer do abortions in Merrillville or at his clinics in Gary and East Chicago. "You can come and get the equipment," he told the bishop. Nwannunu attributed his change of heart to the coverage of Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin's death that had saturated the airwaves in the Chicago market. In an interview with the Northwest Indiana Catholic, newspaper of the Diocese of Gary, the doctor said he was moved by "how he (the cardinal) handled death" and by "the letter he wrote to the Supreme Court (against assisted suicide) prior to dying."

Former President's 11th Book Tells Of His 'Living Faith'

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Former President Jimmy Carter says his 11th book was "by far the most difficult book I've ever written" because of the "personal things" he revealed about the challenges of living a Christian life. "Living Faith" (Times Books, $23), "is a book about the values and experiences that have shaped my life, and how the religious beliefs I inherited have been transformed into a living faith," Carter said in an introduction to the 256-page volume. Carter, a Democrat who was president from 1977-81, spoke about the book and his views on church-state separation, the Christian Coalition, abortion and the trend toward "megachurches."

Benedictine Priest, Teacher Dies At 73

BELMONT — Benedictine Father Raphael Gerard Bridge died on Nov. 24 at Belmont Abbey.

Vespers were sung at the Abbey church on Nov. 25. On Nov. 26, Abbot Oscar Burnett concelebrated the Mass of Christian Burial with the monks of Belmont Abbey and Diocese of Charlotte clergy.

Father Bridge was born on March 7, 1923, in Latrobe, Pa., to the late Rhabanus Maurus Bridge and Mary Catherine Fresch.

A graduate of Holy Family Parochial School and St. Vincent Scholasticate in Latrobe, he went on to earn his bachelor of arts degree at St. Benedict College in Atchison, Kan. He pursued post-graduate studies in history at the University of South Carolina in Columbia, S.C.

Father Bridge entered the Benedictine novitiate at St. Benedict Abbey in Atchison, and became a professed monk of Belmont Abbey Aug. 28, 1944. He was ordained to the priesthood on June 11, 1950, at St. Vincent Archabbey Church in Latrobe.

He taught history at Belmont Abbey College for 48 years, and also served as prefect and assistant dean of the preparatory school; assistant treasurer; director of maintenance; dean of students; and chaplain of the college.

Father Bridge was also a member of the board of trustees, faculty representative of athletics, a member of the athletic committee and moderator of the intercollegiate athletic teams at the college.

He served as director of the Abbey Press, subprior, procurator, and member of the Senior Council of Belmont Abbey Monastery.

He is survived by the monks of Belmont Abbey; two brothers, Louis Bridge and Charles Bridge; three sisters, Helen Munchinski, Rita Casey, and Imelda Ransel, all of Latrobe; and many nieces and nephews.

Cardinal Agrees, Reluctantly, To Continue As Doctrinal Head

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger said he has agreed, with some reluctance, to stay on as head of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. The 69-year-old German theologian, whose third five-year term at the congregation expired Nov. 25, said he would not mind if someone younger took over, but for now Pope John Paul II had asked him to remain. His new term would extend until the year 2001, but it is possible for Vatican officials to leave office before their full term is completed.

Architect Of Dayton Accords Receives Tutu Award For Peace

DAYTON, Ohio (CNS) — Initially thought to be nothing more than a strategic location to hold the Bosnian peace talks, Dayton has now become a powerful symbol of what can be accomplished when the United States pushes rival factions toward peace. That's the assessment of the former envoy who helped broker peace in Bosnia-Herzegovina one year after the Dayton Peace Accords were signed. "In retrospect, you couldn't have imagined a better place," said Richard Holbrooke, architect of the Dayton Peace Accords, as he addressed 400 professors, business and civic leaders, and diplomats at the University of Dayton Nov. 19 and received the Desmond Tutu Award for Peace.

Maryknoll Priest-Doctor Dies

OSSINING, N.Y. (CNS) — A funeral Mass was celebrated Nov. 20 at Queen of Apostles Chapel in Ossining for Maryknoll Father John Edward Bergwall, a physician whose career as a missionary in Africa was cut short by multiple sclerosis more than three decades ago. Father Bergwall, a 69-year-old Milwaukee native, died Nov. 14 at St. Teresa's residence. After he learned that he was being assigned to Africa but before his ordination, Father Bergwall diagnosed himself as having multiple sclerosis. Despite concerns for his health, he went to Tanzania where he helped establish a hostel for 60 victims of Hansen's disease.

Bishop Curlin, Catechetical Leaders Gather In Hickory

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

HICKORY — A possible record was achieved Nov. 21 as 90 catechetical leaders gathered to dialogue with Bishop William G. Curlin; Father James Hawker, vicar for education; and Dr. Cris Villapando, diocesan director of faith formation. In past years, an average of 20 participants would be counted; this time it skyrocketed to nearly a hundred.

Villapando tributes the turnout to a new spirit between regional coordinators and parish catechetical leaders.

After the introduction, Bishop Curlin spoke to the participants. "As you teach, continually remind people of the presence of God in their lives. Before any of us can teach with authority, we ourselves must live in the presence of God's love," he said.

The day would become one of teaching, participation and feedback, as catechetical leaders learned of new guidelines for parishes and were introduced to teaching modules.

Moreover, the fellowship of those charged with teaching the faith brought on discussions of victory and sometimes failure in the teaching process.

A group of catechetical leaders discuss their concerns.

Church in Reidsville shared her successes incorporating confirmed youth as catechists. "Younger children respond well to teenagers," she said.

Problematic issues included lack of funds, parental and community involvement.

In the afternoon session, Villapando asked leaders to review the 250 requirements for PCL qualifications. He said he hopes to reduce that number and tailor the requirements to fit parish needs.

Heritage Society Provides Gifts That Last

CHARLOTTE — Ray and Kay Cuzzone have always believed in sharing their time, talent and treasure with the Church, and as members of St. Aloysius Church in Hickory, they view the Catholic Heritage Society as a perfect vehicle for their commitment.

"The important thing is giving a part of yourself and leaving a part of yourself behind to help the Church grow," Mrs. Cuzzone said.

"We've always felt this way," she added. "This is part of our stewardship too — the stewardship of our assets."

Formed nearly two years ago, the Catholic Heritage Society is open to individuals who provide in their wills or other estate plans for the Foundation, the diocese, or any of the diocesan parishes, schools, agencies or organizations.

The Cuzzones and other members of the Catholic Heritage Society from throughout the diocese met with Bishop William G. Curlin on Nov. 17. Each fall, the bishop invites society members to a Mass at St. Patrick Cathedral and reception at his residence. The bishop told members that they were supporting the Church, not just in the present, but in the future as well.

"On behalf of all the Catholic faithful, I thank you for the generosity you and so many others practice in our diocese," Bishop Curlin said. "Your generosity shows you want to help your parish, your school, and the diocese as a whole."

"Giving of yourself is one of the greatest gifts in the world," the bishop added. "It shows you are people who follow Jesus. The proof is in the way you live, and the manner in which you show your love for the Church."

The society has open membership, said Jim Kelley, diocesan development director and executive director of the Foundation. "Anyone in the diocese can become a member, whether they leave $500 or several thousand dollars or more in their wills or other estate plans for the Church," he said. "This isn't about money. This type of planned giving helps to ensure the future financial stability of the Church and will allow us to serve the faithful for generations to come."

According to Kelley, there are several ways to become a member of the Catholic Heritage Society. A member might leave a bequest in his will, a gift of life insurance, a gift of real estate or establish a life arrangement — such as a trust or annuity. Most of the gifts are easy to initiate and take very little time.

For more information about the Catholic Heritage Society, call Jim Kelley at (704) 331-1709 or (704) 377-6871.

Finally, are you aware that godparents are not absolutely required to be present for the baptism as long as other conditions are fulfilled?

Perhaps someone you would wish to ask lives farther away, but could still be the kind of godparent you desire.

Somewhere in these thoughts should be some solution to your dilemma.

Thousands Line Chicago Funeral Route For Cardinal Bernardin

CHICAGO (CNS) — Uncounted thousands of Chicagoans lined the 18-mile funeral route carrying the body of Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin from Holy Name Cathedral to its final resting place in Mount Carmel Cemetery Nov. 20. The cardinal, who in life always preferred to travel the city streets instead of the expressways, had asked that his funeral cortege also avoid the expressways. So the slow, 60-vehicle procession snaked through the city for 90 minutes. Some onlookers knelt and prayed as the hearse bearing the cardinal approached. Others made a simple Sign of the Cross as it passed. Some raised signs with messages like "We love you" and "Good-bye, God bless you."

Call To Action Conference Draws 5,000 To Detroit

DETROIT (CNS) — More than 5,000 people committed to bringing about major changes in the Catholic Church gathered Nov. 15-17 for the Call To Action national conference. The conference drew people from across the United States to Detroit's Cobo Center, site of the original Call To Action conference in 1976. Speakers included Detroit Auxiliary Bishop Thomas J. Gumbleton; Fathers Hans Kung and Charles Curran, both barred by the Vatican from teaching as Catholic theologians; French Bishop Jacques Gaillot; feminist activist Edwina Gateley; and Loretto Sister Maureen Fiedler, national petition drive organizer for "We Are Church: A Catholic Referendum." The gathering also showed support for members of Call To Action-Nebraska, who were threatened with excommunication this year by Bishop Fabian W. Bruskewitz of Lincoln, Neb., after they organized a state chapter.

Merger Protects Catholic Hospital's Pro-Life Ideals

PHOENIX (CNS) — St. Joseph's Hospital in Phoenix, an affiliate of Mercy Healthcare Arizona, will maintain its Catholic identity and its commitment to the sanctity of life in a merger between Mercy Healthcare and Samaritan Health System. The two health care systems announced Nov. 14 that they have signed a letter of intent to combine the operations of their Arizona facilities under a new nonprofit operating company. Specifically, a common values statement has been written and will be discussed as the merger is made to verify policy and procedures that will be congruent with that values statement.

Racial Unity In Church 'Possible, Exciting,' Priest Says

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. (CNS) — Within the Catholic Church "racial, cultural and religious unity is not only possible, but exciting," said Father Virgilio Elizondo, a San Antonio priest. Catholics are called to accept the diversity among them "not as a threat to unity but with a sense of enrichment," he said Nov. 13 in a lecture at Seton Hall University in South Orange. To bring about such unity, Catholics must "believe in it," he said. "We make it possible by welcoming people to our church," he said, which includes responding to the hunger for the Gospel among U.S. Spanish-speaking Catholics. "If we do not respond to that hunger, the people will find it somewhere else," Father Elizondo emphasized.

Work To Begin On Controversial Neighborhood Near Bethlehem

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Work on a controversial neighborhood bordering Jerusalem and Bethlehem is expected to begin by the end of the year after the Supreme Court rejected a final appeal opposing the project. According to the government plan, some 6,000 housing units are to be built on a hill known in Arabic as Jabal Abu-Gneim and in Hebrew as Har Hooma. The land belonged to residents of the Christian village of Beit Tsahur and the Muslim village of Umm-Tuba, southeast of Jerusalem. Jewish land developer David Meir also owned parcels of land on the hill. Building plans were introduced about six years ago, but were held up by court appeals — by Meir and residents of both villages — against the Israeli government's expropriation of the land.

Pope Urges International Community To Honor Pledge

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II urged governments and Church organizations not to falter in their commitments to help the starving refugee population in eastern Zaire. The pope made his remarks during a general audience Nov. 20. Governments, which a few days before had pledged participation in a multinational humanitarian aid effort to the region, were at the time reconsidering their pledges in light of changed circumstances: Most of the Rwandan refugees were returning home and it appeared that they would need less assistance than was originally predicted.

Cardinal Asks Sandinistas To Form 'Constructive Opposition'

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (CNS) — Almost a month after Nicaragua's general elections, Cardinal Miguel Obando Bravo of Managua has called on members of the Sandinista party to accept the results and to assume the role of a "constructive opposition." Former President Daniel Ortega, a Sandinista, said his party would "continue struggling ... but within a legal framework." "I believe that the Nicaraguan people deserve congratulations. Despite some administrative difficulties, the elections were clean. The results should be accepted," Cardinal Obando said Nov. 14.

St. Barnabas Church

ARDEN — The history of St. Barnabas Church began in 1964, when a structure in Arden was purchased from local Baptists for use as a Catholic church. Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh celebrated the first Mass there in November of that year. Thirty-six families made up the church community.

Originally designated as a mission of St. Lawrence Church in Asheville, St. Barnabas was first served by Msgr. George Lynch, who later became auxiliary bishop of the Raleigh Diocese. The congregation later welcomed Oblates of St. Francis de Sales Father Joseph Maule, in early 1966, as its first resident pastor. With parish status, St. Barnabas grew steadily, both in spiritual and physical terms.

The parish not only saw its first Holy Communion and Confirmation classes receive their respective sacraments, but it also developed the pastoral committee, Ladies' Guild, and musicians group, all of which remain a vital presence in the church community.

Long-range planning took place during the 1970s to coincide with a continuing influx of Catholics settling in the Arden area. Meanwhile, efforts to pay off the church mortgage were completed by 1976, thus allowing the parish to attend to expansion projects more closely. A residence for the pastor was purchased, and in 1980 land transfers brought the construction of a new church facility a step closer to reality.

With the original building having been sold, the parish celebrated Mass under a tent and in a roller skating rink in the meanwhile.

In July 1984, the parish saw the completion of the new St. Barnabas Church. With a church featuring a native stone sanctuary wall, a locally crafted crucifix and education facilities, the parish had a new spiritual home reflecting the beauty of both faith and the Carolina mountains.

As the years passed, the St. Barnabas Church religious education program was enhanced. With the arrival of the 1980s came an expansion of the parish's Cursillo and Knights of Columbus council.

In July 1990, Father John Schneider became pastor. From then to the present, he has continued the devoted work of his predecessors, and has formed and developed an enthusiastic youth ministry comprising middle- and high-school youngsters as well.

Ever-increasing in size and participation, the parish in February 1990 began to explore the possibility of again expanding the facilities. After a lengthy series of meetings and discussions, the project was underway. New classrooms, offices, meeting rooms and an expanded library highlighted the augmentation. Bishop William G. Curlin blessed the expansion in July 1994, 10 years after the dedication of the new St. Barnabas church.

Father Schneider serves as pastor to some 620 households that make up the religious, educational, social and, in part, administrative strengths of St. Barnabas Church. With its enthusiastic variety of committees, ministries, groups and projects, the parish offers a spirited affirmation of service as a faith community.

Carolina Bishops Join Together For World AIDS Day Observance

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — The struggle of the more than 22 million people infected with HIV/AIDS was commemorated globally on World AIDS Day Dec. 1. At St. Patrick Cathedral, an ecumenical group gathered to pray for those infected and affected by the disease.

Calling the event “a unique moment for the city,” Bishop William G. Curlin — along with his fellow shepherds — led a historic assemblage of the faithful in a state where more than 9,000 people are infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

Joining Bishop Curlin were Bishop J. Gary Gloster, suffragan bishop of the Episcopal Church of North Carolina; Bishop Charlene P. Kammerer, resident bishop of the Western North Carolina Conference of the United Methodist Church; and Bishop Norman D. Eitrhein, interim bishop of the North Carolina Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America.

"Your presence here speaks of Jesus in our midst," Bishop William Curlin said in his welcome to the bishops and attending clergy. With that greeting, Bishop Curlin set the tone for the afternoon healing service, where a message of hope and faith was conveyed through song, symbolism and Scripture.

Bishop Curlin talked of the healing power of prayer, and urged the congregation to live faith-filled lives — lives that are lived for Jesus and through which His presence can be felt.

The notion of offering one's very life to God was the concept most strongly conveyed at the service.

"Believe that every waking moment is His moment," Bishop Curlin said. "Believe that if Jesus wakes you up in this world tomorrow, He wants to use you as His instrument in this world."

The afternoon of prayer and ecumenism also included powerful images and a message of mercy:

At Advent Service, Pope Urges Catholics To Discover Glory Of God In Christ

By CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — As candles brightened the darkened interior of St. Peter's Basilica, Pope John Paul II urged Catholics around the world "to discover the glory of God that is revealed in Christ."

The pope celebrated a special evening prayer service Nov. 30, the eve of the first Sunday of Advent, to mark the beginning of three years of prayer, study and charitable acts in preparation for the Holy Year 2000.

"This itinerary will lead us to the threshold of the Holy Door which I will open, if it pleases God, on the night of Christmas 1999," the pope said, referring to the practice of opening a bricked-up door in St. Peter's Basilica at the beginning of a Holy Year.

“In this darkness, we become aware that there is a light which can guide us, which can truly give meaning to our lives, and it is toward this light that we must walk,” he said.

In his homily during the prayer service, the pope said that Christ's victory over sin and death has made it possible for all people to accomplish good in his name.

That possibility, he said, must become a reality as Christians work for "authentic peace, the fruit of justice and love."

At the end of the liturgy, the pope led the congregation in reciting a prayer he wrote for Catholics to recite during 1997 as part of their preparation for the jubilee.

Continuing his comments about Advent and the upcoming jubilee Dec. 1 during his midday blessing, the pope said, "the coming three years will be a time of strong spiritual and apostolic commitment for the local churches spread throughout the world."

“With the jubilee, the church intends to appeal to everyone’s heart so that they will grow in listening to God and in the constant search for fraternal solidarity,” he said.

"Now is the time to defeat laziness and mediocrity, renewing our entire existence in the light of the Gospel," Pope John Paul said.

"Now is the time to rediscover the value of prayer," he said.

"Along with prayer," he said, "there also must be a strong commitment of charity toward our needy brothers and sisters in whom we encounter and serve Christ."

Kelley Is Honored For Work With Homeless

velop and support the program resources that we have for the homeless community."

The Homeless Services Network is a coalition of agencies and organizations who are involved with delivering services to homeless people or those at risk of homelessness. Established in 1992, the Network is committed to: collaborating; coordinating services for the homeless; advocating with and for homeless people; and planning and managing responses to needs.

Kelley has been a strong advocate of the homelessness issue in Charlotte since the early 1980s. He was part of the team that started the Emergency Winter Shelter. In 1984, he served as a member of a study group that presented a report on the urgent need for a family and women's shelter. As a result, Charlotte Emergency Housing opened the following year. He was also a founding member of the Uptown Day Shelter. When the United Way formed the Homeless and Shelter Study Committee to study the issue of homelessness in Charlotte, Kelley was named to that committee. It resulted in the opening of the Men's Shelter in 1988, which later merged with the Uptown Day Shelter.

In 1992, Kelley helped form the Homeless Services Network. He also was part of the team that formed the Urban Ministry Center in 1993. He has served on both boards since their inception.

Kelley points to others when discussing the Homeless Services Network honor. "I am very fortunate to work with committed staff at these agencies. All the agencies I work with have very committed and capable people," he said.

"It is also a real joy for me to do this kind of work," Kelley added.

CHARLOTTE — Jim Kelley has spent the better part of 18 years helping others.

Kelley's tireless efforts were recently recognized when he was presented the Homeless Services Network's 1996 "Outstanding Volunteer of the Year" award during a luncheon at the Adams Mark Hotel. The first-ever volunteer award was named in Kelley's honor.

Those who know the Diocese of Charlotte's director of development can verify his service on 24 volunteer boards since moving to Charlotte in 1979.

"Jim's involvement and leadership in all homeless issues has been inspirational," said Frank Mansfield, chairman of the Homeless Services Network. "He is the epitome of volunteer leadership for homeless services in Charlotte. We would not have the level of services and resources for the homeless in Charlotte — both in terms of quality and quantity — were it not for his leadership. I know of no one else who has worked more, usually behind the scenes, to find, de-

Liturgy Conference Centers On Respect For Cultural Diversity

By MIKE NELSON

LONG BEACH, Calif. (CNS) — A record number of parish liturgists discussed sensitivity to, acceptance of and communication among various cultures at the first bilingual liturgy conference held by the Archdiocese of Los Angeles in five years.

The calls at Liturgy Conference '96 to embrace cultural diversity and to model lives on the Gospel message of Jesus were as prominent as the calls for sound liturgical practices and spirited liturgies.

"Each of us mirrors part of the living God," said Auxiliary Bishop Gabino Zavala of Los Angeles in his keynote address Nov. 22. "We are therefore called to have appreciation and respect for each other, and we must accept the uniqueness of each person. We must respond positively to the call to be community."

"We cannot build community," he added, "without solidarity, respect, appreciation for diversity and respect for the common good."

Liturgically speaking, "it means building relationships outside the sanctuary before we approach the altar," said Bishop Zavala, whose talk was also delivered Nov. 23 in Spanish. "All must be prepared to meet God in the assembly. Liturgy and community just doesn't happen; we must work at making them happen."

More than 2,100 liturgists — mostly from Southern California but also from the Midwest, East Coast and Canada — attended the Nov. 21-23 conference sponsored by the archdiocesan Office for Worship. Its theme was "City of God, United in Love."

More than 50 workshops, along with keynote addresses, liturgies, music showcases, a liturgical arts festival and a concert, were presented at the Long Beach Convention Center and Hyatt Regency Hotel.

Many of the liturgy coordinators, music ministers, initiation directors and other liturgical ministers in attendance agreed with the call to build community, although they admitted that doing so among diverse cultures is not easily or quickly accomplished.

"It would be nice to come together for more celebrations," said Kathleen Lester, music minister of St. Louis de Montfort Church in Orcutt, a parish with Anglo and Latino Catholic populations. "Our people need a vision, a way to see it's do-able, so they don't feel frustrated. It's important to value one another's culture."

Bishop Zavala urged the liturgists to "build 'cross-cultural moments' into our liturgical planning, into our parish structures, to allow us a greater understanding of the history and struggles of different peoples."

"We need to promote greater dialogue through story-telling, to better understand each other and allay the fears of long-standing parishioners that newcomers are out to take over the parish," he added.

In fact, that process must start well before liturgy, said Jesuit Father Allen Figueroa Deck, adjunct theology professor at Loyola Marymount University and executive director of the National Catholic Council for Hispanic Ministry.

"You begin with the reality of your parish, your community, the people of God," he said. "Get eyeball to eyeball with them; find out who they are, what they want, what they need. How do they express rituals and symbols? What do they want and need from their preachers? Find out what emerges from the reality; then, find out what the Church tells us liturgically in doctrine and tradition and resources."

St. Nicholas

Nicholas was born toward the end of the third century. He was ordained and appointed abbot of a monastery. He was very generous to the poor. He protected the innocent and the wronged. St. Nicholas is a special patron of children. A legend that tells of Nicholas throwing a bag of gold through a window to aid three poor children possibly led to the tradition of giving presents in his name around Christmas. His feast is Dec. 6.

Bosnian Students Learn And Teach In Indiana

By ANGELA MOORE

DYER, Ind. (CNS) — One would never know that the two Bishop Noll Institute students completing chemistry homework at their dining room table are any different from other teen-agers in the Diocese of Gary.

And that is the point that Bosnians Dzeni Dubreta, 16, and Alisa Karic, 18, are trying to convey — they are no different than other teens. Both said they are enjoying their U.S. stay, but often find themselves having to debunk stereotypes because many in the United States know only what the media portray about their country — usually negative images.

"Many people we talk to have this picture of the war stuck in their minds," Karic told the Northwest Indiana Catholic, newspaper of the Gary Diocese. "Yes, there are poor everywhere, but there are wealthier people, too, in Bosnia. When we tell people where we are from, some look at us as if we are from Mars."

"On TV they never show normal things," said Dubreta. "They never show nicely dressed people who work and try to live normal lives."

This is the second year the two have lived with their American legal guardian, Father Alfred Dettmer, pastor of St. Maria Goretti Parish in Dyer.

Last school year they were students at Marquette Catholic High School in Michigan City, Ind., when Father Dettmer was pastor of Queen of All Saints Church in Michigan City.

Both came here via the relief program "Bridge for Humanity," which was founded in Chicago by Bosnians and Slovenians to help the country by raising money and bringing children to experience life in the United States.

Father Dettmer became interested in the program after a Slovenian high school singing troupe performed at Queen of All Saints four years ago. He now serves on the board of directors of "Bridge for Humanity."

The priest said he, too, has learned from the experience of being legal guardian for the two students.

"Many of us do not understand how others live," he said. "I had the experience of spending one week there meeting the girls' families. They are very kind people."

Dubreta and Karic said they are fortunate to be able to come to the United States. They were raised in upper-middle-class families where both of their parents have careers.

"It's a rare opportunity for anyone to be able to come to another country and learn a different perspective," Karic said. "We just happen to be from Bosnia."

For Dubreta and Karic, the major problem with northwest Indiana is the lack of public transportation. They are used to having public transportation in Sarajevo and being able to go anywhere they want.

"In Sarajevo, everything is so close," Dubreta said. "In five minutes you can be anywhere."

Karic will be graduating this spring and Dubreta will be returning next year to complete her studies in the Diocese of Gary.

Pope Says Reading Scripture Can Help Discern Vocations

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Reading Scripture and meditating on its meaning can help people discern their vocations and can move young people toward priesthood or religious life, Pope John Paul II said.

"Sacred Scripture narrates the history of salvation as a history of vocations, in which the Lord's initiative and people's response have become intertwined," the pope said.

In his annual message for the World Day of Prayer for Vocations, the pope encouraged religious educators and vocations directors to make ample use of Bible reading in their work of helping people discover the particular way they are called to live the Christian life.

The text of the papal message for the 1997 World Day of Prayer, which will take place April 20 in most dioceses, was released Dec. 3 at the Vatican.

Because the Bible "reveals the deepest meaning of things and gives mankind security of discernment and orientation in the daily choices of life," the pope said, it is an essential part of Christian life.

By reading the Scripture stories of God's particular call to individuals to fulfill a particular mission, people can begin to understand how God has called men and women from every age, the pope said.

"Every vocation is born from the meeting of two freedoms: the divine and human," he said. "Having been personally invited by the Word of God, the one called places himself or herself at His service."

Reading the Bible with guidance and openness to the Holy Spirit leads to a maturation of faith, which is more and more evident in the way a person lives, the pope said.

Reading the Scriptures has an effect on the whole Christian community, as well, the pope said. It is from the community that vocations to the priesthood and religious life arise and it is the community which must support vocations.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Says Mythology May Have Facilitated Use Of 'Mother Of God'

Dear brothers and sisters,

In this week's catechesis we consider the title "Mother of God" by which the Church invokes the Blessed Virgin Mary. The Council of Ephesus, in the early fifth century, confirmed the use of this ancient title. According to the council, Mary is truly the Mother of God, since she gave birth to the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity who took flesh and became man for our sake. By proclaiming that Mary is the Mother of God, the Church affirms her sublime dignity as chosen by the Father to be the mother of his only-begotten son. Mary, who freely responded to God's call, reveals the nobility and lofty vocation of all women. Let us implore her to obtain for us from her divine Son freedom from sin and the grace of eternal salvation.

I am pleased to greet all the English-speaking visitors present at today's audience, especially the pilgrim groups from the United States. Upon you and your families I cordially invoke the grace and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Pope Says Science-Faith Dialogue Becomes More Urgent, Promising

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II said recent scientific investigation into the origins of the universe is touching upon theological and metaphysical questions.

"As a result, the need for dialogue and cooperation between science and faith has become ever more urgent and promising," the pope said Nov. 29 in a talk to a study group sponsored by the Pontifical Academy of Sciences.

The study session was the last in a series of general conferences on the physical cosmos, sponsored by the Vatican in an effort to bridge the gap between science and religion.

Sunday Readings Tell Of Prophecies Fulfilled In Christ, Day Of Reckoning

The readings presented for the liturgy for the second Sunday of Advent continue the theme of our Lord's coming. In the first week, we distinguished three comings at different times and stages. This week's readings focus on two of them.

The gospel reading was from the beginning of the gospel we call according to Mark (1:1-8). The selection is this author's picture of the beginning of the ministry of Jesus. Early Christian tradition saw the significant moment in the role of Jesus as Messiah and Son of God in His baptism at the hands of John. There it was, they believed, that He was anointed with God's Spirit. And so the author of this earliest gospel sets the scene for this revelation by describing John the Baptist robed in the prophetic garb of Elijah and eating Elijah's desert fare; this is to tell the reader that John is fulfilling the same function in Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom as Elijah is described in later Old Testament literature as performing for the advent of the day of the Lord, Yahweh.

The principal Old Testament reference is to the beginning of what we call Second Isaiah, that collection of writings of an unknown poet of the sixth century B.C. that constitutes chapters 40-55 of the book of Isaiah. The whole context is provided for us in Sunday's first reading (Is. 40:1-5, 9-11). The modulated cadences are familiar to us from the opening tenor recitative of Handel's Messiah: "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God," where the plural pronoun refers to the members of Yahweh's heavenly council whom He is pictured as telling to comfort His people in exile because they have now received double for all their sins. This is a new prophetic message designed for changing historical circumstances. The message of the pre-exilic prophets had been doom and destruction, as they warned Jerusalem of its impending fate. But now with the change in political climate brought about by the victories of Cyrus, first king of Persia, whom this prophet calls Yahweh's Messiah, he speaks tenderly of comfort and forgiveness.

With a poet's eye he sees in the return of the captives from exile a new exodus. He dares to compare their crossing of the wasteland between Babylon and new exodus when he says: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make straight in the desert a highway for our God!" Early Christians saw their experience of Jesus as another new exodus and they could integrate this experience into their theological perspective only by proclaiming how all of the Bible found its fulfillment in the person of Jesus.

Palestine with the greatest event in their salvation history as he pictures Yahweh Himself leading His people across the desert in this

The second reading is from the work we call the Second Letter of Peter (3:8-14). This is probably the last piece of writing that found its way into the New Testament, written perhaps in the early second century. We saw last week that the early Christians had expected the glorious return of Jesus in their lifetimes. "Come, Lord Jesus!" they declared in their worship. But years had passed and that hope began to fade. Like several other writers of the New Testament, the author of 2 Peter had to come to grips with this delay in Christ's coming. First, he explains that there is really no delay. He appeals to Psalm 90, where "a thousand years are a day" in the eyes of God. In other words, God is working on His schedule, not ours; and eternity cannot be measured by time or by any other human standard. The author next reaffirms the basic truth: "The Lord will come," and the day that He comes will be a day of reckoning. Christians are to devote themselves to be "at peace in His sight."

May these weeks of Advent give us time to prepare our hearts and minds in a suitable way for the coming of Christ at Christmas, so that we may experience in our personal encounter with Him that liberation, that freedom from selfishness and sin, that peace and joy which has been promised to all who believe in Him.

Staying Awake

Charles Lindbergh carried the nickname "Lucky Lindy" when he became the first to fly solo across the Atlantic. But much more than luck was involved in that spectacular flight.

His friend Frank Samuels recalled the period when Lindbergh was flying mail into St. Louis just before he soared into the history books. Lindbergh sometimes found time to hop out to San Diego where his plane, "The Spirit of St. Louis," was being built. Samuels would go along with him to inspect the work. After a long day, the two would stay in a small side-street hotel.

One way to practice staying spiritually awake is to shut down the turmoil in your anxious hearts so full of worry about the past and the future. Allow the blessed silence to awaken you to the Lord's presence in your life.

One night Samuels woke up shortly after midnight and noticed that Lindbergh's bed was unoccupied. Then he saw Lindbergh sitting by the window looking out at the stars. "For goodness sake," he asked, "why are you sitting there at this hour?" Lindbergh answered, "Just practicing." "Practicing what?" "Staying awake all night," Lindbergh replied.

For the remainder of Advent, we are going to be hearing a lot about staying awake. Lindbergh practiced staying awake because a successful flight across the Atlantic demanded alertness over a long period of time. The New Testament cautions us to stay awake, spiritually, because a successful life demands alertness to the grace of fulfillment God is constantly offering us.

Staying awake, in this sense, is not easy. If we want to enrich our lives in a Christian way, it takes practice. But how does one practice staying spiritually awake?

There was a small iron-working town where the mills were kept running 24 hours a day. The great steam hammers, some of them weighing several tons, were going all the time, beating out high sheets of forged metal. All day and all night long the sound reverberated through the streets of the village. But the townspeople had become so accustomed to the noise that they could sleep soundly through it. One night, the machinery broke down, the hammers suddenly stopped working, and nearly everyone in town immediately woke up. They had been awakened, unexpectedly, by the silence.

One way to practice staying spiritually awake is to shut down the turmoil in your anxious hearts so full of worry about the past and the future. Allow the blessed silence to awaken you to the Lord's presence in your life.

When was the last time you stopped by a church, just to go in and spend a few minutes with the Lord in the silence of God's house? If your life in any way seems flat or lifeless, I guarantee that being awake to the nearness of God on a regular basis will make your life rich and vibrant again.

But it takes training for the rigors of practice and rewards of simply looking,

Whose Wife Is She In Heaven?

Q. Recently in the Sunday readings we had the weird story about the woman with six or seven husbands, and whose wife she would be in heaven. (Mt. 22:23-33)

I looked up the passage in my Bible. The reference, it said, was to a "levirate" marriage, but gave no further explanation.

What is a levirate marriage all about?

A. Levirate marriage was a legal tradition, common in several ancient cultures, by which a man's brothers were required to marry his wife if he died without children. The name comes from the Latin word "levir," brother-in-law.

The Hebrew people were among those who considered this a serious family obligation, imposed by God through Moses.

While certain basics remained, other elements differed through the centuries. In some instances the obligation to produce a child for the eldest son might fall even on his father.

A curious early tale, for example, in Genesis 38, involves Judah, one of the 12 sons of Jacob the patriarch. Judah's son Er died before his wife, Tamar, bore him children.

Judah then gave Tamar to son No. 2, Onan, who wasn't especially eager to continue his brother's family line. Onan "knew that the descendants would not be counted as his; so whenever he had relations with his brother's widow, he wasted his seed on the ground, to avoid contributing offspring for his brother."

After the Lord struck Onan dead, Judah was understandably not anxious to pass Tamar on to the next son, Shela. He kept putting her off until she realized her father-in-law had no intention of following the law.

Disguising herself as a prostitute, she enticed Judah himself, had relations with him and conceived a child. When Judah learned she was pregnant and was preparing to punish her for her immorality, she produced sure evidence that he was the father.

When informed of the truth, Judah calmed down and said, "She is more right than I am," since she wanted to observe the law, even when Judah was unwilling.

Much later, when women could inherit from their father, the levirate custom applied only when there were no children (Nm. 27:8; 36:6-7).

All this sounds bizarre to us, of course. What could have been the source of such customs?

Several possible explanations, one way or another, involve the compelling need among ancient peoples and tribes to protect their inheritance of posses-

Deceived By "The Good Life"

There is a popular furniture store that promotes "the good life" in its television ad. Elegant scenes of home decor with expensive tables, lamps, sofas and china cabinets flash before you, punctuated by the repeated phrase, "The Good Life!" This is a blatant example of the kind of lies we are told by our culture of materialism and conspicuous consumption.

And what about the commercials that try to convince us that the good life comes in cold six-packs? Then there's the ad that tells us about "safe sex" through the use of latex condoms, while never telling us about committed love and the promises made by sexual intercourse — promises only a marriage can keep. The peddlers of deception don't just try to get us to buy a product; they're pushing a philosophy about happiness: That the Kingdom can be bought, consumed and worn.

Think about all those who buy into this consumer's trap. They accumulate these things and find that "The Good Life" still eludes them. Or worse they have found love and contentment through family, friends and community and attribute their good fortune to the things they have accumulated. Think about those who suffer alcohol and drug addiction, lured by a culture that would have us seek happiness through intoxicants.

The vast majority of us will never afford such luxuries as the elegant furniture in the television ad. Most will never afford one of those sleek, sexy driving machines. Their families will never experience that vacation in Florida that "everyone must go on." Our culture sells them the despair that they will never have "The Good Life." To feel safe in such despair, we fall into cynicism, cutting ourselves off from the feeling of despair, but also distancing ourselves from hope.

As followers of Christ, we know that our Kingdom is not bought or consumed. If we pay attention to the Sermon on the Mount, (Matt. 5:1-12) we get a glimpse at the Kingdom of God. Our happiness — the good life — is our willingness to open ourselves to God's love. However, in the language of the world the Beatitudes don't make sense; to make sense of them, we need to learn the language of God.

As parents we teach this language of God through actions that reveal our values before our children. When we buy into the culture of conspicuous consumption, we are teaching our children the language of the world. When we show compassion, forgiveness and social responsibility, we are teaching our children the language of God.

Though they may be influenced by the materialistic culture of our consumeristic world, our children will have experienced a fundamental truth. Happiness — the Kingdom of God — can't be bought; it is lived through the Jesus-like compassion we show one another. And though we can't afford that "essential" trip to Florida, our capacity to have great family moments is not diminished. Our goal is to live in the language of God and show our kids The Good Life that can't be bought.

Bishop Michael J. Begley Remembers

An Open Mind, A Kind Heart, A Creative Spirit, A New Diocese

The following is the first of three installments covering the priestly career of retired Bishop Michael J. Begley, first bishop of the Diocese of Charlotte. On Jan. 12, 1997, the diocese will celebrate Bishop Begley's 25th anniversary and the Silver Anniversary of the Diocese of Charlotte.

By MARY COYNE WESSLING

CHARLOTTE — It was June 1926 and a young Michael Begley was getting ready for graduation from Cathedral High School in Massachusetts. While his classmates may have still been pondering their future, he was sure of his. Come fall he would enter the seminary and study to be a priest.

"I spoke to a priest at my high school about my vocation and the first thing he asked me was what kind of priest I wanted to be," the bishop recalled. "I hadn't given it much thought. He asked if I would be interested in being a mission priest right here in the United States, particularly in North Carolina."

Before entering the seminary, Michael met with Bishop William Joseph Hafey of the Diocese of Raleigh. "He had courage enough to accept me even though I had eight years before I finished the seminary," the bishop said.

Although his parents supported his decision, they were unable to pay for his education. In stepped the Knights of Columbus, who granted him a full four-year scholarship. And then a family from New York, the Cogans, would provide funds for his latter years in the seminary. "This was truly a blessing," he said.

In 1934, fresh from Mount St. Mary's Seminary in Emmitsburg, In., Father Begley began service to the Diocese of Raleigh. Among his earliest assignments was to begin a parish in Carolina Beach.

"The bishop sent me down there to buy some property that included a house and a double-car garage," he said. "The bishop said I could have Mass in the garage until a church could be built. The problem was I got down there and the man who was supposed to be selling the property flatly refused. I had no place to live or to begin a parish. Eventually we held Mass at the city hall until we bought property from another family for the church."

The art of improvisation in those early years came easily to the young priest. Never certain what his bishop would ask of him or where his assignments would take him, Father Begley maintained an open attitude toward everyone and everything.

After several years in parishes and missions, Father Begley was approached by then-Bishop Vincent Waters about a new path in his career. He was given the choice of being the new chancellor for the diocese or director of Catholic Charities and head of the diocesan orphanage in Raleigh.

"I told him (Bishop Waters) I was perfectly happy being a parish priest at St. Leo's (in Winston-Salem). But a few weeks later he came to me and asked if I could take over as the director of Catholic Charities," he recalled. "I asked him how soon and he said that coming Friday! I wasn't sure I could do this. He said, 'Just put your mind at ease. It is, after all, the bishop who makes the decisions.'"

In order to serve as director, Father Begley was sent to Catholic University in Washington to study for a master's degree in social work. While there, a priest advised him to go back to North Carolina and enroll in the social work program at Chapel Hill. In 1947 he finished his studies and began a 10-year career as director of the Nazareth Home for Orphaned Children. In its peak years, Nazareth was home to some 160 children. Father Begley, kind, compassionate and fair-minded, had a smile for each child and place in his heart for them all. "Those were among the most satisfying years as priest for me," he said.

It was there that Father Begley learned the importance of people helping people. Certain that caring for so many children was not a one-man job, he depended greatly on the wisdom and hard work of his staff and others in the diocese to help.

"I would say it takes US and Company to get the job done," the bishop said. Following his years at the orphanage, Father Begley went back to parish work which took him to Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro. He loved the role as parish priest and looked forward to the years of ministry ahead. But that would all change when in 1971 Bishop Waters made another visit to then-Msgr. Begley, who was pastor of Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro.

"I thought he was coming to see me to talk about my parish and the building plans," Bishop Begley said. "So I began to show him around the grounds. As we were walking Bishop Waters told me that the diocese was growing and plans were being made to start a new diocese. He told me I had been suggested as bishop. He said, 'Do you accept?' I told him I would need some time to think it over. Bishop Waters replied, 'You don't need time if you are interested in allowing the Holy Spirit to speak through you in guiding your people. Are you interested in letting the Holy Spirit speak through you?' I accepted."

Within days, Msgr. Begley began meeting with Bishop Waters and other diocesan leaders to build the new Diocese of Charlotte. It would prove to be a challenging and hectic time in his priestly career. But he welcomed the challenge, knowing he had the Holy Spirit and many dedicated men and women to work with him in beginning a new chapter of the Catholic Church in North Carolina.

Mary Coyne Wessling served under Bishop Begley for six years as assistant editor of The North Carolina Catholic.

The Crucible

Screen Version Of Classic Play Is Cautionary Tale For Today

NEW YORK (CNS) — Playwright Arthur Miller turns screenwriter in the screen adaptation of his 1953 stage play, "The Crucible" (20th Century Fox).

Written during the era of anti-Red scares and blacklisted entertainers, Miller turned the 17th-century story of the Salem witchcraft trials into a cautionary tale for the times.

Contemporary viewers, however, are more likely to see Salem's historical relevance in terms of recent child abuse trials based on the testimony of young children.

Certainly the movie focuses on the false accusations of a band of girls too young to realize the terrible consequences of their lies.

Caught by the local minister dancing around a fire in the forest and mumbling strange incantations, the girls are so afraid of being punished that two of them fall into a sleep from which they cannot be wakened.

This frightens the entire village and stirs rumors of witchcraft which the girls foment by confessing to having seen some of their neighbors consorting with the devil.

Soon Judge Danforth (Paul Scofield) arrives from Boston, the number of those accused by the girls grows and the trials begin.

For the girls, it's all a game of playacting, but their teen-age ring-leader, Abigail Williams (Winona Ryder), is deadly earnest when she denounces Elizabeth (Joan Allen), the wife of local farmer John Proctor (Daniel Day-Lewis).

John had been intimate with Abigail when she was a servant in their household and has regretted it ever since.

Abigail, however, is convinced John loves her and sees Elizabeth as the only impediment to their marriage.

John almost persuades Danforth of Abigail's deceit but in the end is himself convicted of witchcraft.

As the villagers begin to tire of the hangings, John is offered the chance to save his life by confessing his guilt.

Wanting to live for his wife and unborn child, John is willing to lie about his own guilt but is too honest to name others as the price for saving his life.

As the story of an individual standing against the wrongs of his day, the drama is strong stuff yet doesn't quite jell on the personal level.

Director Nicholas Hytner succeeds admirably with the historical context of puritan Salem, a community planted in a heathen wilderness where the devil was feared to lurk.

The religious fears of Salem erupted into a social hysteria blinding people to the implausibility of the children's feigned testimony.

Those who questioned the truth of the matter were themselves suspect of being on the side of the unrighteous in a cycle of guilt by association.

John Proctor becomes the unwilling hero by trying to protect his wife.

Though Day-Lewis gives an intense performance, especially the poignant scenes with his condemned wife, there is no great depth to the role.

The real force of the story, however, is not on the personal level but in its portrayal of a dysfunctional society's persecution of the innocent for the common good.

"The Crucible" remains a cautionary tale for our own time.

Because of period violence, brief nudity and a few coarse words, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Cable Guy" (1996)

One-note comedy stemming from the unstable character of a manic cable installer (Jim Carrey) who becomes a dangerous pest when he tries to make a friend out of a customer (Matthew Broderick). Directed by Ben Stiller, the thin concept is dragged out in weak skits yielding few laughs until finally ending with the title character going completely over the edge. Unfunny life-threatening predicaments, sexual situations and language, coarse expressions and occasional profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Celluloid Closet" (1995)

Documentary from Vito Russo's book on the portrayal of homosexuality in mainstream American movies from the comic sissy of the silents through the Production Code's ban on homosexual references to the present mix of movies ranging from gay bashing to positive depictions. Produced and directed by Rob Epstein and Jeffrey Friedman, the work uses clips from over 100 Hollywood movies and interviews with filmmakers in presenting a sympathetic account of how homosexuals have emerged from a shadowy, furtive existence on the screen to a new visibility still to be defined in terms of mainstream attitudes. Excerpted scenes of violence, sexual encounters with nudity and rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Dragonheart" (1996)

Medieval fantasy in which an honorable knight (Dennis Quaid), disillusioned after the prince he trained becomes a tyrannical king, joins forces with a mammoth talking dragon (voice of Sean Connery) to lead a peasant revolt. Director Rob Cohen's noble-minded story is remarkable for its magnificent, computer-generated beast, but is otherwise a flat-footed spectacle hampered by terribly corny dialogue. Stylized battlefield violence. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Flower of My Secret" (1996)

Bittersweet romance from Spain in which a middle-aged woman (Marisa Paredes) attempts suicide after learning her husband has left her, then recovers with her mother's help and begins life anew with the aid of a would-be beau (Juan Echove). Directed by Pedro Almodovar, the story is basically a 1940s tearjerker, though enlivened by zesty characters and surreal comic moments. Subtitles. Sexual situations and occasional rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"John Paul Jones" (1959)

Stilted biography of the Scottish sea captain (1747-92) who became an American naval hero during the Revolutionary War and his subsequent service in the Russian navy. Except for the desperate sea battle with Britain's "Serapis," writer-director John Farrow offers a stiff, wordy portrait of Jones (Robert Stack) as high-minded but misunderstood patriot seeking support from such famous contemporaries as Ben Franklin (Charles Coburn) and Catherine the Great (Bette Davis). Stodgy patriotic exercise with colorful historical backgrounds. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Return of Martin Guerre" (1983)

Engrossing, fact-based story of a 16th-century peasant who abandons his wife and disappears from his native village, only to reappear some eight years later, much improved in every way. Accepted by his wife and most of the villagers, a squabble over property a few years later provokes the accusation that he's an imposter, and a trial with tragic results ensues. Director Daniel Vigne's French production is partly a mystery but most of all a love story that most adults will find intriguing entertainment. Subtitles. Brief nudity and sexual references. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Riverdance: The Show" (1995)

Lilting, exuberant celebration of Irish step dancing as conceived by Moya Doherty in a dramatic spectacle combining traditional music with modern footwork showing the influence of other cultures, notably Spanish and Russian dance traditions as well as African-American tap dancing and gospel music. Produced by RTE and Tyrone Productions, the performance was taped before a spirited audience in a Dublin theater, with music composed for pipes, flutes and drums by Bill Whelan and a dance company headed by Jean Butler and Michael Flatley. Grand family entertainment.

The tabernacle depicts both God's closeness to us and awesomeness for us with a painting of Jesus washing the feet of 12 embarrassed teen-age apostles, wood carvings of a dove for the Holy Spirit, a butterfly for the risen Son, and a squirrel as the good householder to represent the Father.

By Father W. Thomas Faucher
Catholic News Service

There is a little wood and stone, medieval-looking church in the high mountain town of McCall, Idaho, whose tabernacle for the Eucharist is shaped like an old reliquary, with enamel paintings and large wooden doors. The tabernacle of Our Lady of the Lake Catholic Church has as its major symbol of the Eucharist a picture that crosses over its doors: Jesus washing the feet of 12 embarrassed teen-age apostles.

This tabernacle painting actually depicts both God's closeness to us and God's awesomeness for us. These sometimes go by the more solemn names of "immanence" and "transcendence."

—In the Eucharist, we give thanks and praise to the creator of the universe, the all-knowing, immutable, omniscient God. This accents God's transcendence.

—But in the Eucharist we also encounter a warm, loving Father who gives us his Son, a Son who kneels in front of us and washes our feet. Here the accent is on God's immanence.

There are days I need a foot-washing God. These are the days when I need to know that I am held securely, loved and valued by a God who knows me completely and loves me anyway. These may be times when I am lonely or sad or depressed; times when it seems that the world and everything in it is so big, so cold, so terrifying that I am just not quite able to find my place.

Then I want to feel close to God.

But other times I need to feel the awesomeness of God, to know that my God created the "big bang," drew the rings around Saturn and actually knows the number of the stars in the heavens. These are the times when I need to see things as they are, to take in the whole picture, to understand my place in a universe that is not only big but is God-centered.

saints as intercessors for us before God.

At Mass we speak of the enormity of God's creation and gifts to us. But we also recognize God's warmth and nence — into focus.

A healthy relationship with God constantly moves back and forth in its focus from God's immanence to God's transcendence, from closeness to awesomeness. Each dimension is essential.

It is good to emphasize God's closeness to me personally. The risk of overemphasizing this is that I will develop a "Jesus and me" faith.

It is good to emphasize God's awesomeness. The risk of overemphasis here is that we may begin to feel overwhelmed by God and lost.

In order for our spiritual lives to be healthy we need to be aware of the roles that immanence and transcendence play in our relationship with God, and work to build up our ability to see and feel God in both ways.

It is possible for any one of us to feel an extremely strong need for the "warm fuzzy" spirituality of divine closeness and therefore neglect transcendence. But then spiritual life begins to get out of kilter. This happens often in people who leave Catholicism for fundamentalist groups.

But spiritual health is also in danger if we neglect closeness and begin to see God only as remote, awesome or far away. An overemphasis on divine transcendence is a first step in letting God become irrelevant by virtue of being so remote.

The beautiful tabernacle in the mountain village also has wood carvings on it: A dove represents the Holy Spirit; a butterfly represents the risen Son; a squirrel represents God the Father —taken from a reasonably obscure medieval tradition that sees the squirrel as the good householder, providing for and protecting his family.

All three were ancient Christian symbols of the closeness as well as the awesomeness of God.

The transcendent God who is a friend

Catholicism masterfully emphasizes both the closeness and awesomeness of God. On the one hand, we talk to God directly. On the other hand, we emphasize the role of the intimacy as bread and wine become the body and blood of the same God who became human.

The Gospels blend God's immanence and transcendence together in an ongoing narrative, now emphasizing one, now emphasizing the other. A good homily does the same.

The great cathedrals and magnificent churches of Europe or North America are monuments to God's power and might — God's transcendence. They are made to raise our hearts and minds to God's magnificence.

But even within those buildings there are little chapels, corners and places where God's warmth and closeness are equally evident. Many of our newer parish churches were designed to draw God's closeness and availability — God's imma-

FAITH IN ACTION

Ancient Israel struggled to reconcile God's transcendence and immanence, Thomas Marsh indicates in The Triune God, A Biblical, Historical and Theological Study (Twenty-Third Publications, 185 Willow St., Box 180, Mystic, Conn. 06355. 1994. Paperback, $14.95). It was important in Israel, the author suggests, that God not be identified "with any part ... of the world." Yet this wholly Other God "is also present in the world and active in history." A problem for the biblical authors was how to speak of a transcendent God's immanence. Thus, Israel "spoke of God walking in the garden in the cool of evening; of God coming down from God's abode on high to see the city and tower of Babel." Especially, Israel "spoke of the word ('dabar') of God and the breath/spirit ('ruah') of God."

Reflection. My way of praying is influenced by my image(s) of God. Do I think of God as distant, powerful, close and caring, harsh judge? How does this affect my prayer?

How sacraments bridge the distance to God

By Father Robert L. Kinast
Catholic News Service

The bishop came to my parents' home the night before I was ordained a priest. They had not met previously because my parents lived in Pittsburgh, and I was being ordained for the Atlanta archdiocese.

My father was moved, almost awed, that he was hosting a bishop. But the bishop was informal, sitting on our piano bench and chatting casually.

Finally my father said, "Your Excellency, I've never been this close to a bishop before, yet I feel so comfortable with you. I don't know how to address you."

The bishop replied, "What do your friends call you?"

"Elmer," my dad answered.

"Then what if I call you Elmer and you call me Joe?"

The bishop's full name was Joseph L. Bernardin, who later became cardinal archbishop of Chicago, but at that time was auxiliary bishop of Atlanta. To my father he might as well have been pope. The bishop represented everything sacred, mysterious and transcendent about the church and faith. Yet he was close at hand, familiar, on a first-name basis.

In a similar way God, whose perfection surpasses us in every way, is also with us, close at hand. Nowhere is this expressed more richly than in the sacraments which use the familiar, tangible things of human experience to put us in touch with God.

On the day of my ordination the bishop and other priests placed their hands on my head while invoking the Holy Spirit's power. In this simple gesture they drew me into a special relationship with the transcendent God, who wants to be called Emmanuel,

God-with-us.

In the years since ordination I have often:

—Placed my hands on a penitent's head, re-establishing with that person the bonds of divine friendship which were weakened through sin.

—Rubbed blessed oil on seriously ill people, asking with the church that God's strength fill the person in order to resist sickness and bear witness to God's healing power.

—Placed my hand on the hands of spouses at weddings and confirmed the sacramental union they have created as a sign of their life with God in the church.

These sacramental actions put us in touch with our transcendent God. They do not make God less; they make us more. These actions help us to climb over — transcend — limited, superficial experiences of life and enter the surpassing experience of God.

The great mystery of the sacraments is that they do this without making us leave our human home. In fact, they require us to do the opposite — to enter it more profoundly. This is evident in the two fundamental sacraments of baptism and Eucharist.

Water is water until it is used for sacred purposes in baptism. Then the water tells a great story stretching from creation to the end of time. When people are baptized, they are engulfed by the God whom neither creation nor human history can ever measure.

Bread is bread, until it becomes the body of Christ in the Eucharist. When people share eucharistic communion, they are embodied into the Lord of heaven and earth.

This kind of sacramental intimacy might trouble people who think God's transcendence has nothing to do with created, human experience. For most people, God's transcendence becomes believable when it can be experienced humanly. The sacraments are the primary way this happens.

My dad spoke for such faithful Christians when he leaned over to my mother just after my ordination and said, "Now I believe it."

(Father Kinast is the director of the Center for Theological Reflection, Indian Rocks Beach, Fla.)

So removed, yet so close

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

"Can a mother forget her infant, be without tenderness for the child of her womb? Even should she forget, I will never forget you" (Isaiah 49:15).

The Creator is portrayed in Genesis as a gardener, an impresario, a surgeon, someone who strolls and chats familiarly with his creatures. This strikes many people as naive and childish.

Did the author really think that the transcendent, "totally other" creator of the universe did all these earthly things? Hardly!

The author did, however, have a serious purpose in depicting God in such human terms. He was telling us that, for all God's "otherness," this was not an uninvolved, impersonal divine force, coldly unconcerned about human life.

God is warmly personal, not transcendent only. God is intimately immanent, closer to people than they are to themselves. That's what the biblical author meant.

In fact, and strangely, it was precisely because of being so removed that God could be so close.

This is evident in the case of the risen Christ. The resurrection meant that he had risen to new life, but not that he would be restricted by time and space in ways that he was during his public ministry.

Remember that Jesus was born as a helpless baby dependent on his parents for love, for food and shelter. He could be in one place at one time, in contact with just so many, or so few, people, subject to time and space constraints.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

If you find it difficult to keep a balanced view of God's magnificence and wonder, on the one hand, and God's closeness and intimacy on the other, join the crowd! Nonetheless, the Advent season invites us to try again.

But don't be surprised to find that if meditating on God's transcendence helps keep you humble, meditating on God's immanence helps you to take yourself more seriously! Sound confusing?

Meditating on God's transcendence expands our horizons. Here is a challenge to think bigger and not to imagine that we have everything important about life all figured out.

God is not confined by my current expectations or wishes. The range of my concern does not inhibit the range of God's concern. Nor is God pinned down by my perspective, which can be transformed.

Reflecting on this during Advent will summon us beyond ourselves.

However, meditating on God's immanence — God's closeness — challenges us not to overlook what is before our very eyes.

If you've ever thought God couldn't possibly take your situation in life seriously enough to address you through it, this is the theme for you. Meditating on God's immanence should make us "suspicious" of God — always on the lookout in and around ourselves for evidence of divine activity.

Mother Teresa Stable, But Not Out Of Danger

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Doctors treating Mother Teresa of Calcutta said she was in stable condition but not out of danger three days after an angioplasty to remove blockages in two of her major coronary arteries.

U.S. Dr. Patricia Aubanel, a member of Mother Teresa's medical team, said the afternoon of Dec. 2 her patient was "stable and we are very optimistic about her recovery."

However, Dr. Apurba Chatterjee, general administrator of Calcutta's B.M. Birla Heart Research Center, told reporters that the 86-year-old nun's "long-standing lung and renal diseases, a major concern, could complicate her recovery."

Sources at the Birla center, where Mother Teresa underwent her third heart operation in five years Nov. 29, said her initial "remarkable recovery" suffered a setback Dec. 1, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency in Thailand.

Mother Teresa had tea the morning of Nov. 30, sat with assistance in a chair, was active and "seemed her own fiery self arguing with doctors," Chatterjee said. The Nobel laureate told him that she was "absolutely fine, ready to go home," he said.

Aubanel, who assisted at Mother Teresa's heart surgery in 1991 and 1993, said: "This time the risks were extremely high, and Mother could not have lived without the angioplasty that was done immediately after the (angiogram) test."

Aubanel said Mother Teresa was given new medicines specially approved for her symptoms, released in late November after trials in the United States.

The angiogram, a procedure to determine the position and intensity of blockages, revealed two blockages — one in the left descending artery, which was previously operated on, and another in the circumflex artery.

Aubanel said Mother Teresa woke up after the operation with no chest pain and said, "I can take care of myself; I'll get up. Thank you; God bless you."

Although the angioplasty cleared the arteries, lung and renal setbacks have forced the hospital to postpone treatment to correct Mother Teresa's irregular heartbeat, or arrhythmia.

Aubanel said the problem can cause strokes unless corrected and that prompt treatment has a 90 percent recovery rate.

"But Mother Teresa has had it for two months now and has only a 50 percent chance of correcting the irregular heartbeat," she added.

Mother Teresa was fitted with a pacemaker in 1989.

Angioplasty, in which a small balloon is used to press the material blocking a blood vessel against the vessel walls, was conducted on Mother Teresa at the Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation in California in 1991. It was repeated in 1993 at the Birla center.

The recurrence of blockage is 15-40 percent, Aubanel said, noting that Mother Teresa has a history of heart disease and that she developed the recent blockage about three years after the last operation.

"In 1993 she was very sick but recovered and left in three days. Now she is three years older and we have to wait a week or two to see," Aubanel added.

Mother Teresa was admitted to Woodlands Nursing Home Nov. 22 with breathing problems, and heart failure was diagnosed. She was transferred to the heart center Nov. 26.

Earlier in her hospitalization, the Missionaries of Charity founder refused to undergo any new tests or treatment, saying that she wanted to die "like the poor," who have no means for high quality medical treatment.

She later gave in to doctors who reasoned that an angiogram and angioplasty, if necessary, would give her better energy to serve the poor.

Before the operation, Archbishop Henry D'Souza of Calcutta blessed Mother Teresa.

Anesthetist Sunjukta Bagchi, also a team member in 1993, said: "Mother doesn't like my needle. But like last time, when she woke up she said thanks to me."

Dr. Debi Shetty, the Birla heart center cardiologist who headed the surgery, said his hospital "has the most experience in the world and has the best to tackle what Mother Teresa has."

"We have done 20,000 heart operations, (including) 13,000 angioplasties and 6,000 open heart surgeries," Shetty said.

'Wonderful Life' Child Actor Still Accentuates The Positive

By MARK PATTISON

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Jimmy Hawkins has spent almost as much of his Hollywood career behind the camera as in front of it.

But, regardless of what side he's been on, he still likes to be associated with "uplifting, positive" material, he says.

Hawkins, a Catholic who played young Tommy Bailey in the 1946 movie "It's a Wonderful Life," became a producer midway through his career. His projects include a 1980 ABC telefilm on the life of St. Elizabeth Ann Seton.

But the past beckons once more, as "It's a Wonderful Life" celebrates its golden anniversary with a one-time-only airing on NBC, 8-11 p.m. EST Saturday, Dec. 21.

Hawkins has written "The 'It's a Wonderful Life' 50th Anniversary Scrapbook," filled with interviews with and reminiscences of people associated with the now-classic holiday film, from stars James Stewart and Donna Reed to the actors who played the other Bailey children, from director Frank Capra to the writer, set designer, cinematographer, and the fellow who made the snow fall.

"I've gotten a lot of questions about the movie," Hawkins told Catholic News Service in a telephone interview from his Hollywood home.

An unexpected but welcome source of questions is the studio chieftains he must meet in order to sell them on his next feature film idea.

"It's nice to talk about it with all these young executives. They'll tell you things like, 'That's my favorite movie! I can't imagine that I'm talking to one of the cast members.' All while I'm sitting in the office of the president of some major studio," he said.

Just in case anybody hasn't seen it, Hawkins sums up the film's message this way: "Each man's life touches so many other lives. If they weren't there, it would leave an awful hole. What we were all put on earth to do, we've got to do."

Hawkins — a member of Holy Trinity Parish in Los Angeles who as a Catholic school student sold subscriptions to the Tidings, the archdiocesan newspaper — had a considerable string of credits on TV after "It's a Wonderful Life."

"I was everybody's boyfriend," he said, including eight seasons as Shelley Fabares' boyfriend on "The Donna Reed Show." Hawkins also had boyfriend guest roles on "Gidget," "Bachelor Father," plus four years as Ricky Nelson's sidekick on "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet," and two years on "Petticoat Junction."

As for the Seton movie, "A Time for Miracles," Hawkins said, "I think the man upstairs taps you on the shoulder and gives you the instincts."

He thought it was time for a TV movie on the life of a saint, "but not one of a thousand years ago. Instead, one that people can relate to," he said.

He wanted to tell the story of "someone from their own experience" who overcame the same kind of struggles facing people in this era, he said.

St. Elizabeth Ann Seton converted to Catholicism in New York at a time when the city looked less than kindly on Catholics. A widow, she managed to raise her family alone, he noted.

Hawkins has also produced the life story of motorcycle daredevil Evel Knievel; "Don't Look Back," the life story of baseball pitcher Satchel Paige; "Love Leads the Way," the true story of the blind man who gains acceptance for the first seeing-eye dog in the United States; and "Scouts Honor," a drama marking the 50th anniversary of the Cub Scouts.

His "Wonderful Life" pedigree doesn't necessarily win Hawkins any extra entree into the networks' doors. The selling jobs for projects are "all hard," he said. "Why is this one good? I do these positive, uplifting things. And the networks want all these other things."

Hawkins said he hopes the climate will change with the ratings success of the CBS series "Touched by an Angel," which he called "my favorite show on the air right now."

Sister Prejean Receives Award From Catholic Medical School

CHICAGO (CNS) — In accepting an award from Loyola University's Stritch School of Medicine in Chicago, Sister Helen Prejean vowed to continue her fight for life in her ministry to death-row inmates. In an interview after her remarks, which drew a standing ovation, she reacted to the possibility the state of Delaware would seek the death penalty in the case of two teens accused of murdering their newborn. "It just means that another person will die and another family buries a loved one. We can do better than that," she said. Sister Prejean, a Sister of St. Joseph who is the author of the best-selling book "Dead Man Walking," was in Chicago Nov. 22 to accept the 1996 Sword of Loyola at the medical school's 45th annual benefit dinner.

Archbishop Weakland Undergoes Prostate Surgery

MILWAUKEE (CNS) — Milwaukee Archbishop Rembert G. Weakland underwent surgery Nov. 26 at St. Joseph Hospital for an enlarged prostate gland. His surgeon, Dr. John F. Pope, performed routine prostate surgery to relieve a blockage. The one-hour procedure was successful and a complete recovery was anticipated, according to an announcement from the archdiocese.

Vatican Officials Unveil Logo, Release Attendance Projections For Jubilee

By LYNNE WEIL
VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In preparation for the Great Jubilee of the Year 2000, officials in Rome and Vatican City announced expected attendance figures and plans for marking the millennium, and unveiled the logo for the Jubilee.

The officials made their announcements in separate press conferences Nov. 12.

The Jubilee logo, designed by a 22-year-old former art student from the Italian region of Umbria, features five doves closely circling one another so that their wings resemble the petals of a flower. From the center of the circle emanates a burst of white to symbolize salvation.

Each dove is a different color, and a cross in matching colors forms the backdrop along with a blue ring representing the universe. The designer, Emanuela Rocchi, said the logo was inspired by her faith and the colorful, open countryside in which she was raised.

The logo is to be used on Vatican public communications concerning the Jubilee from now until the year 2000, when it also is expected to grace T-shirts, books, banners, post cards and any number of souvenirs.

Pilgrims and tourists to Rome are expected to double in number during Jubilee celebrations, officials said.

Rome government officials estimated that 46 million people, among them 26 million pilgrims, will visit during the year 2000. This means, they said, that excluding the times when special festivities will attract larger groups of people, there will be a daily average of 118,200 visitors, twice the present number.

"Of course, that is only a prediction," said Archbishop Sergio Sebastiani, secretary-general of the Vatican Jubilee committee. "It is based on estimated interest and our experience from previous Holy Years. But we have never had a Year 2000 before, so we do not know exactly how many to expect."

But the Vatican Jubilee planners were taking steps to ensure where possible that all the other details are accounted for.

The Jubilee committee's president, Cardinal Roger Etchegaray, noted that the committee was about to end its "pre-planning phase," which has lasted two years, and to enter its "phase of immediate preparation," which is to go on another two years.

The second phase was inaugurated, the cardinal said, when Pope John Paul II conducted a special Advent liturgy Nov. 30, celebrated in tandem with other local churches.

This event provided a segue into the liturgical year 1996-97, which the pope has dedicated to Jesus.

Vatican documents planned for release during the new liturgical year include a letter on ecumenical activities expected to take place during the Jubilee, and a statement concerning interfaith dialogue with Judaism, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism and other religions.

Cardinal Etchegaray noted that Pope John Paul has called for a meeting between leaders of the monotheist religions to take place in 1999, and that Jerusalem, and not Rome, has been suggested as its location.

Amid all the planning and designing for the Jubilee, organizers still have left at least one major question unanswered: when the celebrations actually will start.

"The pope will decide that," Cardinal Etchegaray said. "It is not a matter for our committee, it is a matter for the pope. And he will tell us when it is time."

Fish Story: Angling For Vatican City's Smoked Salmon Consumers

By JOHN THAVIS
VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The story smelled a little fishy from the start. According to a British newspaper, a Scottish seafood company cut off Pope John Paul II's supply of smoked salmon in November because the Vatican didn't pay its bill.

The president of Hebridean Seafoods, John McKenzie, told the Sunday Telegraph that it took a miracle to get money out of the Vatican — it was easier to multiply loaves and fishes, he said.

Not true, said the Vatican in a rebuttal statement. The Holy See, it said, had canceled the contract with Hebridean after seven months because the quality of the fish wasn't up to par.

During that period, the Vatican said, it paid its bill in full: $24,000 for "McKenzie's Smokehouse" brand salmon.

All of which left just one question: Who's eating all the smoked salmon in Vatican City?

This wasn't fishsticks, after all, but the vacuum-packed gourmet item that's usually found at cocktail parties. Vatican City boasts a population of 471; any way you slice it, that's a lot of salmon canapes per capita.

It wasn't the pope. "The Holy Father and his household have nothing to do with this story," the Vatican statement said. Anyway, the Polish-born pontiff reportedly prefers Baltic herring as a piscatorial treat.

The salmon trail, as most insiders guessed immediately, eventually led to a nondescript building a few hundred feet inside Vatican City gates, across from the Vatican pharmacy and kitty-corner to the post office.

There's no sign on the door. But the hundreds of bargain-seeking shoppers who pack its aisles don't need one: To get to the Vatican Supermarket, just follow the multitude.

Technically known as the "Spaccio Annonario," the supermarket, perhaps after the Sistine Chapel, is one of the most crowded spots on the Vatican City map. It's open to current or retired Vatican employees, but appointed delegates can purchase here, too, and so can diplomats accredited to the Holy See and religious orders.

All in all, that puts the Vatican shopping population well into the thousands. They enter under the watchful eyes of police, with magnetic pass cards needed to open the doors.

Most people bring their cars, because they need it to haul away the volume of discounted goods. It's not unusual to see a mother superior carting off several hundred dollars worth of meat, or an elderly couple with a case of Austrian butter.

What's attractive here are the low prices on items ranging from coffee to shoe polish to — yes — smoked salmon. It's considered a built-in benefit for Vatican City workers, who theoretically are paid somewhat less than their Italian counterparts.

No Italian taxes or tariffs are paid on goods sold here, so some departments offer particular bargains. On the liquor shelf, for example, a good bottle of bourbon can be had for about $7.

The dairy section sells milk and yogurt from the cows at the papal villa in Castel Gandolfo outside Rome, and fresh eggs from the papal farm are available. In a nearby aisle, "Villa Pontificia" brand extra-virgin olive oil sells for about $10 a liter.

The supermarket implemented bar codes and other modernities only last year, when it remodeled and expanded. An adjunct now sells kitchen utensils and appliances.

The supermarket has some satellites throughout the 108-acre city-state. At one nearby outlet, tobacco products are also sold tax-free, on a strictly rationed basis to prevent profiteering.

And at a separate location farther up the Vatican hillside, clothing and electronic shops offer additional bargains. A shoe department was added last year, and when it ordered 100 pairs of world-famous Doc Martens boots, the pope's name was again mistakenly dragged into the consumer limelight.

Pope John Paul has never personally visited the supermarket, unlike some of his predecessors. When Pope Pius XI inaugurated the complex in 1931, he rode a forklift down the aisles.

Back in those days, smoked salmon was not so prominent in the Vatican City diet.

Archbishop Of Seattle Hospitalized

SEATTLE (CNS) — Archbishop Thomas J. Murphy of Seattle has been hospitalized with leukemia and reduced kidney function, but he remains in good spirits, according to an archdiocesan announcement Dec. 3.

The announcement confirmed an earlier, preliminary diagnosis of leukemia for the 64-year-old archbishop, who was admitted to Providence Seattle Medical Center Dec. 1 for tests.

"Archbishop Murphy's spirits are good and he is resting comfortably," said archdiocesan spokesman Jim Britt in a statement. "He is focused and has kept his sense of humor."

"Some members of the archbishop's family from Chicago have visited him in the hospital, and he has met with key members of his staff and remains involved in the day-to-day activities of the archdiocese," Britt added.

To treat his acute myelogenous leukemia and the related kidney complications, Archbishop Murphy will undergo kidney dialysis and apheresis, which Britt described as "a process to lower the level of leukemia cells in the archbishop's blood stream." In addition, a decision was expected Dec. 4 on when to begin chemotherapy.

"Archbishop Murphy is preparing to take on this new challenge in his life, and is deeply grateful for the prayers and messages of support he is receiving from the people of western Washington," Britt said in the statement.

A Chicago native, Archbishop Murphy was ordained a priest of the Chicago Archdiocese on April 12, 1958.

He was one of the last bishops to be appointed by Pope Paul VI, who died a month after naming him bishop of Great Falls, Mont., on July 5, 1978.

Archbishop Murphy took over as head of the Seattle Archdiocese in 1991.

Telling God's Story Through Musical Draws Parish Together

By PAUL FREDETTE

Correspondent
ARDEN — Dress rehearsal for the Nov. 23 performance of Marty Haugan's musical Tales of Wonder at St. Barnabas Church could be characterized as creative chaos. It would be easier to identify who in the parish was "not" involved in this extravaganza.

"This is the first time we've done anything on this scale and it's exciting," said Maria Horton, a member of St. Barnabas for the past 22 years. A member of the adult choir, Horton is fascinated by the way all the parts which had been practiced separately were finally coming together.

The principal cast of the musical was made up of the 15 teen-age members of the St. Barnabas Youth Music Group. The adult choir (23 strong) provided choral backup, and 15 St. Barnabas Minstrels — under the leadership of Paul Braese — added their talents as well.

Calling this a production of the parish was appropriate as the Knights of Columbus handled the spotlights and the fog machine; a four-piece band provided the accompaniment; 15 children, singing and miming, tried to steal the show; and the Ladies Guild provided a reception after the last bows were taken. In all, nearly 100 people contributed time, energy and talent to this intergenerational effort which was entertaining, inspiring and educational.

Suzanne Burlone, 16, a junior at Enka High School and one of the principal soloists, said, "It was a very moving experience for me seeing everyone join in with candles and streamers for Send Down the Fire." Burlone felt that one surprising benefit of all the long practices was the way they drew the cast of teens together. "Telling the story," says Burlone, "became a real goal for the whole group."

The performance of the musical resulted because of typical questions heard in Catholic homes. The dilemma, known to have paralyzed countless otherwise intrepid and diligent parents, surfaced this way. "Why is it," producer/director Rita Pisano's children asked, "that we say the same things over and over again all the time in church?" She found herself at a loss for a convincing answer until a copy of Haugan's Tales of Wonder unexpectedly fell into her lap.

There in the libretto was the perfect response. The contemporary style musical celebrates God as the "storyteller" who tells his story to people, who in turn continue to pass it on.

Despite more than 20 years musical experience, Pisano never anticipated undertaking such an unusual project. At first the very possibility seemed incredible to her. It wasn't until out of the blue, a friend mailed her a completely unsolicited videotape of their parish's production of this same musical that she discerned a "divine directive at hand."

Rita approached St. Barnabas pastor Father John Schneider and found him not only supportive but enthused at the prospect of an activity that would involve the parish in a cooperative effort.

Father Schneider, also a participant in the musical, thought Tales of Wonder was "a wonderful community-building experience for the whole parish." He also expressed his personal relief that the teens' initial fears that "he would ruin the number" proved groundless. His performance, like theirs, was a wonder to behold!

sions, and most of all of land.

Intermarriage with another clan, or failure to keep their land intact through the eldest son who, as our Hebrew Scriptures mention often, inherited everything, ate away at the lifeblood of the family. Arab nomads in some areas continue that levirate tradition even today.

For the Jews, however, the predominant reason was simply to assure that the deceased father would have an heir who could continue his family.

By the time of Jesus, the levirate law very possibly was only past history, at least among his people.

This fact would not have prevented religious leaders of that day from debating at length such questions as we find in Matthew's story, which Mark and Luke thought worth passing on as well.

Other passages dealing directly or indirectly with levirate marriage are in Deuteronomy 25:5-10; and Ruth 4.

A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about receiving the Holy Eucharist is available by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 804 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701. Questions should be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

listening and loving to make a lasting change.

A beach can be just a beach, a dinner just a dinner, a family just a family. Or a beach can be a glorious meeting of sea, sun and sand that only God could create. A dinner can be another opportunity to remember the one, true Source of all our Blessings. A family can be a fellowship in which each member is reverently and lovingly regarded as one of God's unique masterpieces.

This Advent, stay awake to the unexpected ways in which God silently and lovingly comes to you.

Bishops Lead Congregation In Prayer On World AIDS Day, from page 1

One mother wept after receiving a blessing from the four bishops during the laying on of hands. Members of the congregation clung to one another as others rang handbells in remembrance of those with AIDS who have died. While there were expressions of grief and pain, a feeling of serenity and comfort was evident during the sign of peace.

Ultimately, the bishops led a prayer not only for a healing of the body, but also of the spirit and heart. The Rev. Randy Votsch, pastor of the Metropolitan Community Church in Charlotte, called the event an inclusive, consoling one.

Echoing a sentiment that was communicated throughout the world on Dec. 1 — that AIDS does not discriminate against race, creed or sex — the Rev. Votsch said he felt a true sense of ecumenical spirit.

"To feel embraced by four of the most powerful mainline denominations in existence ... that really was powerful and healing," he added.

Louisiana Bishop Voices 'Grave Concerns' Over Welfare Reform

LAFAYETTE, La. (CNS) — Bishop Edward J. O'Donnell of Lafayette voiced "grave concerns" over federal welfare reform that took effect Oct. 1 and its impact on Louisiana's poor. "Time limits and lectures are no substitute for jobs and wages that can support a family," he said in a statement read by Una Hargrave, director of the diocesan Office for Justice and Peace, at a welfare forum held in Lafayette during November. Bishop O'Donnell said his diocese would work with state officials, but reminded participants that diocesan offices "cannot solve all the needs of the poor."

Stop Balancing Budget On Backs Of Poor, Priest Says

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The poor have already paid a disproportionate price in efforts to balance the federal budget, and must not suffer more, a Catholic Charities official said at a Nov. 26 press conference. "In the name of the 30 million Americans living in poverty, we must insist: Enough is enough! There cannot and must not be more budget cuts to programs that serve poor people," said Father John White, associate director of Catholic Charities for the Diocese of Rockville Centre, N.Y. "We have no quarrel with the effort to cut the deficit and reduce the debt. We support that effort," Father White said. "But we cannot remain silent as poor families become the soft underbelly of deficit reduction."

Federal Court Allows Richmond Churches To Conduct Meal Ministry

RICHMOND, Va. (CNS) — A federal judge has given temporary permission for a group of six Richmond churches to continue a Sunday afternoon meal ministry to the homeless that ran afoul of a city zoning ordinance and brought complaints from neighbors. U.S. District Judge Robert E. Payne Nov. 22 issued a temporary restraining order against a zoning board ruling to allow the ecumenical group, called the Stuart Circle Parish, to continue its feeding program in a Lutheran church. The order was good for 10 days and could be extended once the church group filed suit in federal district court to overturn the city's restriction of its meal ministry.

Vatican Conferences To Examine Delicate Church History Subjects

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Anti-Semitism, the Inquisitions and other delicate subjects pertaining to church history are to be examined at length in Vatican-sponsored initiatives leading up to the Great Jubilee of the Year 2000, Vatican officials said. "These are of course very difficult topics," papal theologian Father Georges Cottier told Catholic News Service Nov. 27. "Especially where the Inquisitions are concerned, because there are so many slogans and fixed ideas involved. So naturally they have to be treated in a deliberate, conscientious way." Father Cottier, a member of the committee coordinating Jubilee events, said the Vatican would release a study on anti-Semitism next year and hold a seminar on the Inquisitions sometime in 1998.

Vatican Affirms Indian Bishops' Role As Guardians Of Faith

ROME (CNS) — While pointing out the danger of some trends in Catholic theology in India, Vatican officials also affirmed that Indian bishops have the major responsibility for ensuring adherence to church teaching, one of the bishops said. "If any problem arises, it will be the local bishop, the bishops' conference and the bishops' doctrinal commission who must work it out," said Bishop Gali Bali of Guntur, India. "There will be no rush for the (Vatican) doctrinal congregation to come in, unless the problem becomes more serious," Bishop Bali, president of the Indian bishops' doctrinal commission, told Catholic News Service in Rome.

Survey: Birth Of Jesus Not Christians' First Thought At Christmas

ST. LOUIS (CNS) — When asked what makes Christmas an important day, fewer than half of all Christians surveyed said it is the birth of Jesus. Only 29 percent of the Catholics in the group said the birth of Christ is the most significant aspect of the season, according to a study conducted by Lutheran Hour Ministries and released Nov. 28 in St. Louis. It said 37 percent of all Christians, and 33 percent of all adults — Christian and non-Christian — identified the birth of Jesus as the most significant factor. The most likely answer in the survey was family time, mentioned by 45 percent of the 1,006 adults in the survey, conducted by the Barna Research Group. Taken together, the birth of Christ and family time accounted for about eight of every 10 responses about what makes Christmas important.

Cardinal Law Prays For Salvi Following Apparent Suicide In Prison

BOSTON (CNS) — Boston Cardinal Bernard F. Law responded to news of the apparent suicide of convicted murderer John C. Salvi III by praying for him and for his parents, said John Walsh, spokesman for the Archdiocese of Boston. Salvi, a 24-year-old Catholic hairdresser from New Hampshire, killed two people and wounded five others during a 1994 shooting spree at two abortion clinics in suburban Boston. He was found dead in his cell at Walpole State Prison Nov. 29. Prison officials found Salvi under his bunk with a plastic garbage bag around his head.

Priest's Murder Stuns Chicago Shortly After Cardinal's Death

By BILL BRITT

CHICAGO (CNS) — Holy Angels parishioners in Chicago were still recovering from the death and funeral of Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin when they learned of the murder of Father Paul B. Smith, principal of their elementary school for 24 years.

"It was a double whammy," said Father John W. Calicott, Holy Angels' pastor. "This parish is a strong parish. We have God, the Holy Spirit and the ability to endure. That is exactly what Paul would want us to do."

From 1970 until 1994, when an automobile accident left him partially paralyzed, Father Smith headed Holy Angels School in one of the poorest neighborhoods of Chicago's South Side. With nearly 1,300 students, it has long been the largest black Catholic elementary school in the country and one of the most successful.

Father Smith, 64, was found dead in his apartment the morning of Nov. 23. His hands and feet were bound and his nose and mouth were covered with duct tape. He died of suffocation.

Burrell Gerald Jr., 36, who started working three months ago as Father Smith's night caretaker, turned himself in to police Nov. 24. Police said he confessed to robbing, tying and gagging the priest with the help of two friends, Fred and Freeman Carter.

Police said Nov. 26 that they had arrested Gerald and the Carters, 32-year-old twins, and charged them with robbery and murder.

According to Officer Patrick Camden of the Chicago Police Department's news affairs division, after Father Smith retired for the night about 10 p.m. Nov. 22, Gerald stole his money and car keys, took the car and purchased crack cocaine. After smoking the crack, Gerald and the Carters allegedly returned to the priest's home to get more money.

When Father Smith woke up and confronted them, they bound him with telephone wire and duct tape, police said. They covered his eyes, nose and mouth with duct tape and left. When his day nurse arrived the following morning, she found him dead on the floor next to his bed.

Franciscan Sister Helen Strueder, who has been at Holy Angels School since 1960 and is now its principal, said that as a black priest Father Smith provided the students with an important role model of an adult male who resolved things without violence.

"We really complemented each other," she said. "He was warm and outgoing, and I was the one running things behind the show."

"It was very important for our boys to see a male being warm and gentle, and yet smart and fair," she said. "He will be remembered for a long time."

"It is a tragedy. Quite simply a tragedy," said Father Robert Miller, Holy Angels' associate pastor, who visited Father Smith the morning of Nov. 22 to give him Communion and some tips on the use of e-mail and Windows 95 on Father Smith's new computer.

He said Father Smith was excited about the new communications possibilities the computer offered, since his 1994 accident had impaired his speech and forced him to rely on a wheelchair to get around.

"He pushed the children at this school to be the best they could be," Father Miller said. "Father Smith knew that it is the urban child, the black urban child, that needs a good education most. He needs it as a weapon against racism."

Chicago Auxiliary Bishop George Murry was to be principal celebrant of the funeral Mass Nov. 30 at Holy Angels Church.

Father Smith was to be buried in Alexandria, La., where he was ordained a priest in 1962 and served for eight years before taking the Holy Angels School post. He was a native of Baltimore.

SPARTA — The mission church dedicated to St. Frances of Rome celebrates 30 years of existence in 1996, thus marking more than a quarter-century of Catholic evangelization in North Carolina's Alleghany County.

Before the early 1960s, Catholics in that mountain county trekked over the hills to Elkin or North Wilkesboro to celebrate Mass. But in 1961, priests from North Wilkesboro began to travel to Sparta and gathered for services in residents' homes.

The local Catholics proved to be an industrious lot during the 1960s, with Masses being celebrated at the Sparta Community Center, the Veterans of Foreign Wars Hall and the cafeteria of a shoe factory.

Though small in number, the Catholic population was determined to spiritually reinforce its presence by building a church. In 1965, Mary Ann Robinson — a New York Catholic whose nephew, Ed Darr, was one of the original parishioners of the congregation — paved the way for construction to begin. With a grant from the Catholic Church Extension Society, building was underway.

Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh dedicated the church in May 1966 in memory of Frances Payne Darr, Ed Darr's mother.

The church continued to be staffed by priests from North Wilkesboro until 1976. During that year, St. Francis of Assisi Church in Jefferson assumed pastoral care of the Sparta congregation. Priests of the Glenmary Home Missioners also arrived to serve at the churches in Alleghany and Ashe counties. In addition to shepherding the faithful in the area, the Glenmary Fathers established a religious education program during their early presence as well.

In the mid-1980s, the St. Frances of Rome family began a fund-raising drive with the intention of building a multi-purpose education building. After again turning to the Catholic Church Extension Society for assistance, the congregation oversaw the building's construction. Bishop John Donoghue of Charlotte blessed and dedicated the structure in October 1986 at a Mass attended by more than 200 church members, friends and clergy.

With Bishop Donoghue presiding, Glenmary Father John Otterbacher — then pastor — celebrated the Mass of Dedication. Members of the congregation, who had called the fund drive a "journey in faith," could now enjoy a stronger sense of home with the addition. The building includes not only classrooms, but a reception hall and kitchen as well.

Church membership in Sparta has increased from the three families who originally came together in worship. Participation of families living in the Carolina mountains during summer months has enhanced the Catholic population as well, and currently some 45 families make up the dedicated, caring congregation.

The Very Reverend Roland Hautz, a Glenmary, arrived in Jefferson in 1988 to begin serving St. Francis of Assisi Church and its mission in Sparta. Through his active service — and that of lay missioners and a brother also representing the order — the Glenmary presence is still felt in Alleghany and Ashe Counties.

Eight Weeks After Appendectomy, Pope Visits Rome Parishes

ROME (CNS) — Eight weeks after an appendectomy, Pope John Paul II was on the road again — at least in his own diocese of Rome.

The pope, resuming a series of parish visits interrupted earlier in the year by illness and surgery, traveled Dec. 1 to one of Rome's newest churches on the eastern outskirts of the city.

Some 8,000 parishioners braved an icy wind to welcome the 76-year-old pontiff, who spent more than two hours celebrating Mass, meeting with groups and shaking people's hands.

It was the pope's 250th parish visit since his election in 1978, when he announced that he wanted to get to know his diocese better. He clearly enjoys the chance to see local churches close-up, and the latest visit was no exception.

When a 9-year-old named Sara asked him what he did when he was young, the pope responded that he tried to grow up — by learning school subjects and by trying to gain some wisdom along the way.

Basically, he said, he tried to be more like Christ every day.

In a sermon, the pope said he was counting on parishes in Rome to lead a spiritual renewal for the year 2000. He praised a plan to send some 10,000 men and women into people's homes and workplaces over the next three years to spread the Gospel.

Before leaving, he was cheered by a group of Scouts, who waved their neckerchiefs in the air.

Annual Christmas Dinner Spreads Holiday Cheer

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — An important component of the Church's ministry is helping the needy, says Sharon Davis of the Charlotte Office of Catholic Social Services. Assisting in a Charlotte Yuletide tradition dating back more than 20 years, the social worker joins scores of people to present the annual St. Patrick Christmas Dinner Dec. 25 in the St. Patrick School cafeteria.

For nearly a quarter-century, the dinner has provided thousands of meals and countless hours of holiday friendship.

"There are persons who, for whatever reason, are hurting at Christmas time," says Davis. Catholic Social Services is one of the more than 20 agencies helping a group of volunteers make Christmas merry and bright for hundreds of Charlotte area folks.

Like Davis, representatives from those agencies — church, civic and private organizations — refer clients and other area citizens who may otherwise spend the holiday season alone. The tradition found its beginnings in the homes of St. Patrick parishioners, who "adopted" needy families at Christmas by cooking meals for and spending time with them.

"It has grown by leaps and bounds every year," says Jerry Jones. He has been a key organizer of the dinner since the early 1980s, when the outreach moved out of people's homes and into the school cafeteria.

The event has become an ecumenical and collaborative effort, with an estimated 300 to 400 volunteers representing a variety of faiths — both Christian and non-Christian — participating each year.

Jones says that some 2,500 meals were served in 1995, either at the cafeteria or via deliveries across the city. Buses from the Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools system provide transportation, local musicians entertain, professional chefs coordinate the cooking, and area businesses, hotels and citizens donate time, supplies, and, yes, some elbow grease to the venture. The absence of any of the ingredients, says Jones, would render the project impossible.

Organizers emphasize that the gathering is intended for anyone desiring to spend a few hours on Christmas Day in the fellowship of other Charlotteans. With the help of the agency contacts, however, they say that those who may experience particular needs — be they financial, spiritual or social — have the chance to share the holiday with extended family.

Jones says that the scene at St. Patrick and throughout the city has yielded touching memories that both volunteers and those who are served carry with them through the years.

"We've had folks who don't want to get back on the bus," Jones adds with a chuckle. "They want to stay with us all afternoon." The volunteers try to reach out as many people as possible; quite a few deliveries have been made to people spending their Christmas Day under city bridges or around makeshift fireplaces in the streets.

"They really do a marvelous job," says Linda McGuire, director of the Salvation Army's residential program, about the volunteers. Last Christmas, she helped bring more than 100 people assisted by the organization to the dinner, and notes that they look forward to the event this year.

Working with people who need both emergency and longer-term housing, McGuire — like her clients — appreciates the dedication of the dinner volunteers. "It really helps a lot," she adds.

The feast is funded entirely through donations and is prepared and served thanks to the Christmas spirit of volunteers. While the volunteer corps is well-established, it constantly needs financial contributions to ensure that the dinners will continue. Gifts for the needy are purchased with remaining moneys (Santa Claus usually makes a visit) and leftover food is given to local shelters.

From start to finish, volunteers and guests alike partake in the essence of sharing. As Sharon Davis puts it, the holiday dinner allows everyone involved "to share in the joys of Christmas."

If you or someone you know is interested in attending or receiving the Christmas dinner, or if you would like to make a financial contribution or to donate a gift to ensure its continuation, call St. Patrick's parish office, (704) 334-2283. The cafeteria of St. Patrick School is at 1125 Buchanan Street.

Mother Teresa Stabilized With Mild Electric Shock Treatment

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Doctors have successfully stabilized Mother Teresa's heartbeat by administering a mild electric shock treatment, said one of her doctors at the B.M. Birla Heart Research Center in Calcutta.

"At this point she is stable and it is hoped that the sinus (regular) rhythm will remain," said Dr. Patricia Abunel, a member of the eight-member team treating Mother Teresa.

The cardioversion, in which a shock pad attached to a machine was placed on Mother Teresa's chest, was performed on the morning of Dec. 11.

"It was mild electric shock and it lasted for a few seconds," said Dr. Tarun Praharaj. "She was under sedation and the entire procedure was over within an hour, and we have to observe her for a minimum of 48 hours now."

Abunel said that immediately after the procedure was finished, Mother Teresa asked, "Is it over? Did it work?" When doctors informed her that it was successful she said, "Wonderful. Let us go home now."

The 86-year-old Nobel laureate had asked doctors to let her go home Dec. 9, and two days earlier she met with nuns from her Missionaries of Charity order at the hospital.

Her nuns reported that Mother Teresa looked well and added, "She is very alert. She is issuing detailed instructions to her nuns, and she is very much in control of the show."

Mother Teresa last underwent cardioversion in August. Doctors at the Birla center performed angioplasty on Mother Teresa's heart Nov. 29 to remove blockages in two of her major coronary arteries.

Bishop Begley Remembers

Bringing People Together To Build A Church

The following is the second of three installments covering the priestly career of retired Bishop Michael J. Begley, first bishop of the Diocese of Charlotte. On Jan. 12, 1997, the diocese will celebrate Bishop Begley's 25th anniversary and the Silver Anniversary of the Diocese of Charlotte.

By MARY COYNE WESSLING

CHARLOTTE — It didn't take Monsignor Michael J. Begley long to accept the office of bishop for the newly formed Diocese of Charlotte. He would have liked to have given it more prayerful thought but his boss, Bishop Vincent Waters, asked for an immediate answer.

Almost as quickly, Msgr. Begley was given the task of building a diocese that would cover 21,000 square miles, including some 40 parishes and missions, two Catholic colleges, two Catholic high schools, several parochial schools, a network of social services, and a summer camp.

The first thing he did, with the guidance of Bishop Waters, was appoint 10 fellow priests as his consultants. "They were a tremendous help in getting things started," recalled Bishop Begley. "I also got a lot of help and support from the Knights of Columbus and the Catholic Daughters. They were invaluable in helping chart a course for the new diocese."

Msgr. Begley spent the latter part of 1971 in meeting after meeting getting things in order. His ordination as bishop would take place the following January at St. Patrick Church, the designated cathedral parish for the new prelate.

The Rite of Ordination, written up in numerous secular papers as well as the statewide Catholic paper, heralded the new diocese of the Piedmont and Western North Carolina. The press made much ado about the new bishop who was considered a friend to many, a good priest and faithful servant who had already given 38 years of service to the Church in the Tarheel State.

But the new bishop spent little time basking in the glow of compliments, for there was much work to do.

"I was, I suppose, nervous about leading a diocese, but I drew on past experiences as a priest and reflected on what I had learned from the bishops I served under. I always kept in mind that I needed other good people to help me guide the growth of the diocese," he said.

Always the diplomat, Bishop Begley chose to take things slowly, changing as little as he could at first, in deference to the good work Bishop Waters had done over the years. Nonetheless, the challenges of a growing Catholic population were evident in the early '70s.

It was a welcomed challenge. During his tenure, Bishop Begley would oversee the establishment of new parishes and construction projects on numerous parish properties. He would travel thousands of miles every year to visit his parishes and his people. Already a friend to many through his years in parish work, he would never tire of making new ties with fellow Catholics.

In his years as the bishop of the Diocese of Charlotte, Michael Begley continued to nurture his love of the poor, the young and those who sought a richer spiritual life. Among his proudest achievements was his contributions to ministry in Appalachia. Along with the other bishops of the region, Bishop Begley drew up the pastoral letter, This Land is Home to Me, which detailed the struggles of the poor in that region and called for a stronger commitment from the Church to minister to their needs.

"While most of the poor in that region were not members of the Catholic Church, they were still our neighbors — our brothers and sisters. We had a commitment to help them in any way we could, using whatever resources we had available. Some good Sisters and the Maryknoll Fathers were key in carrying out our mission there," Bishop Begley said.

In 1979, Bishop Begley found himself in the midst of a labor dispute involving the powerful J.P. Stevens Company. Along with Bishop F. Joseph Gossman of the Diocese of Raleigh, he issued a statement calling for the textile company to allow a union election to take place. Citing several Catholic documents, Bishops Begley and Gossman supported the right of workers to organize, despite strong criticism from the company and a few prominent Catholics in the diocese. Eventually the election was held and the union voted down by a slim margin. In subsequent interviews, Bishop Begley was asked if the effort was worth it. He replied that if given the chance again, he would take it.

Throughout his years as the active bishop, Michael Begley developed a fondness for programs which promoted spirituality. An enthusiastic celebrant, he felt right at home at diocesan Charismatic gatherings and Cursillo weekends.

"I believe the people who participated in these groups shared a great responsibility in expressing the Lord's love. I encouraged and nurtured these groups. I believe that bringing people together in this way was an important part of building our Church," he said.

In 12 years, Bishop Begley experienced his share of obstacles in building a strong diocese. Any success he enjoyed, he said, was due in large part to the dedication of his priests, women religious and the laity who served him.

When asked how he would describe himself as a leader, Bishop Begley replied, "I always played it straight with my priests. I allowed a certain amount of difference of opinion. We agreed to disagree. I thought that was healthy," he said. "Even if we could not agree on everything, I knew they were good men who had the potential of reaching people I may never have reached on my own and bringing them into the Church."

"It takes a lot of patience and prayer to be a good bishop. Lots of prayer. Trying to be helpful is the key to being a good Catholic as well as a good bishop," he added.

Mary Coyne Wessling served under Bishop Begley for six years as assistant editor of The North Carolina Catholic.

Bishops' President Urges Clinton To Boost Foreign Aid

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Generous foreign aid is not an extravagance for the United States "but a moral responsibility," said the president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops in a letter to President Clinton.

"A leadership position among nations demands, as Pope John Paul II consistently reminds us, that developed nations respond with generosity to the needs of the world's poor," wrote Cleveland Bishop Anthony M. Pilla, president of the NCCB.

The letter was written at the request of the U.S. bishops in a vote during their mid-November meeting in Washington. Dated Nov. 15, the letter was released by the NCCB Dec. 5.

It notes that through its charitable programs such as Catholic Relief Services, the U.S. Church is attuned to the needs, suffering and early death of millions of people in the poorest parts of the world.

"We also know what U.S. commitment and leadership can mean in preventing these deaths and avoiding terrible human tragedies," it said.

"As one of the wealthiest of industrial nations, our country should be in the forefront of international development assistance," Bishop Pilla's letter said. "Unhappily, we stand at the bottom of the industrial nations in the proportion of GNP devoted to aid for the poorest countries."

Bishop Pilla asked Clinton to lead the nation in honoring its obligations of justice and charity toward "the most vulnerable of our brothers and sisters in the world."

He encouraged "the highest feasible level of increase" in aid that promotes grass-roots development and emergency relief and for programs that meet basic human needs.

Hmong New Year Celebrated In Lenoir

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

LENOIR — On the weekend of Nov. 29-30 at the Caldwell County Fairgrounds, Hmong from all over the U.S. gathered for their annual New Year's celebration. For the immigrants and refugees from Southeast Asia, it was a time to keep their rich traditions and culture alive.

With the weather cooperating on Friday, many outdoor activities were enjoyed by young and old. Soccer tournaments and volleyball games continued throughout the day. More traditional games were also played such as "ball tossing" (a common courtship ritual with singing), top spinning and "kato" (ancient games similar to volleyball and hackey sac). Games continued on Saturday despite the unrelenting rain as spectators, many in full traditional dress, watched with umbrellas in hand.

Traditional Hmong cuisine was prepared, including many rice dishes, stir-fry, and desserts. Handmade crafts like "Paj ntaub" or "flower cloth," with bright-colored applique could also be purchased. The flower cloth, dating back 2,000 years, has particular significance because symbols and stories are embroidered in the cloth as a way to transmit the Hmong culture.

Music also filled the fairground, with a mix of traditional chanting and singing called "Kwv Txiaj" and modern Hmong music popular with the youth. The second day's activities included a large dance with many captivating performances. A variety of traditional clothing was worn, colors and styles depending on the clan's region in South Asia.

The event came to a close with a special Mass on Dec. 1 for the Catholic Hmong, their families and friends at St. Charles Borromeo Church in Morganton. Father Bill Tanguay, director of East Coast Ministry to the Hmong, concelebrated with Father Ken Whittington, pastor of St. Charles Borromeo, and Father Jerry Orsino, Southeast Asian Consultant for Pastoral Care for Migrants and Refugees in Washington, D.C. Father Tanguay recently returned to the Hickory area for eight months.

In his homily, Father Orsino praised Father Tanguay's ministry work in Laos, China and the U.S. "He (Father Tanguay) is every inch an apostle of Christ," Father Orsino said.

Father Orsino also spoke of his encounters with the Hmong people, describing them as heroic, hospitable people of faith. He passionately gave accounts of Hmong martyrs and encouraged their stories to be told. "Because of the strong faith you have brought to America, you are now the missionaries in this country," he added.

Hmong families brought baskets of eggs and new rice (a symbol of prosperity or having enough to eat) to the Mass. These items, along with water, were blessed by the priests. The ancient custom of eating the eggs for the New Year as a means of "good luck and new life" was combined with the blessing of God so the New Year could be filled with new life in Him.

Below: Hmongs from all over the U.S. gathered in Lenoir for the New Year celebration.

The celebration concluded with a Mass and "blessing of the eggs" at St. Charles Church in Morganton.

Natural Family Planning Frees Women, Pope Says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II defended natural family planning as an effective method of spacing births and said it frees women from "unjust" programs of birth control.

He called on parishes and other organizations involved in counseling married couples to make sure an expert in natural family planning is available.

"The scientific validity of these methods and their educational value make them increasingly appreciated," the pope said Dec. 7. He was addressing a group of Italian Catholics taking a natural family planning course in Rome.

The Church teaches that contraceptive birth control is morally wrong, but it accepts methods that rely on periodic abstinence for the spacing of births.

Pope John Paul said the Church-approved methods were proper because they require husband and wife to cooperate in a responsible way. Unlike contraceptives, he said, they also promote a type of "human ecology," a balance between respect for nature and human behavior.

"On a worldwide level, this choice supports the process of freedom and emancipation of women and of populations from unjust programs of family planning," he said.

He said these international programs have brought along with them a "sad parade of various forms of contraception, abortion and sterilization."

The pope said the Church should make sure its own agencies know how to give instruction in natural methods of family planning.

"The moment has come when every parish and every organization for counseling and assisting families and the defense of life should have personnel available who are capable of educating couples in the use of the natural methods," he said.

He urged bishops, pastors and Catholic lay leaders to welcome this development.

Pope Says Christian Parents Should Use Mary And Joseph As Models

Dear brothers and sisters,

Our catechesis today speaks of the veneration of Mary as the Mother of God. Like that of other women, Mary's motherhood was not limited to giving birth. It also included raising her child and helping him grow to adulthood. In the Holy Family of Nazareth, Jesus found in Mary a model of perfect love for God and for others. It was by Mary and Joseph that Jesus was first introduced to the religion and traditions of the people of Israel and was prepared for his earthly mission. Amid the many challenges of raising children today, parents can look to Mary and Joseph as they strive to help their children to live a life worthy of the dignity and vocation which God has given them.

Pope Marks Feast Of Immaculate Conception

ROME (CNS) —

Pope John Paul II

kicked off pre-Christmas ceremonies in Rome with a traditional visit to a statue of Mary in downtown Rome and a torchlight parade at the Vatican.

Marking the feast of the Immaculate Conception Dec. 8, the pope laid flowers and knelt in prayer at the statue near the Spanish Steps. In a brief talk, he urged Romans to take inspiration from Mary's spiritual beauty, even as they enjoy the harmony of their own city and its art.

Visitors to Rome should find not only architectural splendors, but also a renewed Christian spirit among its people, he said.

Advent Gospel Presents Story Of John The Baptist's Testimony To Jesus

The gospel passage (John 1:6-8, 19-28) for the third Sunday of Advent is the story of John the Baptist's testimony to Jesus. The fourth gospel, as we know it today, begins with a magnificent poetic prologue, starting, "In the beginning was the word." The prologue was an early Christian hymn prefixed to the gospel, which probably began originally with John the Baptist, as does the reading according to Mark. The first three verses of this Sunday's reading, in which John is introduced, have been inserted into the prologue; the rest of the reading constitutes the beginning of the gospel proper.

John the Baptist is introduced to the reader with the same terminology used of Jesus throughout this gospel: "He was sent from God." And that is the end of the similarity between the two. From here on, the author of this gospel takes great pains to subordinate the role of John to Jesus. Why? Because in early Christian times there were disciples of John the Baptist around (they are actually mentioned in Acts 18), who could have claimed that their master was superior to Jesus because Jesus had come to him to be baptized. So, after mentioning the common element between Jesus and John (namely, that they were both sent from God), the author goes on to emphasize the difference between them: John "came for testimony, to testify to the light (that is, to Jesus), so that all might believe (in Jesus) through him."

Then, after the prologue, comes the rest of the reading. According to the story, two groups come to John to ask him who he is. First, the religious authorities from Jerusalem send priests and Levites, who ask him whether he is the Messiah, or Elijah, or the prophet expected to come at the end of time. In this gospel alone the author repeatedly pictures Jesus saying, "I am." To underscore John's subordinate role to that of Jesus, the author cleverly pictures John here as saying, "I am not the Messiah." All that the author pictures John saying positively is applying to himself the opening strophe of Second Isaiah, which constituted our first reading last Sunday, "I am the voice of one crying out in the desert, 'make straight the way of the Lord.'"

Then a second group is sent, some Pharisees, who inquire about John's right to baptize. To them he replies, "I baptize with water." But then he is pictured adding, "There is one among you whom you do not recognize." In this gospel, John's baptism is simply preparatory; his role is to give testimony to Jesus, to reveal Jesus to Israel.

Our first reading, from the book of Isaiah (61:1-2, 10-11), is that which the author of the gospel according to Luke has Jesus read in the synagogue of Nazareth, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord (Yahweh) has anointed me to bring good news to the oppressed, to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to captives and release to prisoners...and a jubilee year," when persons returned to their homes, all debts were canceled, and slaves were set free. This text is to emphasize the role of Jesus as the permanent bearer of God's Spirit and the inauguration in Jesus of a new age of restoration, a new beginning.

And finally, our second reading comes from the end of the earliest work in the New Testament, the first letter of Paul to the Thessalonians (5:16-24). "Rejoice always," he begins, "pray constantly, give thanks in all circumstances," he continues in staccato fashion. He concludes with a beautiful prayer for the wholeness and integrity of the natural and supernatural aspects of a person's service of God: "May the God of peace make you perfectly holy and sanctify your spirit fully, and may both soul and body be preserved blameless for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

When Paul wrote this in the spring of A.D. 51, he was thinking of the second coming of Jesus, which he expected a few years from then. But since Jesus did not come back, we may think of it as the coming of Christ into our hearts spiritually at Christmas. May the God of peace make us holy through our Advent prayers, and sanctify our spirit fully, so that our whole being might be prepared and ready to receive the revelation that God has given us in Christ Jesus our Lord.

In Our Joys And Our Sorrows

As we move deeper into the Advent season, the Biblical account of the coming of Jesus speaks to each one of us about the joys and, yes, the sorrows surrounding Christmas.

The great Italian artist, Raphael, understood this well. In his beautiful "Alba Madonna," which hangs in the National Gallery in Washington, D.C., the Christ Child holds a little stick in the form of a cross. Raphael understood that the shadow of the cross is present in the Christ story from the beginning.

Surely it is easier to focus on the joyful aspects of the Nativity, but we cheat ourselves if we ignore the painful parts of the story. We do not like to suffer. We do not like to see others suffer. Consequently, we tend to gloss over this aspect of the story.

The joys are obvious. We can feel the joy of the shepherds who left their fields to adore the new born Babe and savior, and the joy of the faithful prophets, Simeon and Anna, when they encounter Jesus in the Temple and recognize that their lifelong dreams of the Messiah's coming have been realized.

But we can also feel the sorrow touching us from 2,000 years ago. The baby Jesus' life is in danger, while innocent children are slaughtered by Herod's soldiers. Jesus, Mary and Joseph are forced to flee their homeland and become refugees.

And we all know pain and sorrow in our own lives. In the past year, some of us have experienced the pain of loss in the death of a loved one. Some have experienced the pain of watching a young son or daughter leave home in rebellion and anger. Some people this Christmas season experience the pain of financial insecurity because of debt or unemployment.

So, during the coming weeks when the story of Jesus' birth is told and retold, you may feel unable to identify with it as in happier times. If you are hurting in this way, try to understand that in your sorrow there is much to identify with in the Christmas story.

In the person of Mary especially, both joy and sorrow meet.

She knew the joy of learning she would be the mother of the Messiah and feeling the Child grow within her. She also knew the painful uncertainties of the reaction of Joseph, her family and neighbors to her pregnancy as well as the physical strains of her journey and delivery.

When Mary and Joseph left their home in Nazareth to go to Bethlehem for a census, they expected to return in a few days. But they could not go back home. Because of Herod, they had to leave the country. Suddenly they were in a strange land without possessions. They had to find a place to live. Joseph had to look for work. A new baby had to be cared for. They had to endure hard times.

And what the Gospel writers are trying to tell us is that God is present to us in our experience of sorrow just as He was present to the Holy Family in their. God was at the cribs of those children slaughtered by Herod's soldiers. God was in the hearts of their mothers and fathers. We must understand that He is here in our sorrows. And He keeps coming to offer us life.

During Advent, let Him into the very center of your life. Deliverance is near at hand, the burden will be lifted, the healing will come — if you let God come into your life, in the Person of the Lord Jesus Christ. Both in our joys and in our sorrows we can welcome our Messiah.

Question Corner

Promises In Interfaith Marriages

Q. Seven years ago I married a Lutheran man in the Catholic Church. We had a beautiful ceremony in which my husband and his family were allowed to receive Communion.

Before we were married my husband was required to sign a statement that he would raise our children Catholic. In our vows we both promised to bring them up according to the laws of the Church.

A few days ago my brother married a Methodist. His wife and her family could not receive Communion. During the ceremony they did not promise to raise their children in the Church. Nor was his wife required to promise to raise their children Catholic.

Does each church make up its own rules? No wonder people say the Catholic Church contradicts itself.

A. Formerly, both the Catholic and non-Catholic partners signed promises to raise their children Catholic. This practice was changed by Pope Paul VI in a 1970 document ("Matrimonia Mixta") on interfaith marriages.

Since then, the basic procedure for the Catholic Church everywhere in the world is the following. The Catholic partner signs a statement affirming two points:

1. "I reaffirm my faith in Jesus Christ and intend to continue living that faith in the Catholic Church."

2. "I promise to do all in my power to share my faith with our children by having them baptized and raised as Catholics."

Obviously, these "promises" add nothing to what a knowledgeable and committed Catholic already believes and intends.

The non-Catholic partner signs nothing. The priest or other minister helping the couple before the marriage signs that the partner is aware of the belief and intent of the Catholic.

The Church then leaves it to the couple to work out before God any differences their personal faith and conscience require.

Every diocese or province in the United States has forms for couples to complete in this part of marriage preparation. If the procedure you describe for your marriage is accurate, and you should know, I cannot explain it. The official policy of the Church is otherwise.

You may be confused about one part of the vows in the marriage liturgy of the United States and most other English-speaking nations.

One question asks the bride or groom, in these or similar words, "Will you accept children lovingly from God and bring them up according to the law of Christ and His Church?" The obvious expected answer is yes.

This question and response are clearly understood, however, in light of the promises and commitments previously made by the couple, which I indicate above.

As for the difference about receiving Communion, the guidelines of the Catholic Church for sharing worship and the sacraments permit people not of our faith to receive Communion with us under certain conditions.

We cannot discuss details of those conditions here, but depending on the circumstances the priest could have acted properly and in accord with Catholic regulations at both your and your brother's marriages. (See 1993 Vatican Directory on Ecumenism, Nos. 129-131.)

A free brochure, in English or Spanish, outlining marriage regulations in the Catholic Church and explaining the promises in an interfaith marriage, is available by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Questions should be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

Loving Others Includes Concern For Their Salvation

Father John Catoir, in his recent response to a woman who was concerned about her lesbian daughter's lifestyle, quoted from St. Luke's Gospel: "...Do not judge and you will not be judged. Do not condemn and you will not be condemned...."

But our Lord also counseled us regarding fraternal correction: "If your brother does something wrong, go and have it out with him alone, between your two selves. If he listens to you, you have won back your brother. If he does not listen, take one or two others along with you...but if he refuses to listen to these, report it to the community (the Church); and if he refuses to listen to the community, treat him like a pagan or a tax collector."

(Matthew 18:15-17)

Surely most people today are familiar with the phrase "tough love," which requires great courage to put into practice in order to save someone you love from destroying themselves physically. We seem to have grown fainthearted, however, in practicing a spiritual "tough love" in order to, as St. Jude puts it, save those we love "from the fire."

In supporting his views, Father Catoir says the supreme law of love must never be violated. But that law is predicated on loving others as we love ourselves. Surely my self-love leads me to desire my eternal salvation. Can I truly love others as myself if I am not as concerned about their salvation as I am about my own?

Adoption Services Reach Out To Many

In just five months, Catholic Social Services has assisted in 16 domestic adoptions and eight international adoptions, with 20 waiting in the wings.

By JOANN KEANE and
KATHY SCHMUGGE

CHARLOTTE — It's a joyous mix: Catholic Social Services and adoption.

As champions of life, the Catholic Church has long stood in the forefront of pro-life issues, and the adoption program administered by CSS is a natural extension of the mission of the Church. And this November's National Adoption Month provided an opportunity to recognize the continued interest in the adoption services offered by CSS.

Though not an agency to rest on its laurels, CSS has much to celebrate. In just five months, the agency has assisted in 16 domestic adoptions and eight international adoptions, with 20 waiting in the wings.

Though the network of CSS services reaches many facets of life, it is perhaps adoption that most often springs to mind when the social services ministry is mentioned. Motherless children are given to CSS for reasons stemming from the compassion that exudes from the agency. Childless parents come to the agency for its meticulous attention to detail. Each and every adoption is carefully scrutinized and legalities are continually reviewed.

But it's not the caution with paperwork that brings families together. Unlike independent processes, CSS does not terminate the relationship with their clients once the child is in the arms of his or her new parents. CSS staff diligently follow up with the birth mother and adoptive parents according to sound therapeutic practices and legal requirements. In addition to regular sessions, there are semi-annual get-togethers for all adoptive parents and children, where staff and parents have an opportunity to share their experiences, joys and concerns. Birth mothers, too, stay in touch with the agency for counseling as long as both parties feel it necessary. CSS also facilitates monthly group sessions for birth mothers. If requested, the birth mother can receive updates on their child if they so desire.

Selecting suitable parents is an in-depth process. First comes a home study — joint interviews between the social worker and prospective family. Additionally, there are six weeks of classes dealing with issues of adoptions, such as attitudes about adoption, parenting education and birth-parent issues. During one session, soon-to-be parents meet with a panel composed of a birth-parent, an adoptive parent and an adoptee.

There is no perfect method for selecting parents, says Jeannie Beall, CSS coordinator of Adoption and Pregnancy Support Services. "We set up the selection case by case, carefully weighing all factors. CSS is committed to the mutual needs of the child and parents," points out the adoption coordinator. Yet, Beall is quick to call attention to one critical factor; the couple's readiness to be parents.

With these issues discerned, perhaps one of the key issues for adoptive parents is fortitude. With an average waiting time for placement of a child of two years, patience truly becomes a virtue for the expectant parents. "We are fully supportive of the couple's journey to parenting via adoption and understand the difficulties in waiting," said Beall, The waiting also requires flexibility. While two years is the norm, if few restrictions — such as child's sex, age or race — are in place, a couple could be rocking their new tot sooner.

Adoption requires an investment of time, energy, money and commitment. Fees are based on income and type of adoption; international adoption often requires a trip to the child's homeland and stays of varying lengths of time.

Yet, the end result, as CSS hopes, is happy, healthy families: A child with a family, a family where there once was none.

For more information on adoption — domestic call Jeannie Beall, CSS (704) 343-3943, and Carol Meyerriecks in Asheville for international, (704) 255-0146.

El sentido de la Navidad

Por MEDARDO VITIER

Nace un niño que va a ser fundador de la religión más influyente de la historia. Navidad, Natividad, Nacimiento. ¿Y qué es nacer? Biológicamente lo sabe la ciencia, pero el hombre no queda explicado con la Biología tan sólo. Su naturaleza requiere que otras disciplinas la estudien y aclaren. El Cristo nace y es en lo humano, un individuo de la especie. Morfológicamente, su anatomía no difiere de la de Tiberio o la de Pilatos, o la de cualquiera de los Magos que le adoraron. Era, en punto a raza, un semita que conoció las posturas religiosas de los saduceos, los esenios, los fariseos. Fue sin embargo, en la Historia, una nota nueva, un judío de excepción, iluminado por un temprano sentido de humanidad.

Nacer, en el caso de Jesús, fue innovar. La doctrina que enseñó, introdujo una fuerza en la Historia diferente de los cultos orientales y de la filosofía griega. El Cristianismo aparece, precisamente, cuando las escuelas del pensamiento helénico se agotaban.

En la Navidad conmemoramos la aparición de un Evangelio de amor porque en efecto, lo que iba a nacer, con Jesús, era un mensaje de fraternidad entre los hombres. Ese mensaje nació. Viene aquí una pregunta terrible:

—¿Creció?—

Si por "crecer" entendemos, en este caso, extenderse, difundirse una enseñanza, afirmamos que creció, a virtud del interés de los apóstoles y de las primitivas comunidades cristianas, aquéllas a quien San Pablo dirigió sus famosas Epístolas, es decir, las de Corinto, Galacia, Efeso... Pero si por "crecer" entendemos, tratándose del Cristianismo, su esencial aceptación por los hombres, la verdad es que no creció. Quedó, y ahí refulge como una sugestión al espíritu, como una esperanza que hasta hoy alientan los mejores. Porque ni la mayoría lo practicó ni las minorías (de la raza del Santo de Asís), han prevalecido. Si no queremos engañarnos, lo cierto en todo esto es que la fuerte innovación de una hermandad universal y de un amor a los enemigos está pendiente de aceptación. Ha habido casos individuales para indicar que la doctrina cabe en lo humano, pero ninguna sociedad, ninguna raza, ningún pueblo de la historia ha vivido el ideal ético del Maestro a quien Reyes de Oriente ofrecieron dones en el pesebre, mientras un astro, dicen que lucía señor de los espacios, guiador de los peregrinos.

Herodes mandó a los rabinos que consultaran sus textos reveladores. Herodes se sobrecogió. ¿Extrañeza? ¿Terror? ¿Presentimiento? Su actitud es un símbolo. El mundo iba a cambiar. La esencia cristiana quedará virgen en cuanto a su acogida y práctica universal, pero la pugna, la voluntad de alteración que llevó al fluir de la Historia, cambiaron el rumbo de los acontecimientos. La cultura de Occidente se tiñe entera de voluntad cristiana. No digo de espíritu cristiano. No es la esencia del Cristianismo lo que da estructura y sentido a Europa sino la lucha por el triunfo de esa esencia. La doctrina, por otra parte, lucha ya, en algo desfigurada, medio rendida al adaptarse a realidades.

Por manera que "creció" agónicamente. Tal era su destino. Tal es la suerte de todo empeño mejorador. Así, que no ha fracasado. El fracaso está y grita en quienes no aceptan el programa de Cristo. No me refiero a su contenido sobrenatural, que es cosa de fe, sino a sus elementos humanos de ética fecunda, de amor coherente. Razonan mal los que sostienen que el Cristianismo ha fracasado. El fracaso es de quienes lo rechazan.

Apenas recuerdan el episodio de Belén los que festejan en días de Pascua. El motivo se desdibuja un poco. Nos quedamos no más con "la fiesta". Esa es también una desfiguración. No importa. La memoria humana procede así en muchos casos. Hay, no obstante, un signo de fecundidad en la Pascua, y proviene de la fecundidad del Cristianismo. Es cierto que en estos días no pensamos gran cosa en el Cristo y muchos ignoran que se divierten en fecha sagrada. Pero al juntarse la familia, al acercarse los hombres, al saludarse, al sonreír en estos días del año, disfrutan de un efecto cristiano. Si el mensaje tropezó y anda maltrecho, resuena todavía cuando junta a los hombres. Es la fecundidad del árbol que, en clima impropio, da frutos.

Razonan superficial, falsamente, quienes afirman perturbados por los horrores de la guerra, que fracasa el Cristianismo. Antes resalta su eficacia. Pero ésta no se da sino a condición de voluntad. Recuérdese que es también doctrina de libertad. Amor a los buenos y a los malos. Libertad de la conciencia. En eso consiste el lado humano del Evangelio. El divino, aparte de los misterios que no toco, ¿no radica ya en lograr esos postulados?

Muy actual es la misión de Juan el Bautista, precursor, que anunciaba a Jesús. Están por preparar "sus caminos". "Vox vociferantis in deserto. Parate viam Domini, complanate calles ejus".

Una Navidad espera el mundo. Esa no ha llegado nunca. Está en potencia. Hay quienes creen en su advenimiento, pero son pocos. La Navidad en que estemos contentos de ser hombres; la Navidad en que hayamos vencido al Demonio interior que señorea; la Navidad en que gobierne lo mejor de nuestra naturaleza. Instintos, pasiones, gobiernan ahora buena parte del mundo. ¿Qué Navidad celebramos? ¿La de Cristo? Está bien. Desfigurado y todo, el espíritu, todavía tiene fuerza para sugerirnos que el amor revela y engrandece, en tanto el odio confunde y achica.

La Navidad, alta, genuina, es una aspiración todavía.

Mensaje del Padre

Rev. VICENTE H. FINNERTY, C.M.

Navidad, 1996

Hermanos y Hermanas en Cristo:

Un niño... Muchas veces he observado de qué forma se le van los ojos, el corazón y las manos de la gente ante la presencia de un niño pequeño. ¡Quién hubiera podido tener en brazos unos minutos al Hijo de María!

Dios que nos conoce bien, que sabe de cuánta ternura es capaz nuestro corazón, quiso que su Hijo se presentara ante la humanidad en forma de niño. Sin más poder ni más riqueza que el amor de su madre. Ojalá que no tuviéramos entre nosotros otra riqueza y poder que el amor mutuo.

Vivimos en una sociedad en la que prácticamente se compra todo, menos el amor. Por eso, cuando Dios nos regala a su Hijo, cuando nos regala lo que más ama, ¿no nos indica que Navidad es el gran acontecimiento capaz de transformar cualquier corazón de piedra en un corazón de carne?

Casi todos tenemos la mala costumbre de compararnos con alguien que nos parece menos generoso o más egoísta que nosotros y esto nos hace creer que aportamos mucho más de lo que recibimos. Si de veras estamos convencidos de esta idea, pensemos en la Navidad. ¿Por qué no dejamos que nuestro corazón se sorprenda ante lo que Dios nos da y ante nuestra limitada respuesta? ¿Por qué no llenamos nuestro espíritu de la acogedora mirada de Jesús y olvidamos cualquier mirada que nos haya hecho sufrir?

Quisiera ofrecerle a cada uno, como regalo de Navidad, algo que le ayudará a ser feliz si lo usa mucho tiempo.

- Ten más capacidad de amar, que la que tenga cualquier persona de hacerte sufrir.
- Ten más capacidad de creer, que la que otro tenga de hacerte dudar.
- Ten más capacidad de ser paciente, que la que otro tenga de ser caprichoso.
- Ten más capacidad de gozo, que la que otro tenga de lamentarse.
- Ten más capacidad de servir, que la que tenga cualquier persona de descansar.

Hermanos y hermanas, si cuidan este regalo les sobrarán palabras para explicar qué es Navidad.

Deseando que el Señor nazca más plenamente en sus corazones esta Navidad y Año Nuevo, me quedo, Su siervo,

Padre Vicente

Padre Vicente Finnerty, C.M.

Millones se lamentan durante los funerales del Cardenal Bernardin

CHICAGO (CNS) —

Millones de residentes de Chicago se lamentaron durante los últimos ritos fúnebres por el Cardenal Joseph L. Bernardin el 20 de noviembre, quizás su más amado dirigente religioso de la historia.

El prelado de 68 años, descrito por algunos como la figura principal de la Iglesia Católica en los Estados Unidos durante el siglo XX, murió de cáncer al hígado seis días antes.

"El era un maestro. El nos enseñó las lecciones de la vida", dijo Monseñor Kenneth Velo, amigo próximo del Cardenal durante mucho tiempo y ahora presidente de la Sociedad de Extensión de la Iglesia Católica, en su homilía en la Misa de funerales.

Entre la congregación, reunida por invitación solamente, que congestionó la Catedral del Santo Nombre para asistir a la Misa de funerales, se hallaban más de 150 cardenales, arzobispos y obispos estadounidenses, incluyendo a los dos cardenales de los Estados Unidos en el Vaticano y los siete cardenales residentes activos del país. También asistió Monseñor Agostino Cacciavillan, Pro-Nuncio Apostólico en los Estados Unidos.

Encabezaban la delegación del gobierno el vice-presidente Al Gore y su esposa, Tipper. Entre los que acompañaban a los Gore en el funeral se hallaban el jefe de personal de la Casa Blanca, Leon Panetta; la secretaria de salud y servicios humanos, Donna Shalala; el secretario de viviendas y desarrollo urbano, Henry Cisneros; el embajador de los Estados Unidos ante el Vaticano, Raymond Flynn, y el presidente de la AFL-CIO, John Sweeney.

La Misa de funerales, que duró más de dos horas, destacó a más de media docena de idiomas distintos, como reconocimiento de la diversidad étnica de la Arquidiócesis. Las oraciones de los fieles fueron leídas en vietnamita, inglés, español y polaco, y el "Cordero de Dios" fué cantado en inglés, latín, lituano y español.

Papa y Castro se reúnen para tratar del papel de la Iglesia

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (CNS) — Abriendo un nuevo capítulo en las relaciones entre el Vaticano y Cuba, el Papa Juan Pablo II y el presidente Fidel Castro se reunieron para tratar de un papel mayor para la Iglesia en Cuba y una posible visita del Papa en 1997.

"Su Santidad, éste es un gran honor para mí", dijo Castro con una ligera inclinación mientras entraba al Vaticano por primera vez el 19 de noviembre. El Pontífice le dio la bienvenida con un apretón de manos y lo llevó a su oficina, donde hablaron en español sin intérpretes durante 35 minutos.

El portavoz del Vaticano, Joaquín Navarro-Valls, dijo que Castro renovó su invitación al Papa a fin de que visite a la nación isleña, que es el hogar de 4.5 millones de católicos. El Papa aceptó, y ambos hombres acordaron que tratarían de hacer que suceda en 1997, aunque no se fijó fecha alguna.

Castro dijo más tarde a los reporteros que el Papa estaría libre de ir a donde quisiera y decir lo que le gustara durante la visita.

"No le puse condiciones al Papa, y él tampoco me puso condiciones a mí", dijo él.

"Se le tratará con respeto cuando vaya", dijo el dirigente cubano. Cuba es el único país de habla hispana de la América Latina que el Papa no ha visitado.

Castro dijo también a los reporteros que él esperaba que su reunión con el Papa ayudaría a edificar un clima de confianza entre la Iglesia y el estado en Cuba.

"Queremos trabajar con la Iglesia Católica. Estamos dispuestos a hacer que estas relaciones mejoren y a satisfacer las aspiraciones de la Iglesia. Pero eso no se logra de un día a otro. Se necesita tiempo", dijo él.

La reunión inusitada juntó a dos protagonistas del siglo XX de extremos opuestos del espectro ideológico. Castro dirige uno de los últimos gobiernos comunistas del mundo, que persiguió duramente a la Iglesia cuando llegó al poder en 1959, y al Papa Juan Pablo II se le da amplio crédito por haber apresurado la caída del comunismo europeo.

Navarro-Valls dijo que los dos dirigentes hablaron en un clima de "diálogo abierto" y que sus charlas se enfocaron sobre la "normalización de la vida eclesial en Cuba y del papel de los creyentes en la sociedad cubana".

Una declaración del Vaticano cuidadosamente redactada que resumía la reunión no mencionó explícitamente a los derechos humanos, pero Navarro-Valls dijo que era seguro que se trató del asunto en las charlas.

Anteriormente, el Papa ha insistido enérgicamente sobre el respeto a la libertad de religión como el primero de todos los derechos humanos, y el gobierno comunista de Castro ha mostrado recientemente señales de moderar sus limitaciones sobre las actividades de la Iglesia.

El presidente de Cuba, que asistió a una escuela jesuita, manifestó al Papa su admiración y agradecimiento por el trabajo de la Iglesia en su país, especialmente por sus programas de enseñanza y bienestar social.

Navarro-Valls subrayó la naturaleza histórica del encuentro.

"Lo más importante que sucedió fue que el Presidente Castro estuvo aquí tratando de estos puntos importantísimos con el Santo Padre. El resultado está abierto para los acontecimientos futuros", dijo él.

Navarro-Valls se hizo eco de otros funcionarios del Vaticano, quienes dijeron privadamente que el diálogo con Castro y su gobierno estaba en verdad más abierto que anteriormente, pero que no era fácil por ningún medio. La Iglesia está apremiando allá todavía por un mayor espacio para que funcionen sus actividades misioneras, sociales, de enseñanza y de información colectiva.

La sesión de trabajo separada de Castro con el Cardenal Angelo Sodano, secretario de estado del Vaticano, duró 45 minutos. También asistieron a la reunión el ministro del exterior de Cuba, Roberto Robaina, y Monseñor Jean-Louis Tauran, sub-secretario

Tiempo de Esperanza

Acabamos de iniciar el Adviento, el tiempo en que esperamos el retorno del Señor. En el camino de nuestra historia, el Señor se hizo y se hace presente. El Adviento nos invita a mirar con confianza y esperanza hacia el Señor glorioso que viene y nos prepara para recordar el nacimiento en Belén de aquel que es el Mesías esperado. El Adviento es tiempo de velar activamente para preparar los caminos por los que ha de llegar el Señor hacia nosotros.

El Salvador prometido ya está a punto de llegar. Vigilemos constantemente para que nuestro Redentor no nos encuentre desprevenidos, distraídos, perezosos o sumergidos en el pecado. Preparémonos para recibirlo dignamente, convirtiéndonos a El, definitivamente y para siempre.

Jesucristo nos ha confiado la expansión de su Reino sobre la tierra y nos invita a vigilar y a estar atentos para que cuando El venga podamos entrar con El en el Reino de los cielos. No debemos desalentarnos si el mal cunde en nosotros y en el mundo. Dios es grande y frente a El el mal desaparece, desaparece el pecado. Con El se encuentra la salvación y la vida. Somos su pueblo. Abramos nuestro corazón a la confianza y a la esperanza.

Para vivir en la esperanza son necesarias la vigilancia y la revisión constante de nuestra vida, así descubriremos el camino infalible que nos ha de llevar al encuentro del Redentor que llega.

Durante el Adviento necesitamos fortalecer nuestra esperanza, recordando que Cristo viene para todas las personas de buena voluntad. No importa los caminos que hayamos recorrido hasta ayer, lo que importa es que abramos a Cristo nuestro corazón y le preparemos un camino recto, libre de toda maldad.

Sacerdote dice que unidad racial en Iglesia es 'posible'

SOUTH ORANGE, Nueva Jersey (CNS) — El Padre Virgilio Elizondo, sacerdote de San Antonio, dijo que dentro de la Iglesia Católica no sólo es posible la "unidad racial, cultural y religiosa, sino también emocionante".

Los católicos son llamados a aceptar la diversidad entre ellos, "no como una amenaza a la unidad, sino con un sentido de enriquecimiento", dijo el sacerdote el 13 de noviembre en una charla en la Universidad Seton Hall, en South Orange.

El sacerdote pronunció la charla de otoño "Arzobispo Gerety" de la universidad sobre el tema "Pablo VI y la Evangelización de los Latinos".

El Padre Elizondo, fundador del Centro Cultural Mexicano- Americano en San Antonio, delineó el efecto de los escritos del Papa Pablo VI sobre el crecimiento y desarrollo de la comunidad católica de habla hispana dentro de los Estados Unidos.

El dijo que la Iglesia latina de los Estados Unidos incluye a personas cuyas familias han vivido en esta tierra durante siglos — incluyendo a los mexicano-americanos y al pueblo de Puerto Rico — así como a los que han llegado desde otros países.

Los que inmigran tienen por lo menos dos cosas en común. "Nunca tuvieron su clero propio" como lo hicieron otras olas de inmigrantes, y la mayoría de las personas de habla hispana en los Estados Unidos se hallan "todavía entre los pobres", dijo él.

La migración colectiva de los latinos refleja una gran diversidad en la población de habla hispana, dijo él, agregando que, por primera vez, personas de distintas naciones de la América Latina están "llegando a conocerse mutuamente" y casándose unas con otras.

La Arquidiócesis de Anchorage, Alaska, "es ahora hispana en un 56 por ciento", hizo notar él. "Y hay más personas de habla hispana en Chicago que en San Antonio".

El Papa Pablo VI quería que la Iglesia estuviera involucrada en un "diálogo verdadero" con la cultura popular, y el manifestó estos conceptos en varias cartas, como lo hizo el documento del Vaticano II titulado "Lumen Gentium" (La Luz de los Pueblos), que hizo énfasis no solamente en el uso de los idiomas locales, sino en el respeto hacia la cultura y la historia, así como las cosas que hacen singulares a las personas.

El Papa Pablo VI señaló también que la Iglesia local creció desde una respuesta al Evangelio, según dijo el Padre Elizondo.

"Los misioneros fueron a otros lugares, no como individuos sino desde una comunidad para llevar el Evangelio; y la Iglesia local se formó por su respuesta al Evangelio", dijo él.

Los europeos trajeron al catolicismo a las costas de las Américas en 1492, "pero el natalicio de la Iglesia latina se produce el 12 de diciembre de 1531, con la aparición de Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe — y de una imagen que se convierte en la expresión de las Américas .... Esta es una hazaña importante para nuestra cultura", dijo él.

"El día de la festividad señala el comienzo de una comunidad cristiana singular, que es una síntesis de lo europeo y lo local", dijo él.

Esa Iglesia local es diversa, continuó diciendo, pero comparte varios elementos: Su amor por el Jesús humano; una relación personal con Jesús; una devoción a la Virgen María; y la devoción en el hogar — "una piedra angular de la fe" — provocada por la carencia de clero indígena.

Puede haber problemas y dificultades adelante para la Iglesia, "pero me siento extremadamente esperanzado y no tengo dudas de que recorreremos ese camino de bienvenida y unidad hasta su conclusión gloriosa para nuestra Iglesia", agregó el Padre Elizondo.

Dice sacerdote que pobreza, narcóticos, empeoran derechos humanos

NUEVA YORK (CNS) — Un sacerdote mexicano homenajeado por su trabajo en materia de derechos humanos dijo que una combinación de pobreza, narcóticos y una estructura política autoritaria está empeorando la situación de los derechos humanos en México.

"La situación está empeorando, y el futuro luce desalentador", dijo el Padre David Fernández S.J. en una entrevista en Nueva York el 18 de noviembre. "Espero que tendremos algunos años difíciles".

Pero el sacerdote, que ha sido objeto de amenazas de muerte por su trabajo, dijo que él estaba mirando más allá del desaliento a corto plazo y tiene esperanza "a largo plazo".

El Padre Fernández dirige el Centro de los Derechos Humanos "Miguel Agustín Pro Juárez" en Ciudad México.

El es uno de siete trabajadores de los derechos humanos de todo el mundo — y el único de la América Latina — que fueron homenajeados en una cena el 19 de noviembre por la organización Human Rights Watch, que tiene sus oficinas principales en Nueva York.

Al hablar mayormente en inglés y con alguna ayuda de un intérprete, él dijo que todo lo que él y sus colegas del centro han hecho "ha sido un acto de fe y un acto de amor".

La situación actual de México, dijo él, se caracteriza por tortura continua, desapariciones y ejecuciones extrajudiciales. Las últimas ocurren periódicamente a la tasa de dos o tres veces por semana, agregó él.

"La policía dice que son el resultado de luchas con el consorcio de los narcóticos, pero yo creo que es un problema mucho más profundo que eso", dijo él. "La policía que está dentro de las pandillas que distribuyen narcóticos empieza a actuar fuera de la ley y a matar".

Catholic Convert Scott Hahn Brings His Message of Faith To Charlotte Diocese

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — As the millennium approaches, a former Presbyterian minister and theologian will visit Charlotte conveying a conversion process which led to his becoming a staunch proponent of Roman Catholicism.

The Catholic Evangelization Commission of Charlotte, a group promoting spiritual reinforcement, recently announced that Scott Hahn will present "A Faith Journey with Jesus" Jan. 31-Feb. 1 at St. Matthew Church.

Hahn, whose spiritual growth has been documented in various media and told to hundreds of parishes nationwide, was welcomed into the Catholic Church in 1986.

Today—when he's not serving as associate professor of theology and Scripture at Franciscan University in Steubenville, Ohio—he travels the country with a conversion story that serves as a passionate defense for the Catholic faith.

"Scott Hahn has acquired a reputation for being a zealous and balanced communicator of contemporary orthodox Catholicism," said Spiritan Father Ed Vilkauskas, diocesan director of evangelization and supporter of the convert's visit.

Father Vilkauskas' statement echoes worldwide Catholic advocacy of evangelical efforts which remind the faithful to recommit themselves to Christ. The director of evangelization and pastor of Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Monroe coordinated Catholic participation in the Billy Graham Carolinas Crusade in September. After the Crusade, more than 1,000 people indicated a desire to continue—or to begin—their lives of faith with guidance from the Catholic Church.

Catholic follow-up efforts continue after that ecumenical gathering. Indeed, the Catholic Evangelization Commission's invitation to Hahn expresses a hope to bolster the decision made by those persons, as well as to extend a reaffirmation of faith to all Catholics.

"The overall theme is that everyone has a conversion story to tell," said Gary Mauney, chairperson of the commission and parishioner of St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte. "Our expression of that conversion is centered around the Eucharist. Scott Hahn will discuss what we can do as Christians who are now faith-filled."

While Hahn's message urges Catholics to embrace their faith, a faith he calls beautiful, it also includes a personal history peppered with long-lasting misconceptions about Catholicism. He became known as a conservative Presbyterian who saw profound faults in Catholic teaching. For several years, he proceeded along the course of Presbyterianism as a seminarian, pastor, teacher and scholar.

Over time, he was troubled at finding in his studies example after example of revelations that seemed inherently Catholic. He began to question tenets of his own faith concerning salvation and Scripture. Although still convinced that Catholicism was wrong, he continually found fewer reasons to think so. Finally, he dove into intense studies of the Catholic faith and later attended

Mass for the first time.

It was at that celebration that Hahn saw a profound devotion to Christ. At that point, a sharp curve developed along the road of his faith journey: He converted to Catholicism and was received into the Church at Easter in 1986. (His wife, Kimberly, with whom he wrote a book about the conversion process, entered the Church in 1990.) In May 1995, he received his doctorate degree in theology from Marquette University.

Hahn's conversion story is one of three discussions he will offer during the program; others include examination of the Eucharist and a call to Christian action as the season of Lent approaches.

Though Hahn's visit, Mauney hopes that Catholics in every stage of faith will be touched.

Father Vilkauskas agrees. "The commission's desire to bring Mr. Hahn is an effort to have as many people as possible — committed Catholics, lukewarm Catholics, inactive Catholics and other Christians — to hear the testimony and witness of faith of this man," he said.

"A Faith Journey with Jesus" is a free presentation sponsored by the Catholic Evangelization Commission of Charlotte. Program times are 7:30-9:30 p.m. Jan 31, and 9 am-3:15 p.m. Feb. 1. Mass will be celebrated to begin the Feb. 1 session. Donations will be accepted. St. Matthew Church is located at 8015 Ballantyne Commons Pkwy in Charlotte. For details call Andy Getz, (704) 364-5431, ext. 276.

Chinese Officials Rebuke Pope For Remarks On Religious Freedom In China

A building cleaner works on a facade next to a Catholic church in Beijing's main shopping center Dec. 6. Chinese officials rebuked Pope John Paul II following his remarks in early December urging China to allow Catholics to have official links to the Vatican.

BEIJING (CNS) — Chinese officials rebuked Pope John Paul II for his remarks on religious freedom in China in early December, demanding that the Vatican stop "interfering" in the country's domestic affairs.

News agencies in China reported that a Foreign Ministry spokesman said the Vatican "must cease its interference in China's internal affairs, including ... by making use of religion."

The spokesman, who was not named in news reports, added that the Chinese government respects its citizens' religious freedom.

The Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association, which is sanctioned and supervised by the government, claims 3 million members. An additional 3 million to 10 million "unauthorized" Catholics remain loyal to the Vatican, and try to retain ties to it despite government suppression.

In a Mass for China broadcast on Vatican Radio Dec. 3, Pope John Paul urged China to let its Catholics have official links to the Vatican.

"Let the civil authorities of the People's Republic of China be reassured: A disciple of Christ can live his faith in any kind of political order as long as there is respect for his right to act according to the dictates of his conscience and faith," the pope said.

China severed ties with the Vatican after Pope Pius XII declared invalid government appointments of Chinese bishops in 1958. The Vatican went on to form diplomatic relations with Taiwan, further irritating the Communist Chinese government.

"China is willing to improve its relations with the Vatican" the unnamed Foreign Ministry official was quoted as saying Dec. 5. "However, the Vatican must sever its so-called diplomatic relations with Taiwan, and recognize the government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal government of China, and Taiwan as a part of Chinese territory."

People In The News

Bishop Ruiz Receives Pacem In Terris Award For Mediation

DAVENPORT, Iowa (CNS) — When Bishop Samuel Ruiz Garcia of San Cristobal de las Casas in Chiapas, Mexico, received the 1996 Pacem in Terris Peace and Freedom Award in Davenport Dec. 1, he said his emotion could not be "expressed by words, only by tears." The bishop, a mediator in the military conflict between government and rebel forces in Chiapas, asked aloud how he could be happy "when it's at the cost of many people suffering." In his remarks at Sacred Heart Cathedral, 72-year-old Bishop Ruiz dedicated the prize to those working for peace in Mexico.

Mother Teresa Improving, Will Not Be Able To Resume Travels

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa was improving days after undergoing angioplasty, but her doctors said she would no longer be able to travel the world in her service to the poor. "She will have to be taken care of for a long time," said Dr. Tauran Praharaj, a member of the medical team treating Mother Teresa. "At her age, with this problem, it will be difficult to go back to the active life she had."

Spread Gospel, Don't Wait For Unity, Says Anglican Leader

ROME (CNS) — Christians cannot wait until they have overcome denominational divisions to bring the Gospel message to a hurting world, said Anglican Archbishop George L. Carey. "Jesus' prayer that 'they may be one' in order that 'the world may believe' has sadly been neglected too often," said the archbishop of Canterbury, spiritual leader of the 70-million member worldwide Anglican Communion.

Parish Embraces The Giving Spirit

By STEVE UZZELL

MINT HILL — Nearly 250 parishioners and guests gathered at St. Luke Church on Nov. 22 to hear a priest from Nigeria and a nun from New York share their insights about the world's hungry.

The gathering was the largest yet to attend The Third World Dinner, an annual parish tradition sponsored by the St. Luke Parish Outreach Committee.

Father Joseph Nietlong, pastor of St. John parish in Agyaragu, Nigeria, shared a story of watching three women die on the way to the nearest medical clinic, some 20 miles away.

As pastor, he serves more than 5,000 families living in a 62-square mile area. He added that the Holy Child Mission at Duduguru has provided much assistance to families of his parish. Centrally located on the 37-mile road between the towns of Jos and Makurdi, the mission operates a girls' school and a women's center.

Nigerian women have recognized the center as a place where they can discover more about their own health and nutrition. But they have also learned more about how some customs and superstitions may have allowed starvation and sickness to continue for so long.

Sister Margaret Rogers has served in the Society of the Holy Child Jesus for 50 years, 22 of which she spent in Nigeria. She communicated her definition of the "faces of hunger," which she has seen through violence and militarism; drought and environmental degradation; powerlessness and discrimination; debt; and malnourishment.

Sister Margaret is director of the Dalton Center, an overseas mission facility in Manhattan.

After hearing the guest speakers' message, those in attendance were reminded of the theme of the event — and of the reality the people of Nigeria face daily.

Just 15 individuals (6 percent) dined in the luxurious manner that first-world citizens would be accustomed to. Seventy people (28 percent) were seated at tables to a modest meal of second-world proportions. And 165 guests (66 percent) scattered on the floor to a dinner of rice and water.

The dinner raised several hundred dollars for St. John parish and Holy Child Mission. The event was the outreach commission's latest effort to support St. Luke's sister parish in Duduguru. In addition to the financial contributions, the awareness level of those in attendance was raised as well.

Father Nietlong expressed his appreciation for the outreach efforts of the Mint Hill parish, and said he hopes that Americans will realize their power to effect improvements.

"I believe that if everyone in the U.S. really knew how much capacity they had to change the world, then they would do it," he said. "The differences that we have are not in our persons, but in what we have and don't have — the external, technological differences."

Conveying a belief that first-hand experience of an American citizen in his country could make a difference in saving lives, Father Nietlong invited those in attendance to visit Nigeria.

Pilgrims Flock To Bethlehem Church To See Painting That Weeps

Pilgrims pray on their knees before an ancient icon of Jesus in Bethlehem's Church of the Nativity Nov. 28. A Palestinian Christian woman and longtime worshiper at the church claims the image of Jesus began to weep red tears a month ago.

By JUDITH SUDILOVSKY

BETHLEHEM, West Bank (CNS)

— Pilgrims and tourists flocked to the Church of the Nativity to see a painting of Jesus that allegedly wept.

The Jerusalem Post quoted Sadika Hamida, 60, a cleaner at the church, as saying she had seen the tears.

"At first I couldn't believe my eyes," she was quoted as saying. "It was only when I got closer that I realized that the tears were real. This is the will of God."

On Nov. 28, newspapers and television broadcasts were full of the reports of the weeping painting, located on a marble column near the entrance to the grotto believed by many to be the exact spot where Jesus was born. The pictures showed a tear rolling down Jesus' left eye.

The next day people were saying they had seen the eyes on the painting blink as well.

"Something remarkable is happening in Bethlehem," a spokesman for Greek Orthodox Archbishop Diodoros was reported as saying.

A statement from the Latin-rite Patriarchate of Jerusalem said it would investigate the reports.

At the church, shared by Catholics and Orthodox, a group of about 20 local residents gathered around the painting, straining to catch a glimpse of the tears. One woman clasped her hands in prayer.

"Some people here believe it, some don't, but most people believe it," said Nabil Nazi, 34, of Bethlehem, as he looked up toward the dark 12th-century painting.

"I believe it could happen," he said.

"Some people have seen his eyes open and close. But sometimes if you stare at something for a long time you start to see things. I can't see anything different (from before). I can't tell."

If it is true, he added, it is a warning sign from Jesus that something dangerous will happen.

"It is probably a sign from God," agreed Jerusalem resident Ida Stephanian, 43, who had come with her husband and child to see the painting. She said it was too dark to see anything happening with the painting.

"Of course I believe as a Christian, but I need light to see better," she said.

Other Bethlehem residents dismissed the claims.

People see what they want to see, said Deputy Mayor Hana Nasser. Sometimes, he said, people are in a difficult situation and grasp at anything as a sign of hope.

One man who had come to see the painting said it was possible that because the painting is on a marble column, some chemical property of the stone had caused what looked like tears to form.

Certain chemical properties can cause condensation that will appear like a tear on a painting.

The man added that he had not seen the tears, but he did not want to rule out the possibility that it was happening.

Some people were cynical, saying they believed the reports were a ploy to boost tourism during the pre-Christmas season. Hotels have had a spate of cancellations since the gun battles between Palestinian police and the Israeli army in late September.

Pope Not Scheduled To Celebrate Public Mass On Christmas Morning

By CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — For the first time in his pontificate, Pope John Paul II is not scheduled to celebrate a public Christmas morning Mass, according to the Vatican schedule of papal activities.

"It was too much," said Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls.

The centerpiece of the papal Christmas celebration is the midnight Mass seen by millions of television viewers around the world.

The Mass usually ends about 1:30 a.m., then the pope spends about half an hour greeting altar servers and others involved in the liturgy, Navarro-Valls said.

At about 2 a.m., the 76-year-old pope returns to his private apartment in the Vatican for a small, typically Polish Christmas ceremony, singing carols with the Polish nuns who care for his household, Navarro-Valls said.

Usually, Pope John Paul would go to bed after 3 a.m., sleep a few hours, then get up for private prayers before the morning Mass, the papal spokesman said.

Navarro-Valls said the morning Mass should have been removed from the papal schedule long ago to allow the pope to have a decent night's rest before giving his traditional Christmas blessing and speech at midday.

Last Christmas the pope was apparently suffering from the flu and for the first time had to cancel his participation in the annual Christmas morning Mass at St. Peter's Basilica.

Pope John Paul's complete Christmas schedule, as published by the Vatican Dec. 10, said:

— He will meet Dec. 21 with Vatican officials, cardinals living in Rome, members of the papal household and representatives of the Rome clergy to give his Christmas greetings. His speech usually includes a review of the year for the church.

— Pope John Paul will celebrate midnight Mass Dec. 24 in St. Peter's Basilica.

— At noon Christmas Day, the pope will give his traditional blessing "urbi et orbi" (to the city and the world) and a speech from the balcony of St. Peter's Basilica.

— The evening of Dec. 31, Pope John Paul will mark the end of the year with an evening prayer service and prayers of thanksgiving at the Jesuits' Church of St. Ignatius of Loyola in Rome.

— The pope will celebrate Mass Jan. 1, the feast of Mary Mother of God and the World Day of Peace, in St. Peter's Basilica.

— As is his custom on the first Saturday of every month, Pope John Paul will lead the recitation of the rosary Jan. 4. The prayer will be broadcast on Vatican Radio from the Paul VI Audience Hall.

— On Jan. 6, the feast of the Epiphany, the pope will celebrate Mass in the basilica and ordain new bishops.

— The pope will mark the Jan. 12 feast of the Baptism of the Lord by celebrating Mass in the Sistine Chapel and baptizing a group of infants.

— Pope John Paul's Christmas season activities end Jan. 13 with his annual speech to the diplomatic corps accredited to the Vatican.

World And National News Briefs

The windows of St. Joseph Old Cathedral in Oklahoma City were temporarily filled with clear glass earlier this year while new stained glass was being prepared. The church was rededicated in December following restoration from damage it suffered in the 1995 bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Building.

Oklahoma City Cathedral, Fixed After Bombing, Is Rededicated

OKLAHOMA CITY (CNS) — The sanctuary candle inside St. Joseph Old Cathedral in downtown Oklahoma City still burned and the altar remained unscathed after the April 1995 explosion that brought down the nearby Alfred P. Murrah Building and killed 168 people.

But the red-brick cathedral itself was damaged extensively and had to be closed for repairs.

After months of renovation and remodeling, Archbishop Eusebius J. Beltran celebrated a rededication Mass Dec. 1 to welcome Catholics back to the nearly 100-year-old landmark.

In his homily, he told how the cathedral began as a little church in 1889; it is the oldest parish church in Oklahoma City and one of the oldest in the state. He said a more impressive church building was dedicated in 1904.

Before proceeding with the rededication, Archbishop Beltran invited the congregation to pause for a moment of "silence and a prayer for the repose of the souls of the 168 people who died just a few feet away in the tragic bombing."

He also expressed his sentiments to the survivors of the bombing and the victims' families. Oklahoma Gov. Frank Keating, a Catholic, was present to receive appreciation for his bravery and support during the crisis.

"We come together today in solemn but joyful and grateful assembly," the archbishop said. "The completion of the repairs and renovations to this old cathedral is a positive step in the healing of the wounds of the bombing."

After the homily the rededication rite continued with a litany of saints and a prayer. The archbishop anointed the altar with the sacred chrism while priests assisted in anointing the four walls where crosses hang.

The church was filled to capacity for the Mass. Latecomers could view it on closed-circuit television in the parish hall below the church. All three Oklahoma City TV stations and various radio stations covered the event.

"During Advent we prepare for the coming of our Lord, so Christ will be reborn in us and we'll be able to worship Him in our church," said Father Louis Lamb, St. Joseph's pastor.

"We feel very devout in the cathedral. It's very beautiful. My parishioners have patiently waited and really sacrificed. I'm very grateful for the financial and moral support we've received from the community and various churches of different Christian denominations."

During the renovation, Father Lamb celebrated Mass in the basement of the local Catholic Charities building.

The bomb blast, which caused approximately $3 million in damages, had lifted the church's roof several inches off the cathedral structure and blew out windows, including seven double-panel, stained-glass windows depicting the saints.

Sister McGeady Calls On Business To Do More For Youth

NEW YORK (CNS) — The president of Covenant House, the shelter for runaway and homeless youths, has called for more American businesses to get involved in programs of direct youth assistance. "At Covenant House, we have worked closely with companies and individuals to provide mentorships and job opportunities for our kids," said Sister Mary Rose McGeady, a Daughter of Charity. "One thousand corporations have assisted us by providing entry-level jobs for kids." "My challenge," she continued, "is for every company in America to provide similar opportunities for youth." Sister McGeady issued her appeal Dec. 4 as she addressed the sixth annual Covenant House "Candlelight Vigil for Homeless Kids."

Two U.S. Parishes Send Christmas Gifts To Prisoners In Ireland

DUBLIN, Ireland (CNS) — Christmas will be a bit brighter for prison inmates in Ireland this year, thanks to two American parishes. On Dec. 4, Archbishop Desmond Connell of Dublin was among those who received the delivery of gifts — mainly shirts, baseball caps, candy, pens and stationery — sent to Ireland by parishioners of St. Mary's Church and Our Lady Star of the Sea in Stamford, Conn. The Christmas gift collection was organized by two sisters, Shelagh Ryan of St. Mary's and Sally Sweeney, secretary of Our Lady Star of the Sea.

Rabbi Calls For Vatican, Christian Involvement In Talks

JERUSALEM (CNS) — The Vatican and other Christian churches should be involved in the negotiations over Jerusalem, said Rabbi David Rosen, who was a member of the committee that drew up the Vatican-Israeli agreement three years ago. "They should be involved because (Jerusalem) is not exclusively a question of sovereignty but also a religious question in terms of different religious attachments," said Rosen, also the Anti-Defamation League's co-liaison to the Vatican.

Priest Says Flap Over Pope On Evolution Was Media-Generated

EMMITSBURG, Md. (CNS) — The recent furor over Pope John Paul II's comments regarding evolution is largely created by the media, and specifically the Italian press, according to one of the chief architects of the papal stance. "The media is hungry for something. That is very clear in the Italian newspapers," said physicist Father Stanley L. Jaki, who helped draft the pope's Oct. 23 message to the Pontifical Academy of Sciences.

In the message, Pope John Paul said that over the last 50 years, new knowledge has emerged that shows the theory of evolution to be "more than a hypothesis." His point was that evolution was now accepted by a wide range of scientific disciplines doing independent research.

CHARLOTTE — Although St. Vincent de Paul began as a mission of nearby St. Ann parish in southwest Charlotte, the church family has experienced tremendous growth since its inception in the early 1960s.

In 1961, Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh purchased land on Old Reid Road with the intention of eventually establishing a new parish and school. A gymnasium was constructed on site to serve as a temporary chapel and was dedicated to St. Vincent in October. Msgr. Michael Begley, pastor of St. Ann's who later served as the Charlotte Diocese's founding bishop, offered Mass at St. Vincent's. Benedictines from Belmont Abbey also celebrated Mass at the mission church.

As Charlotte's Catholic population steadily increased, Bishop Waters in June 1965 proclaimed St. Vincent de Paul a parish, with Father James Noonan as its first resident pastor.

Parish-level development quickly ensued: The Women's Guild and choir were formed, a nearby house was purchased for use as a rectory and office, and an expansion project was planned.

In 1966, the parish constructed a social hall to provide more meeting space; a kitchen and cry room were included as well. The project added room for the parish kindergarten class, which was developed that year and would remain in operation until the summer of 1977. (The intent of establishing a parochial school was eventually dismissed, as the parish worked closely with St. Ann's and its school over the years.)

As the 1960s passed and the '70s were underway, parish life continued to be enhanced. By early 1972, when the Diocese of Charlotte was formed, some 2,000 Catholics called themselves St. Vincent de Paul parishioners.

Continuing needs for additional space were met in October 1975, when another wing was dedicated by Bishop Begley. The addition yielded worship and storage space, classrooms, a nursery, meeting rooms, and the CCD office.

In March 1976, the St. Vincent de Paul Society, an international ministry to the poor, was established at the church. Through personal counseling and assistance to those in need, St. Vincent parishioners added this form of outreach to an ever-expanding base of community involvement. The Society remains very much a vital presence in parish life today.

As the 1980s approached, St. Vincent de Paul had become one of the largest parishes in North Carolina. With more than 650 registered families, the parish began work to construct a rectory and office complex, completed in 1980. The church hosted the Charlotte Diocese's 10th anniversary celebration in January 1982, and ecumenical gatherings begun in the late 1970s continued there as well.

Carrying on its tradition of outreach, the parish in 1985 purchased Cherrycrest Haven, where people in crisis could find temporary housing in a compassionate atmosphere. The parish, through the work of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, continued to operate Cherrycrest until the agency was dissolved in 1995.

Along with adding more projects, ministries and committees, the parish spent the latter half of the 1980s formulating plans for future expansion projects. One of the first such endeavors was the establishment of a building fund campaign, followed by another expansion of the social hall area and the addition of a trailer for use as office space.

Present pastor Msgr. William Pharr arrived at St. Vincent de Paul Church in June 1991. During his pastorate, a three-phase building plan has been developed. The plan has resulted in improvements in parking and landscaping, and the building of education and activity wings were completed in the Spring of 1995. Currently, the parish has set as its goal the expansion and rebuilding of its church facility. The fund drive is in its pledge stage and will run through December 1997.

Msgr. Pharr shepherds a dedicated community of the faithful, whose members devote themselves to Christian action in a variety of ways. The Women's Guild has long been an anchor of the parish family, while such ministries and groups as the Knights of Columbus, a pre-school program, ACES (Active Caring Energetic Seniors), and Boy and Girl Scout troops all strive to enrich the existence of the Charlotte parish.

Cardinal Bernardin's Hat Headed To Cathedral Ceiling

By HEIDI SCHLUMPF

CHICAGO (CNS) — In church folklore, a cardinal's galero — the wide-brimmed, ceremonial red hat — falls from the cathedral ceiling when its late owner exits purgatory and enters heaven.

If the popular wisdom in Chicago is correct, the galero of the late Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin will have trouble even sticking to the ceiling of Holy Name Cathedral.

A solemn ceremony to hang the late cardinal's hat and add it to four other galeros hanging over the sacristy was to occur during a Dec. 14 Mass at the cathedral. The others belonged to Chicago prelates who also served in this century: Cardinals George Mundelein, Samuel Stritch, Albert Meyer and John P. Cody.

There was some question about whether such a ceremony still is permissible. But Father Thomas Paprocki, archdiocesan chancellor, said Second Vatican Council documents he read do not prohibit the custom of hoisting a cardinal's galero to the cathedral rafters after his death.

"A 1969 Vatican document abolished the galero as part of the official vesture of cardinals," Father Paprocki told The New World archdiocesan newspaper. In order to simplify the ceremonial garb of popes and cardinals, he said, Pope Paul VI replaced the galero with a square-cornered red biretta.

But the galero remains a symbol of the office, he added. An image of the hat tops many prelates' coats of arms, and the phrase "getting his red hat" still signifies entrance into the College of Cardinals.

Cardinal Bernardin did not own a galero until 1993, when Father Paprocki and a group of priests gave him one as a gift. They ordered it from Gammarelli's, the official Roman purveyor of papal clothing.

It is unclear when the tradition of hanging a cardinal's hat from the rafters of a cathedral began, but the action "symbolizes that this is a cathedral presided over by a cardinal archbishop," Father Paprocki said.

Others have suggested that the hats were hung and left to decay as a reminder that cardinals, too, are mere mortals.

A Christmas Message

from Bishop William G. Curlin

A Remembrance Of Christmas Past

Everyone has their favorite Christmas Story; mine took place 26 years ago when asked by my Archbishop to accept a new pastoral assignment on the following day. When I reminded the Archbishop that "Tomorrow is Christmas Eve," he smiled and said: "Merry Christmas."

I confess that I began my first pastor's appointment with a reluctant heart. My new parish was actually an old church in the inner city of Washington, D.C., built in the 1800s. Time had taken its toll on both the church building and the neighborhood. The parish community consisted of a few subsidized apartments for senior citizens. I recall how cold and dreary the weather was that Christmas Day. Less than a hundred people had attended Mass during the day. Feeling somewhat discouraged, I went into the church late on Christmas evening. There were few Christmas decorations in the church and the lighting was primarily that of votive candles. Suddenly I heard an elderly voice cry out: "Who's there?" I turned in the direction of the voice and saw an elderly African-American lady seated in one of the church pews. When I asked her name, she replied, "I'm Miss Hattie Davis." She explained that she had become a Catholic when she was 70 years of age and was now past 90. She had outlived her family and had no place to go on Christmas Day. She decided to "spend Christmas with the Lord in the church."

When Miss Hattie asked where I had come from, I described the beautiful church in the suburb of Washington where I had lived until the day before. I also told Miss Hattie about the wonderful decorations in the church. Suddenly, Miss Hattie asked me: "Lord, Father, why did you come to a place like this?" I was immediately embarrassed. Her question taught me why I had been sent there. "I believe that God sent me here to find you, Miss Hattie." I invited her to have Christmas dinner with me in the rectory. Remembering there was no food in the rectory, I asked Miss Hattie to remain while I searched the neighborhood for a grocery store. Finally I found a small store that offered a limited supply of food; I recall buying hot dogs and some canned beans. Miss Hattie didn't seem to mind the "poverty" of our Christmas dinner. She explained that every day she shared a can of dog food with a neighbor so the food would not spoil. Apparently other senior citizens in my new parish family did the same.

Virgin and Child. Mary offers grapes to the Christ child in this oil painting by Gerard David from 1510. The painting titled, "The Rest on the Flight into Egypt," is a holding of the National Gallery of Art, Andrew W. Mellon Collection, on display in Washington.

From that point on, I was determined that Miss Hattie and her friends would never eat dog food again.

With the help of generous friends, we obtained two gas stoves for our large rectory kitchen. My first culinary attempt was a "disaster," but in time my cooking skills improved. Others discovered what I was doing and came to offer their help. As the "cooks" increased in number so did the number of our guests; before long we were feeding hundreds. Many willing hearts and hands established a much-needed ministry in our community. In time our former school building became a center for senior citizens and our convent a shelter for homeless women, one of the first in the Nation's Capitol. Miss Hattie died not long after we met on that Christmas Day, but she had taught me and many others the true meaning of Christmas: seeing and serving Christ in one another.

Perhaps you have a favorite Christmas story. This can be a Christmas for each of us to remember. A Christmas that remembers Christ; Christ hidden in the poor, the homeless, the neighbor or elderly friend living alone and unnoticed.

May God bless you for your charity and works of mercy during this holy season and throughout the year. Be assured of the remembrance in my Christmas Masses for you and all your loved ones.

Bishop Begley Remembers

Through Challenges And Changes, "The Lord's Been Good"

The following is the last of three installments covering the priestly career of retired Bishop Michael J. Begley, first bishop of the Diocese of Charlotte. On Jan. 12, 1997, the diocese will celebrate Bishop Begley's 25th anniversary and the Silver Anniversary of the Diocese of Charlotte.

By MARY COYNE WESSLING

CHARLOTTE — On Oct. 18, 1984, Bishop Michael J. Begley officially handed the leadership of the diocese over to newly ordained Bishop John F. Donoghue. The hardworking first bishop had rightfully earned his retirement.

Long before that day Bishop Begley chose to stay in Charlotte, close to the Catholic Center and many of his friends. He would not be sad to hand on the job of spiritual leader for 70,000 Catholics, nor miss the hectic schedule of an active bishop whose job it is to cover 21,000 square miles of diocesan territory. In fact, Bishop Michael J. Begley delighted in telling his friends that he was ready to become a "gentleman of leisure."

However, in the 12 years since his retirement, Bishop Begley has continued to serve the diocese. Up until a few years ago, he maintained a fairly full Confirmation schedule. He also made frequent trips to Charismatic gatherings, special celebrations for older Catholics, and dedications of parishes and diocesan buildings.

Wherever he goes, he still carries with him a broad smile and a healthy dose of enthusiasm. "It confounds me to use a walker which slows me down, but I still help. I am still afforded the opportunity to hear confessions. While it's annoying to battle my ailments, I enjoy helping out," Bishop Begley said.

Though his days are quiet and less stressful, Bishop Begley continues to keep a close eye on the development of his diocese. Asked what issues concern him most, the bishop offered several:

— "Race relations is one. When I was a young priest, black Catholics were banished to the back of the church. As bishop, I tried to bring blacks and whites together to talk and improve their relations. But now I am curious to see a new challenge of people wanting to go back to having their own churches. That's what I grew up with — ethnic parishes. I don't know if going back to that would be considered progress. I believe we need to continue talking to one another."

— "Evangelism remains an important ministry. It used to be that we told people to keep the faith. Today the motto is to share the faith. I think that's terrific."

— "Labor and unemployment are still major concerns in this diocese and in this country. I am especially concerned with the trend of making products abroad with cheaper labor and letting people go from their jobs here. We're squeezing people out of their jobs. Something needs to be done."

— Education is another important issue, Bishop Begley said. "When I came into the diocese most of our schools were staffed by Religious Sisters. Staffing and financing the schools today is more difficult."

"A particular challenge is educating our children about the Catholic faith in an effective way and in a way that is genuinely the teaching of the Church," he added.

— Bishop Begley admits that while he is still opposed to women being ordained priests, he is impressed with the very many leadership roles women have filled over the years since he was first ordained bishop. "We just couldn't get along without them today," he said.

— Bishop Begley agreed with the late Cardinal Joseph Bernardin that dialog among Catholics is needed. Opposing views can be aired, he said. "I don't see why we can't reach more common ground, but it will take the effort of everyone. There are many things to consider and we must do our homework before coming to the table to discuss things," he added.

Despite the differences, Bishop Begley sees the Catholics of his beloved diocese as faithful servants and generous souls. He is grateful that he can still serve them in some capacity and thankful for the opportunity to build a faith community with them.

But ultimate credit goes to the one who called the high school senior to serve 70 years ago. "It is because I love God and with His help that I could get people to work with me to achieve great things," Bishop Begley said. "I must say, the Lord's been good."

Mary Coyne Wessling served under Bishop Begley for six years as assistant editor of The North Carolina Catholic.

Sacred Heart Mission Celebrates Our Lady of Guadalupe Feast Day

By PAUL FREDETTE

BURNSVILLE — At dusk Dec. 8, passers-by witnessed the start of the first-ever public celebration honoring Our Lady of Guadalupe in Yancey County.

As temperatures dropped and winds rose, the men, women, and children lost no time processing east along Main Street, led by a colorful banner of the Virgin of Guadalupe. They walked the half-mile to Sacred Heart Mission where recently-appointed pastor, Jesuit Father Edward Ifkovits joined with Capuchin Father Alphonso Pagliara from Hendersonville to celebrate the liturgy in Spanish for the nearly 100 Hispanics in attendance.

Father Ifkovits was quick to attribute the success of the fiesta to the efforts of a small group of dedicated area residents whose concern for the growing Hispanic community in Yancey and Mitchell counties goes back several years. "This ministry exists because of eight to 10 very active lay people from Sacred Heart and St. Andrew churches and the generosity of Father Alphonso," says Father Ifkovits of the specifically Catholic component in a wider ecumenical effort.

Joining in the festivities was the Rev. Robert Moore of the Presbyterian Church USA who, together with the Rev. David Lee, a United Methodist Church pastor, established Nueva Esperanza (New Hope), an ecumenical ministry directed toward the expanding community of resident seasonal workers, most of whom are Hispanics who speak little or no English.

As more seasonal workers from Latin American countries are employed by crop growers and others make their way into the building trades, a growing concern for their safety and well-being is being voiced by religious and social workers in the region. Helping the farm workers meet the challenges in a culture so new has been the focus of the Rev.

Father Alphonso Pagliara from Hendersonville celebrates Mass at the fiesta of Our Lady of Guadalupe.

Moore's activity for more than four years now. He points out the experience of social isolation that pervades the Hispanic population. "The Hispanics here have no real community," he explains. "From one farm to another they don't even know each other."

At the peak of the growing seasons there are as many as 200 agricultural workers in the area, but to many in the Anglo community who seldom even see them, much less know them, the farm workers are still "labor without personality," says the Rev. Moore. "We cannot invite them here to work without also helping them...travel and (maintain) a minimum standard of living (housing with indoor plumbing and electricity)."

Nueva Esperanza, stresses the Rev. Moore, is intended to provide as many Hispanics as possible with "a means to form community with one another and with Christ." For all those ministering among the Hispanics, the desire to make people feel welcome and at home is evident. "To think of all these people here for so long without access to the sacraments," said Elizabeth Turner, "how can we not serve them?"

Like others who are convinced of the necessity for this ministry, Father Ifkovits believes that a crucial element is the availability of Spanish-speaking priests and other ministerial personnel in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Crowd Gathers In Newton To Honor "Star Of Evangelization"

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

NEWTON — The Hispanic community in the North Carolina foothills came together Dec. 9 to celebrate not only the Feast of the Immaculate Conception but another significant religious event which occurred in 1531 — the apparition of Our Lady of Guadalupe. This apparition of Mary as a young, pregnant Aztec woman resulted in the immediate conversion of eight million Native Americans.

More than 400 people flocked to St. Joseph Church for the special Mass. Because of a 250 seating capacity, many Hispanics stood in the aisles and outside to catch a glimpse or hear an inspiring word in their native tongue. "We have had this service for several years," said Francisco Brenes, coordinator of the Hispanic community in the area. "Each year, we see greater participation."

Edward Acosta, treasurer for the area Hispanic community, gave a brief history of the apparition in Spanish and English. He explained how Juan Diego, a hard-working craftsman and farmer, was told by the Blessed Virgin to have a church built outside of Mexico City. She could have appeared to members of the Spanish clergy or individuals with great political power, but she chose instead a simple man of great faith and humility, Acosta said.

Juan Diego convinced the bishop of the apparition of Our Lady of Guadalupe when he revealed her miraculous image on his tilma (a garment worn over the shirt). "She had been painted by brushes that were not of this world," described Pope Pius XII in 1945.

During the Mass, celebrated by St. Joseph pastor Father Richard Hokanson, the Hispanic youth group reenacted the apparition. Juan Diego and Our Lady of Guadalupe were portrayed by Luis Del Cid and Maria Gomez. Parents lifted their children to see over the crowds. The spellbound youth watched attentively, as if they were witnessing the actual apparition.

In his homily, Rev. Mr. Edward Rodriguez of the Hispanic Center in Charlotte said everyone is called to build a church just like the humble farmer, not from materials but from the heart and spirit. "The church must be alive — a place where everyone shares — where there is great love and everyone sees to the needs of others," he said. Rev. Mr. Rodriguez told those homesick for their native soil and families to seek consolation in Christ's Mother, Mary — their Mother, too.

Some see our Lady of Guadalupe as the bridge to Christ for all mankind. Her patronage has been expanded throughout the years by various popes, starting with Mexico (1737); "New Spain" (1754); Puerto Rico (1757), Latin America (1910); the Philippines (1935); the Americas (1946); and for all the unborn.

The enthusiastic turnout for this Hispanic tradition which brought so many to church provides credence to "Star of Evangelization," the title given Our Lady of Guadalupe by Pope John Paul II.

Maria Gomez and Luis Del Cid reenact the apparition of Our Lady of Guadalupe.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Joined By Armenian Orthodox Patriarch At General Audience

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II, welcoming the spiritual leader of Armenian Orthodox to the Vatican, said he hoped the patriarch's visit would build on years of private correspondence and official theological dialogue.

Catholicos Karekin I of Etchmiadzin, supreme patriarch of the Armenian Apostolic Church, sat alongside Pope John Paul at his weekly general audience Dec. 11.

"Guided by the profound communion which already unites us, Catholicos Karekin and I nourish the hope that our meetings and exchanges in these days will promote further steps toward full unity," the pope told visitors at his audience.

The pope introduced the patriarch as his "venerable and dear brother in Christ, His Holiness Karekin I, the supreme catholicos of all Armenians."

While visiting bishops, archbishops and cardinals usually sit facing each other off to the left and right of the pope at the audience, the Armenian leader sat next to him.

The catholicos, who was elected head of the church in April 1995, was making an official visit to Pope John Paul and the Vatican Dec. 10-14.

Pope John Paul invited Catholicos Karekin to speak at the end of the audience, to lead a prayer and to give his solemn blessing to those gathered in the hall.

"Here in this great hall, I hear many languages, but I do not feel as if I were in Babel because the Christian faith which unites us allows us to understand and live together in the peace and love our common Lord, Jesus Christ, gives to us," the catholicos said.

Catholicos Karekin also offered a prayer for Pope John Paul, "that the Lord would give you perfect and continued health for the well-being of all humanity and not only for the Roman Catholic Church."

In his main audience talk, Pope John Paul continued his catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, looking specifically at the Presentation in the temple.

Christmas Night

Great literature has a certain transcendent quality about it: It can be enjoyed by anyone at first reading, and yet the more deeply a person looks into it, the more it means and the richer it becomes. So it is with the literary collection we call the Bible. I invite you to examine with me the three selections presented for our consideration in the Christmas Midnight Mass.

One step in appreciating a literary work is to situate it in its historical context. In the first reading (Isaiah 9:1-6), the prophet Isaiah speaks of a darkness that has spread over Galilee, the northern part of Israel. The kingdom of Assyria had deported the people of this region and resettled it with foreigners, Gentiles, brought in from other parts of the empire. In this time of national disaster, the birth of a royal son inspires the prophet to express the hope that this future king might be an ideal successor to David of old and save those northern provinces by reconquering them from Israel, thus becoming a light to the Gentiles. The exalted names he gives the child are royal titles inherited by kings of Judah on the day of their coronation: wonderful counselor, mighty hero, everlasting father, prince of peace.

Another way to enhance our understanding of a piece of literature is to understand the literary form adopted by the author. In Christmas night's gospel message (Luke 2:1-14) we have a theological reflection on the birth of Jesus. Referring to a practice of his own day, this author speaks of a worldwide census during the reign of the Roman Emperor Augustus, who was acknowledged as "savior" and "god" and credited with establishing an era of universal peace. He does this to portray Jesus by contrast as the real savior and ultimate source of peace.

And then, to illustrate the early Christian belief that Jesus was the messianic king of Israel who would bring justice to all the earth, the ideal successor of King David, the author pictures Jesus being born in Bethlehem, David's town. The announcement of good news to the shepherds keeping their night watch in the fields is a proclamation that Jesus is Lord and savior of all people, and that the gospel would be received by those not considered important by the world's standards.

Now God's people, represented in this story by the shepherds, are sent to the manger to find the Lord. And the scene ends with a heavenly army intoning a rich chorus of praise. With a beautiful canticle, the author invites Christian readers to join in singing of God's glory too, because we too believe that in the birth of this child we have seen God's saving power.

Good literature also often accosts us, challenges us to reevaluate our ways of thinking, to improve our ways of acting. So our second reading, from the late first-century Pastoral Letter to Titus (2:11-14), tells us that the revelation of God's salvation in Christ demands nothing less of us than a total transformation of our lives. The author of this letter drew his ideas and inspiration from an ancient baptismal liturgy; he makes an urgent appeal to professed Christians to discover the demands of the Christ-life and to strive constantly for moral improvement.

Our consecration with Christ in baptism carries with it a corresponding deputation: As he puts it, we must engage in an interior battle for righteousness and honesty. We are called upon in his words to reject godless ways and worldly desires and to live temperately, justly, and devoutly as we await our blessed hope.

On the feast of Christmas we celebrate in a special way the mystery of God's self-revelation to us in the person of Jesus. For us Christians, it is by following Jesus more closely along his way that we can find God and live out God's will. So let us open our minds and hearts in prayer this Christmas night, that the compassionate God whom we encounter in the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus may transform us and deepen our commitment to his teachings, so that we may be more sensitive to their abiding values and be better able to realize these values in our society.

The Most Expensive Christmas Gift

With Christmas Day fast approaching, your wallet is surely feeling lighter with each passing day. So it probably isn't fair for me to draw your attention to the sky-rocketing price of food just before you do your supermarket shopping for your holiday celebration.

A television commentator recently remarked that it used to be that people cried when they peeled onions; now they cry when they buy them!

In these last few days of Advent, we would do well to look at the high price of food, and whether it is worth the high price. Not just any food, of course, but the food that is the Bread of Life, the food that was born in Bethlehem. Remember, Bethlehem means in Hebrew, "the house of bread." And it was there that God's priceless Christmas gift came into the world.

Jesus later underscored this point: "I am the Living Bread that came down from heaven. Whoever eats of this bread will live forever." (John 6:51) In our Church — our House of Bread — we offer this same gift in remembrance of Jesus. He gave Himself to us first, yet patiently waits for our return offering. This, too is part of the mystery of Christmas. If this Bread of Life is to be your Christmas offering to God, I urge you to walk carefully, more than if your were carrying the winning ticket to the ultimate lotto. For in this Bread we are offering nothing less than the world to God. Just as He offered eternity to us.

A young woman has been bedridden for months, in terrible pain. She is dying of AIDS. We offer up her pain — How costly is this food!

A mother watches with broken heart as her son whom she loves beyond all description loses himself in drugs and crime. We offer up her sorrow. — How costly is this food!

There will be no Christmas dinner for two-year old Nthamba, one of millions in Africa and around the world who are dying of malnutrition. We offer up their hunger — How costly is this food!

Javier is sixteen. His father left the family for good last week. "I never even got to know him." Javier cries. We offer up his tears — How costly is this food!

Young men and young women, deeply in love by not loved in return. We offer up their loneliness — How costly is this food!

The people in the land of that first Bethlehem: like so many people in other places, living daily under the shadow of the gun and the fear of war. We offer up their terror — How costly is this food!

This Christmas we offer the whole world — its sorrows and hopes, the woundings and healings. The sadness of farewells, the delights of new discovery. Walk proudly, my friend, walk solemnly when you bear this Bread of Life within you — How costly is this food!

In offering the world, we offer our own lives. That is our Christmas gift to God. But we can only give what He first gave us. If our offering to God costs us dearly, how much more expensive is God's offering to us? He was not just any life, but the life that is the Light of the World. He died and rose again so that our Bethlehem, our House of Bread, might sustain us with the food of eternal life — How costly is this food!

Was the price of His Christmas gift worth it? We answer that question every day in the way we live out, or refuse to live out, the life of Christ within us. Make every time and place a Bethlehem — a House of Bread — and find that only in breaking His bread with each other are we ever truly nourished.

The Joy Of Homecomings

One of my earliest childhood memories took place on Christmas Eve when Santa Claus came to our house. I was about four years old at the time and I remember telling my mother that "Santa" looked a lot like our next-door neighbor, Mr. Howland. But whatever doubts I had about Santa that night quickly disappeared as he said good-bye at our front door. "Where are your reindeer, Santa?" I asked. Without hesitation Santa replied, "Well, they're right there on your front lawn. It's hard to see them in the snow. But if you look over by that tree..." As he opened the door and a gust of wind blew into our front hall, I stretched high on my tippy toes and for a fleeting moment, I spotted three reindeer standing near our birch tree.

If only we could hold on forever to the faith we had as children. It's a faith of openness, innocence and awe that we wish we could recapture as adults. In the eyes of children, the world is a place of wonder and marvel, where reindeer fly, where people are good and where there is a God who watches over us all. And then one day we discover that Santa doesn't exist and Christmas is never quite the same. Children also learn — some much too early in life — that the world isn't always a safe place. So much of the goodness and mystery of life that we believe in as children has disappeared before we've reached adulthood.

I wonder if one of the reasons that so many people stop going to church and believing in God is fear — fear that like so many other beliefs we've held over the years, this one too will be shattered. As one childhood belief after another is shot down, are we frightened that the belief we hold the dearest — the one that sustains us when all others fail — will be destroyed as well? We need to know that the birth, death and resurrection of our Lord really did take place and that God's promise that he would send His Son to conquer sin and death is as real as it gets.

I think many of us have had times in our lives when we've "fallen away" from our Church and our faith in God. For a few years I didn't go to church, except at Christmas, Easter and when I was home for the holidays visiting my parents. I don't think I ever stopped believing in God; my faith was just slowly fading away. It was difficult to go to Christmas Mass at this time in my life. I felt awkward, sad and disingenuous. It reminded me of the first Christmas I learned from a friend that there wasn't a Santa Claus. Still I pretended to believe so that the magic and miracle of this day wouldn't be lost forever.

After a time, I realized that God would use whatever faith I had and help me to understand that even though I had let go of God, He would never let go of me. And this is the message of Christmas: That God became man to save us all, no matter how low we've sunk or how far we've run away from Him. God is a persistent and loving Father who wants us back. He knows the potential we have to touch the lives of others with His love and life and He wouldn't give up on us that easily.

On Christmas we're reminded that this may be the only day of the year when a friend, neighbor or family member comes back to Church. Those who have been away may feel uneasy stepping back into God's house. Let them know it's okay if they can't remember all the prayers. God knows what's in their hearts. Remember that Jesus didn't come to those who had it all figured out. Jesus spent a lot of His ministry lifting up his friends and followers who often experienced doubt and denial. But these were the same people in whom Jesus entrusted the future of His Church once they "turned to Him with their whole hearts."

In this Christmas season we celebrate the joy of homecomings in our families and in our churches. We celebrate the finding of the lost sheep — those lost to indifference, addiction, depression and abuse but who were found by a steadfast and jubilant Shepherd. The words of Jesus are clear about how deeply He longs to have all His children back in His arms: Once arrived home, he invites friends and neighbors in and says to them, "Rejoice with Me because I have found my lost sheep. I tell you, there will likewise be more joy in heaven over one repentant sinner than over ninety-nine righteous people."

This Christmas, if you've been away from the Church, try to let your doubts disappear as you stand at your church's door. "But where are you Lord?" you'll ask. Without hesitation He'll reply, "I'm right here in front of you. Some days it's harder to see me. But if you look over here..." Then open the door of your heart and let a gust of the Spirit's cool air blow into your life. Stretch high and look for the Infant Jesus. You'll find Him whenever you reach out to the hungry, the thirsty, the sick, the poor and powerless, the faithful and the fallen away. And He will be real.

Reason For The Season

As Christmas approaches:

Would everyone who is waiting in line in traffic, at the mall, or wherever just relax, take a deep breath, and try to remember the "Reason for the Season."

From Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, may we all recognize and respect the "seamless garment of life" from "womb to tomb." Perhaps those who promote assisted suicide should put as much effort into curing the afflictions that lead people to seek suicide. I don't presume to know what reckoning there might be for those that pursue this option but there are plenty of examples of the value of a life fully lived.

From Mother Teresa: "How can there be too many children? That is like saying there are too many flowers." There do not have to be any unwanted children: there are plenty of families and places where children are wanted.

For those that support the death penalty, if we truly are to follow the forgiving example of Jesus Christ, we must admit that the death penalty for the sake of vengeance is wrong.

Finally, from the Bible, there are really only two basic rules to remember and all else will fall into place: Love God with all your heart; Love your neighbor as yourself. If you think your neighbor is only the person across the street, you might have missed the message.

Churches Assist Refugee Office In Spreading Holiday Cheer

CHARLOTTE — Area churches are doing their part to help the Catholic Social Services Refugee Office make the holidays brighter for others.

As part of their Christmas activities, St. Luke, St. Gabriel and Our Lady of Assumption Catholic churches and Resurrection Lutheran Church are collecting and delivering gifts and toys to all refugee families who arrived in Charlotte in 1996. St. Luke parishioners are also donating 50 food baskets. Hope For Kids is involved in the project as well.

Other church groups are assisting the Refugee Office. The Sheen Circle Woman's Club at St. Ann Church is donating Christmas gifts, and Knights of Columbus members at St. Vincent dePaul Church offered toys.

A few weeks earlier, three Catholic churches — St. Luke, St. Therese in Mooresville and St. Matthew in Charlotte — provided Thanksgiving food for 40 refugee families who otherwise would not have been able to participate in this American tradition. Harris Teeter donated coupons for turkeys to assist in the endeavor.

The Refugee Office has resettled more than 5,000 refugees into the Charlotte area since 1979. The refugees have come from different parts of the world to escape political and economic hardships in their countries. The office's mission is to provide quality services and a caring support system which will empower the refugee clients to become self-sufficient, self-reliant and productive members of society.

Sonia Hayden, coordinator of volunteer services, said churches have been extremely generous in helping the refugee office, not only during the holidays, but year-round as well. "St. Luke parishioners recently donated 300 blankets," she said.

The office volunteer program meets many needs: providing services such as English tutoring, reception and clerical help, transportation for refugees to and from appointments, and interpretation and translation. Volunteers also assist in fund raising and other special projects.

The Refugee Office always welcomes donations, including financial gifts which can be used for operations year-round. For more information, call the office at (704) 568-8806.

At Christmas Pope John Paul II surrounds himself and his guests with decoration, food and tradition from his native homeland Poland. In this past Christmas Eve midnight Mass, a young boy in Polish costume offers the eucharistic gifts to the pope.

Sister Evelyn Mattern Joins Staff At N.C. Council Of Churches

RALEIGH — A Catholic sister with a Ph.D. in English Literature recently joined the staff of the North Carolina Council of Churches, an ecumenical organization comprising 25 denominations and six individual congregations.

Sister Evelyn Mattern will share the program associate position with the Rev. George Reed, a Baptist minister and attorney.

Sister Evelyn worked for the council in the late 1980s as lobbyist, publications editor, and organizer of various social action efforts. During that time she served as a strong advocate for criminal justice reform, programs for children, affordable housing and peace. She also had a special interest in farm workers.

She has been teaching English for the past several years within the N.C. community college system. She is a published author, having written a book, Blessed Are You: The Beatitudes and Our Survival, and contributed to such publications as America, Commonweal and the National Catholic Reporter.

A popular speaker and retreat leader, Sister Evelyn gave a keynote address at the Charlotte Diocese's Office of Justice and Peace conference, Faith Doing Justice, in October.

She will work at her new job with several of the same committees and social concerns she had occupied herself with during the '80's, bringing a keen emphasis on spirituality.

The Rev. Mr. Reed, who holds degrees in law and divinity, has worked for the Baptist State Convention as the director of citizenship education and world hunger for the Council on Christian Life and Public Affairs. He directed the convention's legislative actions, and focused his attention on such issues as hunger, health care, environmental stewardship and peacemaking.

The Rev. Mr. Reed, having served in previous years on a number of council program committees, will lead the council's legislative and political action ministry.

"This is a dream team," said Collins Kilburn, executive director of the council. "Both Sister Evelyn and George are very familiar with the council and are very well-regarded by all who have worked with them in years past."

Sitting on a stool at the edge of the crowd, his earthly belongings safely stored in the stolen shopping cart beside him, the old curmudgeon watched with jaundiced eye and listened with a skeptical ear to the speaker.

The words from the loudspeaker were clear: "And so again I tell you, dear friends, that I do indeed love each and every one of you, and I know you love me. Let us show that love by casting your vote for ..."

He looked at me and said, "Do you know what love feels like, young man? Love is the feeling of being wanted. That politician doesn't love me. He doesn't want me. I'm not welcome in his home."

I've never forgotten those words: "Love is the feeling of being wanted." Creating the feeling of being wanted is called hospitality. The old man could identify those who loved him by those who wanted him in their homes.

Hospitality is the virtue of letting others know they are welcome, that they are wanted. Hospitality is different from charity, which is giving something to another.

Hospitality is one of the most complicated, most difficult, most emotion-filled actions of human life. Not being wanted is arguably the worst thing that can happen to a human being.

We are more conscious of hospitality and charity during the Christmas season because it is the time for love. But unfortunately, Christmas hospitality is terribly difficult.

Christmas is about family, a time to be surrounded by the people we love. It is easy to want those we love to be with us.

But to really "want" those we find difficult, those who are "not really our kind of people," those who are undesirable, those who are poor: Isn't that asking a bit much? It is easier to open our wallets and give them our charity. Don't ask us to open our homes and give them our hospitality.

In light of the infancy story of Jesus, there is something fitting about the fact that Christmas is a time for us of great stress and strain on the virtue of hospitality. Joseph and Mary were not wanted, there was "no room for them in the inn."

We have romanticized that into the stable and the animals and the stars and the shepherds, but the bottom line is "there was no room." Joseph, Mary and Jesus were not wanted.

There are people not wanted in our culture. These people fulfill the role of the holy family in our everyday lives.

Of course, so often the reason these people are not wanted is their own

What is ... HOSPITALITY?

fault. But fault has nothing to do with hospitality. It is easy to be loving and hospitable to the faultless. As Jesus said, "even pagans do that."

What turns being nice into the virtue of hospitality is that we actually want, love and welcome those who are filled with faults. We welcome those who have fouled up their own lives, sinned themselves into sadness and sorrow, and made us victims of their actions.

Would we welcome into our homes the unwed mother if we didn't know she was Mary?

Hospitality is not easy because unlike charity, which can be done from a comfortable distance, hospitality demands our personal involvement. We can only lose money if charity goes awry, but we can be hurt when we practice hospitality.

If we actually open ourselves up to truly "want" — love — someone who is difficult, someone who is "unwanted," we don't know where it might lead. It might get sticky. Christmas hospitality is a great risk.

Because of the risk, we choose charity over hospitality, we give gifts rather than give ourselves, we reward people rather than want them, we make sure there is some kind of buffer between us and them.

Being wanted is basic to human life. Not being wanted can kill. This is true of abortion, euthanasia, capital punishment and other forms of killing. But it is also true when we are inhospitable, when we shut others out and do not want them.

We look for stories of hospitality at Christmastime because something deep within us, something planted there at baptism and nourished every time we receive the Eucharist says that hospitality is a life-giving virtue we need to know about, need to bring more and more into our lives.

The ultimate example of hospitality is, of course, God, who chose to "want" us, to love us, even though we are difficult. We are not really God's "kind of people." We are undesirable, we have faults, we have sinned ourselves into sadness and sorrow, and we constantly foul up our lives.

Hospitality is treating others like God treats us.

(Father Faucher is a priest of the Diocese of Boise, Idaho, on assignment in the Diocese of Baker, Ore.)

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Someone I know felt recently that she was failing in one area of her life, and the feeling was sickening for her — literally. It caused her to feel ill.

I think that this person was blowing her so-called failure way out of proportion in her own mind. But that's not the point here.

The point is that all around us are people who could benefit if we expressed our confidence in them — our belief in them. All around us are people who need to be reminded how great their worth is.

What does this have to do with Christmas?

Christmas isn't just a winter festival or an end-of-the year holiday celebration. Christmas is about something.

It's about the Son of God becoming one of us — reason enough to celebrate. But also, by becoming one of us Jesus punctuates the worth and meaning of our own, quite-incarnate lives. Actually, I'd say that the incarnation of God's Son heightens our worth.

It follows that it is Christlike to recognize the worth of those around us and to tell them so.

It may help others to recognize the truth about themselves. And, not incidentally, it may help them feel better.

The Roses' Christmas tribute

By Father W. Thomas Faucher
Catholic News Service

(In this true story I've changed the people's names because they feel strongly about their privacy.)

It was a cold but clear day in 1953, about Dec. 14 or 15, when John Rose went to see Ed O'Connell.

Rose was a jeweler, an eastern European who had come to America after the war. He and his wife Naomi were among the few Jewish families in the area.

O'Connell was a Catholic, a former seminarian, who was one of a new breed of peace officer with some new ideas about how justice should be served.

Rose wasn't sure how Sheriff O'Connell would understand what he wanted. Rose had thought of having someone come with him who spoke better English. But his Jewish friends disagreed with him; even the rabbi who came to the area four times a year did not think he was right.

Rose explained to the sheriff that just 10 years before, at the height of the war, he and his family had escaped deportation to the death camps by being taken in by their Christian neighbors. His younger brother and sister were actually posing as the children of one family, Rose's older sister was with another family, and Rose and his parents lived with yet another as distant cousins.

For almost a year, Rose's family had not been together. So plans were made for all the families to join together for Christmas dinner.

They felt the Germans would never down and asked again.

Even after Rose died in 1979, Naomi and then her son Matt continued the tradition most years.

In the early days most who came were in jail for petty theft or drunken-

"Naomi Rose has a framed note on her kitchen wall.... It says: 'It was the only time in my life I had ever been invited anywhere. Thank you for dinner. You people are what God wants all of us to be.'" expect Jews to be eating Christmas dinner with Christians.

For the Roses, all the Christmas rituals were new and strange. To help make them feel at home, their hosts used a few Jewish prayers and stressed that Mary, Joseph and Jesus were all homeless Jews, taken in by someone else that first Christmas.

Now 10 years later Rose had come up with an idea to return the kindness of that Christmas dinner. He wanted to invite five prisoners who would be in jail on Christmas Day to come to his home for dinner.

Sheriff O'Connell decided to allow it as long as a guard went along. Thus began a continuing tradition of having several prisoners come to Christmas dinner.

With each new sheriff, Rose went ness. Over time the Roses noticed that the prisoners were gradually getting younger. Most of their offenses were drug related.

In the early years, too, all the men who came had experienced Christmas dinner when growing up. But later, most who came had never had any kind of Christmas dinner before.

Rose insisted from the beginning that the dinner never be publicized. His first Christmas dinner had to be secret, and he felt that if the prisoners' dinner became famous it would distract from their enjoyment of it.

Matt Rose's son did a little project on the dinner as part of a college assignment. He noted that none of the prisoners invited to dinner ever was arrested for a crime after his release.

Naomi Rose has a framed note on her kitchen wall from a man who had dinner with them about 1960. It says:

"It was the only time in my life I had ever been invited anywhere. Thank you for dinner. You people are what God wants all of us to be."

FAITH IN ACTION

"The Last Straw", by Paula Palangi McDonald, is a beautiful Christmas story about a quarreling family and what the mother did to restore a sense of caring among its members. Ellen McNeal challenges her four squabbling youngsters to begin a new tradition of filling a little crib with straw for baby Jesus. Each piece of straw would represent a good deed. Once a week they were to put all their names in a hat. "Whosever name we draw, we'll do kind things for that person for a whole week" in secrecy, she says. The story is one of several compiled and edited by author Joe Wheeler in Christmas in My Heart, A Timeless Treasury of Heartwarming Stories (Doubleday, 1540 Broadway, New York, N.Y. 10036. Hardback, $14.95).

Reflection: We can extend hospitality to strangers — but not only to strangers. How could your own family members act more hospitably toward each other?

A cardinal virtue for Christmas

By Dan Luby
Catholic News Service

There was desperation in our eyes and panic in our foreign voices. Pushing our baby in a cheap stroller that Roman cobblestones had shaken to pieces in a matter of days, we were wandering frantically through the crowded aisles of the Italian equivalent of K-Mart in search of disposable diapers.

Our desperation sprang partly from a shrinking supply of Huggies, and partly from the overwhelming stress of simply being unable to speak the language, making it impossible to ask for help or even read signs.

As graduate students with little savings and only the hope of jobs, our shaky financial status fueled our anxiety. Rome was much more expensive than we'd expected.

In the midst of our visible anguish, a woman walked up and asked, in the most lyrical New Jersey accent imaginable, if we were new to Rome. Taking us in hand with the kindly forcefulness of a veteran den mother, she drove us through the harrowing Roman traffic, down a narrow street a few blocks from our apartment to an obscure discount shop selling diapers at a much better price than the chain store.

She said simply that she remembered what it was like to be a foreigner and not know the way around. She left without even telling us her name.

This generous stranger had been a lifesaver — one of those blessings that God often drops into our laps when we least expect it.

I always will think of her kindness as a watershed of grace that helped us persevere.

She never invited us into her home for a meal. She offered no gift, promised no lodging. But she made us feel as welcome and cared for as any amount of traditional entertaining could.

Hospitality is a cardinal Christmas virtue.

Our vision of Christmas hospitality is in the familiar setting of home, of feasting, of lavish gifts. But underneath all that, hospitality is more an attitude of welcome.

Perhaps we don't have a big enough house for a party. Maybe we can't afford to have guests or are too shy or have family circumstances that don't permit us to ask people over.

But not being able to have company doesn't bar us from exercising hospitality of the heart. God knows there are people whose paths cross ours daily who are starving — starving for a human touch, a few minutes of conversation.

A kind word or a listening ear or a helping hand for someone lost or stranded or lonely might be the best Christmas gift you give.

(Luby is the director of the Division of Christian Formation for the Diocese of Fort Worth, Texas.)

FAITH IN THE MARKETPLACE

Tell of a time when the spirit of welcome — someone's hospitality — transformed your Christmas.

"The time I was invited to the home of someone I had just met for her annual Christmas party. She was 80 and I was about 35 — and I was touched she would reach out to someone my age." — Sally Steiner, Southold, N.Y.

"We were invited by our church to participate in a family Advent program. My husband, myself and our three kids met once a week at the church, doing crafts and talking about the Christ in Christmas, the fun in Christmas and how our families celebrate the holidays.... For the first time in many years, I enjoyed Christmas again — because of the hospitality of my own parish." — Robyn Melkerson, Chardon, Ohio

"One year the bishop gave me $100 so I could buy gifts for my grandkids. Now I help distribute food and gifts to families who need help to have a good Christmas, and through that work I'm helped to be in the spirit of Christmas myself." — Marlene Worth, Sioux Falls, S.D.

Physician-Assisted Suicide Key Issue In World Of Religion

By JERRY FILTEAU

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Whatever the U.S. Supreme Court decides in 1997 about physician-assisted suicide, 1996 will go down in history as the year that set the stage for the high court's most momentous life-and-death policy decision since it legalized abortion in 1973.

In March and April two federal appeals courts — the 9th Circuit Court in San Francisco and the 2nd in New York — declared, each on different grounds, that terminally ill Americans have a constitutional right to kill themselves and have a doctor help them do it.

The Supreme Court agreed Oct. 1 to review both cases. In November the U.S. Catholic Conference and numerous other religious bodies filed friend-of-the-court briefs urging the nation's highest judicial body not to enshrine a so-called "right to die" in the U.S. Constitution.

In Michigan Dr. Jack Kevorkian — assisted suicide's most widely recognized advocate because of his frequent defiance of the law to help patients die and publicize his cause — played a role in more than a dozen new suicides in 1996 after a jury acquitted him of criminal charges in two of the earliest suicides at which he assisted.

1996 was also a year of U.S. presidential elections and bitter debate over partial-birth abortion, new troubles in the Middle East, Africa, the Balkans and Northern Ireland, further ecumenical advances and difficulties, and new Catholic intramural conflicts.

It was a year when Congress passed a two-step increase in the minimum wage, a move long urged by the U.S. bishops and many Catholic social service agencies.

But Congress also enacted welfare reform legislation that imposed strict time limits on welfare eligibility, excluded legal immigrants from most public assistance including Medicaid, and sharply reduced future food stamp expenditures.

The U.S. bishops called the new welfare law "deeply flawed" and the head of Catholic Charities USA called it a "national disgrace."

New federal legislation on health care insurance made it easier for people to retain coverage despite job changes or pre-existing conditions.

A new law called for V-chips in future television sets to let parents block offensive programs, and networks tried to work out a voluntary content warning system to avoid federal regulation.

It was on partial-birth abortion, however, that the U.S. hierarchy tried hardest to make its voice heard. In April President Clinton vetoed the legislation to ban such abortions, which involve suctioning the brain of the fetus, allowing for easier delivery of the collapsed head.

In a joint letter to Clinton, the nation's eight cardinals and Bishop Anthony M. Pilla of Cleveland, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, vowed to fight his veto, saying the procedure the legislation sought to ban bordered on infanticide.

In a series of high-profile actions — including national days of prayer, a grass-roots mailing campaign that brought millions of postcards to Congress, and an unprecedented prayer vigil of all U.S. cardinals and dozens of bishops on the steps of the Capitol — the bishops waged a public campaign of extraordinary proportions to get Congress to override the veto. The override vote succeeded in the House but failed in the Senate.

A government order barring U.S. military chaplains from participating in the postcard campaign provoked wide controversy and a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of such an order.

Despite the clear, ongoing conflict between the bishops and Clinton on abortion, in his November re-election the president had a stronger showing among Catholics than among the general populace. He got slightly under 50 percent of the total vote but 53 percent of the Catholic vote.

More than most years, for Catholics 1996 was a time when the death or illness of leading church figures was often in the news.

Millions mourned Chicago Cardinal Joseph Bernardin's death Nov. 14 at the age of 68. His serenity in facing terminal cancer capped a long career as one of the most notable U.S. Catholic leaders in the 20th century.

Only months before his death he launched the Catholic Common Ground Project, an effort to overcome divisions among U.S. Catholics through dialogue, reconciliation, and a restored sense of common ground centered on Jesus Christ.

Only a week before his death, he wrote to the Supreme Court urging it to reject legalization of physician-assisted suicide.

Other leading church figures who died in 1996 included:

- Belgian Cardinal Leo Jozef Suenens, 91, a leader at the Second Vatican Council and in the postconciliar Catholic charismatic renewal.

- Philadelphia's Cardinal John J. Krol, 85, one of Vatican II's undersecretaries and the second president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops.

- Father Max Thurian, 74, a theologian and liturgist of the ecumenical monastic community of Taizé, France, a Calvinist who in 1987 became a Catholic and was ordained a priest.

- Uruguayan Jesuit Father Juan Luis Segundo, 70, one of the originators of liberation theology in Latin America.

Mother Teresa of Calcutta, the Nobel Peace laureate who is world-renowned for her work with the poor and dying, spent her 86th birthday Aug. 26 in a Calcutta hospital recovering from a combination of malaria, heart problems and pneumonia that nearly killed her.

It was one of two severe health crises during the year for the nun who has headed the Missionaries of Charity since she founded the order in 1950.

In October Mother Teresa became the fifth person in history to be named an honorary U.S. citizen and only the second, after Sir Winston Churchill in 1963, to be so honored while still living. The following month she was hospitalized again in critical condition and had angioplasty to open restricted arteries.

Pope John Paul II, 76, faced several bouts with fever during the year and in October was hospitalized to remove his appendix, which his doctors called a source of recurring infections.

Those illnesses, coupled with the pontiff's increasingly noticeable hand tremor and his issuance of new papal election rules, helped fuel new rounds of speculation about when the next papal election will occur and who will succeed him.

In November some 1,600 cardinals, bishops and priests ordained in 1946 joined the pope in Rome to celebrate his and their 50th anniversary of priestly ordination. The pope took the occasion to write a book of personal reflections on his own priesthood, published in English in the United States under the title "Gift and Mystery."

Despite his age and health problems, as the pontiff completed his 18th year in the papacy he continued to be an active international traveler. He visited Guatemala, Nicaragua, El Salvador and Venezuela in February. He went to Tunisia in April, Slovenia in May, Germany in June, and Hungary and France in separate trips in September.

In his annual address to the world's Vatican diplomats in January he urged a total ban on nuclear testing. When the test ban treaty was approved in September, the Vatican was among the first to sign.

In February he issued new rules for future conclaves of cardinals to elect a new pope. In March he published an apostolic exhortation on consecrated life in which he called for greater decision-making roles in the Church for women religious.

In April, as a conference in Geneva prepared to discuss updating an international conventional weapons convention, he called for a global ban on anti-personnel land mines. In June, on the eve of a new international conference on housing, Habitat II, he decried the economic inequities fostering rapid growth of urban slums around the world. In July he condemned the massacre of 300 Tutsis in a Burundi refugee camp.

In October Pope John Paul said in a message to the Pontifical Academy of Sciences that the theory of evolution must be recognized as "more than a hypothesis." The message was part of a series of papal efforts in recent years to promote closer dialogue and cooperation between the worlds of science and faith, but it drew strong opposition from those who view divine revelation in Scripture and evolutionary theory as fundamentally opposed to each other.

In a radio broadcast to China in December he urged Chinese Catholics in the government-approved church, which is not united with Rome, to reunite with those loyal to Rome. Several reports from China during the year indicated that government authorities were waging a new campaign to force underground Catholics, who remain loyal to Rome, into the government-approved church.

In early December the pope met with the primate of the Anglican Communion, Archbishop George R. Carey of Canterbury. The two expressed a continuing commitment to advancing ecumenical relations but called the opposite stands of their churches on ordination of women an obstacle to Catholic-Anglican reconciliation. Earlier in the year the Catholic Theological Society of America asked its members to embark on a year-long study of the status of Catholic teaching on women's ordination, based on a paper that expressed strong skepticism about the claims of authority in the latest Vatican document on the issue.

The pontiff set off a wide range of church activities all over the world with his initiatives to prepare for the start of the third millennium of Christianity through a series of regional bishops' synods in Rome, a three-year spiritual preparation focusing on the persons of the Trinity, and a declaration that the year 2000 will be celebrated as a special year of jubilee.

In a long series of Wednesday audience talks on Mary throughout the year, he called attention to Catholic Marian beliefs.

He devoted many of his Sunday Angelus talks to the spiritual riches of the East in an effort to deepen Catholic-Orthodox dialogue and understanding.

Catholic-Orthodox tensions in Eastern Europe and Russia continued, however, as Orthodox officials objected to Catholic activities in the region.

The pope's own 1995 call for ecumenical discussion of how his ministry, as bishop of Rome and successor of Peter, can serve Christian unity drew numerous responses in 1996.

Several U.S. and international bilateral dialogue commissions agreed to address the issue of Petrine ministry as a service of unity in the near future.

The world's top two non-Catholic ecumenical leaders said in July, in response to questions from a leading Polish Catholic weekly, Tygodnik Powszechny, that the current exercise of the pope's office within the Catholic Church poses a "decisive obstacle" to Christian unity. The two — the Rev. Konrad Raiser, secretary general of the World Council of Churches, and Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew I of Constantinople, first among all the Orthodox patriarchs — said there is a desire among the churches for a universal office of unity and leadership, but not in the form that the papacy is currently understood and exercised.

The pope, in a message to a December conference on papal primacy convened by the Vatican, described the issue as a critical one for ecumenical discussion.

Several in-church controversies occupied the attention of U.S. Catholics in 1996. Those controversies served to highlight the debate in the church over what is destructive dissent and what is constructive dialogue and appropriate, loyal expression of legitimate Christian freedom.

In March Bishop Fabian W. Bruskewitz of Lincoln, Neb., attracted national media attention when he enacted a special law in his diocese interdicting and later excommunicating Catholics for joining organizations such as Call to Action, a group which at the national level counts numerous priests and full-time church workers and at least three bishops among its members.

In May, when a coalition of groups launched a yearlong "We Are Church" petition campaign — seeking, among other things, more lay voice in church decisions, changes in moral teachings and married and women priests — Bishop Pilla called the campaign divisive and not conducive to real dialogue in the church. Later in the year some Canadian Catholics launched a similar drive and met a similar cool response from their bishops.

Retired San Francisco Archbishop John R. Quinn, in a June 29 address at Oxford University, called for reform of the Roman Curia, a new ecumenical council and more direct and substantive involvement of the world's bishops in the manner in which the pope exercises his teaching and governing office. He said such changes are needed to bring the Catholic Church and other Christian Ore., they endorsed the ecumenically sponsored Burned Churches Fund, and many subsequently took up collections in their dioceses to help rebuild black churches, mainly in the South, that had recently been destroyed or damaged by arsonists.

Bishop Pilla, with the backing of the other bishops, issued a statement sharply objecting to the secret taping by Oregon prison authorities of a prisoner's sacramental confession to a priest and the continued existence and use of the tape despite church demands that it be destroyed to protect the sacramental seal of confession.

At their November meeting in Washington the bishops approved, after several years' work, a document on Catholic colleges and universities, implementing for the United States the pope's 1990 worldwide norms for Catholic higher education.

They also issued a new pastoral plan for ministry with young adults and approved a brief statement of 10 ethical principles to guide every Catholic's economic life.

Americans suffered through two major airplane tragedies in 1996: the crash May 11 of ValuJet Flight 592 in the Florida Everglades, killing 110 people, and the still-unexplained explosion July 17 of TWA Flight 800 over the Atlantic, killing 230.

The pipe bomb set off July 27 in Atlanta's Centennial Olympic Park directly killed only one person but injured more than 100 and marred the spirit of athletic ideals and international friendship behind the 100-year-old modern Olympics.

Violence may be an inevitable part of the news every year, but few acts so shocked the nation as the brutal Jan. 27 convent attack in Maine, in which a former mental patient bludgeoned two nuns to death and maimed two others. In October the attacker, Mark Bechard, was found not criminally responsible because of insanity.

The Church's stand of nonviolence as a Gospel response to violence found witness in numerous ways in 1996, especially in relation to capital punishment.

The movie "Dead Man Walking," dramatizing the real-life death row ministry of St. Joseph Sister Helen Prejean, earned Susan Sarandon a "best actress" Oscar at the Academy Awards.

Sister Prejean spoke on nonviolence and described her work in numerous speeches and interviews around the country and received Notre Dame University's Laetare Medal for her work.

At the state and local level many bishops stated their opposition to the use of capital punishment and appealed for clemency when a prisoner in their area was about to be executed. Shortly before his own death Cardinal Bernardin visited a man facing execution for multiple murders. He told the victims' families that his compassion for the killer did not mean he condoned the man's crimes.

Pope John Paul was among religious leaders who pleaded in vain for the life of two men executed by firing squad in Guatemala in September.

Violence struck church personnel dramatically in Africa during the year, beginning in early January when two missionary nuns from the United States and Canada were brutally murdered in Ghana.

Two nuns were killed in Rwanda March 27 when their car hit an anti-tank mine. In Algeria, seven French Trappist monks were kidnapped by Islamic extremists in March and killed two months later, and the bishop of Oran and his chauffeur were killed by a gasoline bomb in August. In Burundi an archbishop and two nuns were murdered in a car ambush in September. The following month an archbishop was killed in Zaire during fighting between rebels and government forces.

In August Sudanese rebels released five Catholic missionaries and a Sudanese priest after holding them captive for two weeks.

Civil strife in several African countries cost thousands of lives in 1996. In April the U.S. military evacuated 1,600 people from Monrovia, Liberia, as warring factions fought, looted and burned throughout the city.

In Burundi, after months of ethnic fighting in which scores to hundreds of civilians were massacred on several occasions, the Tutsi-dominated military seized power from the country's Hutu majority coalition government in a coup July 25. International agencies reported churches closer to full unity.

New York's Cardinal John J. O'Connor publicly took issue with Archbishop Quinn's views, devoting three pages of his archdiocesan newspaper to a detailed critique of the Oxford lecture.

In mid-August Cardinal Bernardin, joined by a committee of prominent Catholics from diverse backgrounds, announced the Catholic Common Ground Project. The goal of the initiative was to open a new dialogue to overcome U.S. Catholic polarizations, repudiating ideological extremes and revitalizing those in the Catholic center, united and grounded in their shared commitment to Christ and church teaching.

Cardinals Bernard F. Law of Boston, James A. Hickey of Washington, Anthony J. Bevilacqua of Philadelphia and Adam J. Maida of Detroit publicly criticized "Called to Be Catholic," the framework statement of Cardinal Bernardin's initiative, saying its call for dialogue and toleration of differences appeared to place authentic Catholic teaching and dissent on the same level.

Shortly before Cardinal Bernardin died, at a first meeting of the project's advisory committee, Archbishop Oscar H. Lipscomb of Mobile, Ala., was named to succeed Cardinal Bernardin as chairman of the project.

At national meetings in June and November the U.S. bishops continued work on the first completely new English sacramentary in a quarter-century, a project that has occupied them for the past several years and is expected to be completed in 1997.

At their June meeting in Portland, in August that more than 2,000 people had been killed in the months preceding the coup and some 6,000 in the three weeks after.

During the months of fighting tens of thousands of Rwandan Hutus in Burundi refugee camps fled to Tanzania or were forcibly returned to Rwanda.

In Zaire, a sudden October flare-up between Zairean forces and Tutsi settlers threatened to topple Zaire's already weak government and forced hundreds of thousands of Rwandan Hutus to flee refugee camps in Eastern Zaire. The threat of massive starvation and disease brought papal pleas for immediate aid and a flurry of international efforts to meet the crisis.

The Middle East peace process, dramatically altered since the November 1995 assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, came almost to a standstill in 1996 as numerous new obstacles arose.

The year opened with a sweeping victory for Yasser Arafat and the peace process as Palestinian voters conducted their first-ever democratic elections for a president and legislative council. But in late February and early March suicide bomb attacks by Palestinian extremists killed more than 50 people. In April, artillery attacks on northern Israeli settlements by Hezbollah militants in southern Lebanon brought Israeli counterattacks, including one which accidentally killed more than 100 refugees at a camp in Lebanon.

In June Israelis narrowly elected Benjamin Netanyahu as their new prime minister. Negotiations on the status of Jerusalem were delayed and negotiations over issues of Palestinian self-rule came to a virtual halt amid new tensions. In September Netanyahu and Arafat met and agreed to renew negotiations.

In Bosnia-Herzegovina, in the wake of the 1995 Dayton accords and Paris peace treaty, U.S. and other North Atlantic Treaty Organization troops in January oversaw the withdrawal of opposing forces from a 1,000-mile-long cease-fire line.

Despite ongoing tensions, the Bosnian peace permitted the beginning of war crime arrests, indictments and trials to deal with charges of systematic rape, murder and ethnic cleansing during the region's four-year civil war. In September Bosnia-Herzegovina held its first internationally supervised national elections. Local elections were delayed to a later date.

After months of stalemate the tenuous peace process in Northern Ireland suffered another setback in February when the Irish Republican Army broke an 18-month cease-fire with new terrorist bomb attacks in England.

In December the awarding of the Nobel Peace Prize to two East Timorese human rights leaders, Bishop Carlos Filipe Ximenes Belo of Dili and Jose Ramos-Horta, highlighted the long human rights struggle in East Timor since Indonesia annexed the predominantly Catholic former Portuguese colony in 1976.

Among important transitions in the religious world in 1996 was the retirement in June of another Nobel Peace laureate, Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu, as archbishop of Cape Town, South Africa. The world-renowned anti-apartheid leader continues to head the national Truth and Reconciliation Commission established by the post-apartheid government to investigate human rights violations by under the former white-minority regime.

Greek Orthodox Archbishop Iakovos of North and South America, for 37 years the chief Orthodox leader in the Western Hemisphere, retired July 29. The next day the Holy Synod of the Ecumenical Patriarchate divided his two-continent jurisdiction into four metropolitanates and elected Archbishop Spyridon to succeed him in the New York-based Archdiocese of America, encompassing the United States.

Pope John Paul placed another American high in Vatican ranks in August when he named Denver's Archbishop J. Francis Stafford to head the Pontifical Council for the Laity.

Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas — who as a youth quit studying for the Catholic priesthood because of racism in the seminary and who became an Episcopalian as an adult — announced in June that he has returned to the Catholic Church.

Prominent Catholics who died during the year included:

DENVER — Church is defined as both the company of Christian faithful and the building in which they worship. The history of Denver's Holy Spirit congregation includes a period of years without a structure to call its own; hence, the two-fold definition indeed applies.

Bishop Michael J. Begley of Charlotte established a mission in Denver during the late 1970s, as the Catholic population in the area had been growing over the years. With no edifice in which to worship as a Catholic family, Father Carlo Tarasi (then pastor of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton) celebrated the mission's first Mass at St. Peter by the Lake Episcopal Church in Westport in March 1979.

Father Dennis Fotinos, vicar of St. Peter Church at the time, had extended an invitation to the Catholic mission to use the Westport facility for worship.

That message of welcome marked the beginning of a nine-year stretch in which the mission congregation gathered on Saturday evenings for Mass in the Episcopal church. Pastors from St. Dorothy parish continued their administration of the Denver faithful, with occasional assistance from the Benedictine monks of Belmont Abbey.

With weekly Masses continuing at St. Peter Church — and the local Catholic population growing — the mission family began to yearn for a spiritual home of its own. By 1987, when more than 100 families were worshipping together, Father Charles Rooks moved the mission Mass time from Saturday to Sunday. The switch led to the congregation's being moved from St. Peter Church to the East Lincoln Optimist Club building.

Finally, in May 1988, the Charlotte Diocese purchased from Lincoln County a structure that once housed Triangle School. The building, considered a community landmark, served as an elementary school from 1925 to 1986.

That development marked a new phase in the mission's history. A renovation project ensued during the summer into the autumn, resulting in a nave, sanctuary, offices, classrooms, living quarters and space for social events. Many excited parishioners were active in the remodeling of the facility.

The new church was ready for Christmas time in 1988, and the first Mass was celebrated Dec. 25. Bishop John F. Donoghue blessed the structure in May 1989.

In 1991 the Holy Spirit family began its annual Septemberfest, a church carnival whose proceeds have helped reduce church debt.

Father Conrad Kimbrough — who is president and co-founder of the pro-life ministry Room at the Inn — has served as administrator of the Denver church since July 1993. About 265 families worship at Holy Spirit, a mission of St. Therese parish in Mooresville, and the registry continues to grow.

Bishops Past And Present Will Join Together For Upcoming Diocesan Jubilee Celebration

By JOANN KEANE
and JIMMY ROSTAR

CHARLOTTE — The upcoming diocesan celebration — 25 years as a diocese and the jubilee for Bishop Michael J. Begley, bishop emeritus — will leave its mark in history in yet another way as past and present bishops of the Diocese of Charlotte join to concelebrate this historic Mass on Jan. 12 at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte.

As the diocese's founding bishop, Bishop Begley will join Archbishop John F. Donoghue — Charlotte's second bishop, serving from 1984 until his elevation to Archbishop of Atlanta in 1993 — and Bishop Curlin along with Bishop F. Joseph Gossman, bishop of Raleigh, and other clergy to concelebrate the Jubilee Mass. This celebration will kick-off the anniversary year which diocesan officials plan to fill with recollections of yesterday and visions for tomorrow.

"Having Archbishop Donoghue join in tribute to Bishop Begley is certainly a moment in history," said Bishop Curlin. "We are equally blessed by having Bishop Gossman plan to attend. This makes for a full state-wide celebration of the founding of our diocese, and tribute to the numerous contributions of Bishop Begley."

"It is a time to pause and thank God for all that has been accomplished," said Bishop Curlin, installed as Charlotte's bishop in 1994. "It is also a time to rededicate ourselves in response to the needs and challenges of the future."

At a Mass celebrated at St. Patrick Cathedral a quarter-century ago, western North Carolina Catholics welcomed Bishop Begley as the head of the newly established diocese. At that time, some 34,200 Catholics lived in the 46-county territory which, through papal mandate, created the second diocese in the state.

"When I came to North Carolina back in 1934 when I was ordained, there were 9,000 Catholics in the whole state," Bishop Begley said.

The growth, said Bishop Begley, indicates a realization of the dream of sev-

For St. Barnabas Youth Minister, Service Is Central

A caring youth minister helps kids learn to see the face of Jesus in those they serve and feel good about what they do.

ARDEN — When Cathie and Mike Stout moved to Arden from South Bend, Ind., their children were in high school.

As parishioners at St. Barnabas Church, the couple felt that the youth had too many opportunities for socials but too few for social justice.

Fortunately, the Stouts discovered the personal satisfaction in volunteering at one of the shelters for the homeless in Asheville in their move south in 1987. So the couple offered to plan community service projects for the youth of the parish.

"I think that service is important in everybody's life," said Cathie Stout. "Kids learn to see the face of Jesus in those they serve, and feel better about what they do."

Their children are grown now, but the Stouts find themselves as involved as ever in ministry to youth. For the past six years, Cathie Stout has served as full-time youth minister for St. Barnabas Church. Her husband remains her strongest proponent, as well as her most available volunteer.

Although a member of the search committee for this position, Stout never considered herself a candidate until "the Holy Spirit began working on me."

The Spirit, in this instance, worked largely through Mercy Sister Carolyn Mary Coll, now a pastoral associate at St. Michael Church in Gastonia, and Carolyn Bergman, youth minister at St. Michael. Both offer training for youth ministers, and Stout regards them as friends and mentors who influenced her decision to become a youth minister.

Being a part of the religious minority in western North Carolina sparked the couple's outreach and induced "a real rebirth of (their) faith." They considered this environment especially challenging

Catholic Leaders Pray For Peace At Christmas

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II and Catholic leaders around the world celebrated the birth of the Prince of Peace with prayers for harmony, justice and an end to violence.

"Peace on earth and good will to all" was invoked during midnight Mass in a poinsettia-filled St. Peter's Basilica and in the tension-filled Japanese Embassy in Peru where an archbishop celebrated Mass for more than 100 hostages.

Bethlehem celebrated the hometown birth of Jesus amid tight security because of ongoing conflicts between Israelis and Palestinians in the region.

In his annual Christmas message "urbi et orbi," to the city and the world, Pope John Paul prayed for lasting peace in the Middle East, Africa and Central America, but also chastised the world for not doing enough to help the victims of war and conflict.

The ongoing tensions in Rwanda, Burundi and Zaire, and the precarious situation of refugees and displaced people in the region, were key concerns in the pope's message.

"How can we forget Africa?" he asked. "This young continent is experiencing, amid the general indifference of the international community, one of the cruelest human tragedies of its history."

The pope also prayed for peace in "Bethlehem and all the Holy Land, where Jesus was born and lived: the land which he loved, the land where hope must not die, despite provocations and profound differences."

Latin-rite Patriarch Michel Sabbah of Jerusalem called on Israelis and Palestinians to continue working toward peace, and said that despite current difficulties, he still had hope.

In his annual Christmas message, the patriarch said, "We ask God to strengthen the people of good will in this holy land — Jews, Muslims and Christians — so that they become able to build the peace desired by all, the peace based on dignity of all people ... (and) on equality, justice and love."

Franciscan Father Giuseppe Nazzaro, the custodian of Catholic shrines in the Holy Land, said, "Sadly,

CHD Invites Applicants For Local Poverty Grants

The Campaign for Human Development, the United States Bishops' anti-poverty program, is accepting grant applications for the 1997 funding year. Established in 1970 as a response of our society, the Campaign makes small grants to get at the root causes of poverty through community-based self-help organizations and projects.

One-fourth of the November collection for CHD is retained in the diocese for local grants. Write or call for an application: Dr. Barney Offerman, Director, CHD, Office of Justice and Peace, 1524 East Morehead Street, Charlotte, N.C. 28207, (704) 331-1736. Deadline for applications is Feb. 14.

the people are suffering and continue to suffer, especially in Bethlehem.

"They lack everything," he told Vatican Radio.

At the same time, "we always hope, because for us hope is the last thing that will die," he said. "We are working precisely to have peace within us, and are certain that one day the peace in our souls will bring about peace (overall)."

In his Christmas message, Lebanon's Maronite patriarch, Cardinal Nasrallah P. Sfeir, said, "Christ appealed for love and peace."

But in Lebanon today, he said, "there are a corrupted administration, concealed bribery, notorious encroachments, squandering of public funds ... repression of liberties shown by curbing the media and stronger control over the political parties.

"How can peace reign?" he asked.

Lebanon has had almost two decades of internal strife that pitted Muslim, Christian, Druse and Palestinians against one another.

If people followed Jesus' teachings there would not be the injustices seen in Lebanese society, including oppression, poverty and differences between social classes, he said.

However, the cardinal wrote, "he cannot save us if we do not help him in that. Let us come close to his Gospel ... and implement it in our daily life."

On Christmas Day in the Japanese Embassy in Lima, Peru, Archbishop Juan Luis Cipriani Thorne of Ayacucho spent seven hours with more than 100 hostages on their eighth day of captivity in Lima. The archbishop heard confessions and celebrated Mass.

The embassy was invaded Dec. 17 by 20 members of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement during a reception hosted by the Japanese ambassador to Peru. Nearly 500 high-ranking ambassadors, businessmen, other guests and residents of the embassy were inside when the terrorists took over.

Archbishop Cipriani accompanied Kenji Hirata, 34, a first secretary at the embassy, out of the residence on Christmas, and returned Dec. 28 with negotiators who secured the release of another 20 hostages.

In his annual Christmas message, Hong Kong Cardinal John Baptist Wu Cheng-chung urged Catholics to strengthen their faith and their commitment to putting it into practice as they prepare for China to resume control over the territory in July.

To face this "new future," he urged Hong Kong Catholics to integrate their political and spiritual lives during the final Christmas before the territory is handed over.

The cardinal said they must face the future with a hope grounded in a renewed faith, universal love and solidarity with the poor.

St. Lawrence Youth Present Live Nativity

By PAUL FREDETTE
Correspondent

ASHEVILLE — The live enactment of the Nativity by the high school youth of St. Lawrence Basilica was not as much a display as it was an invitation. "A Visit to the House of the King" was presented on Dec. 15, and again on Dec. 17.

A crowd of 150 people gathered along both sides of Haywood Street in front of the Basilica to see a simple tableau of shepherds watching their flocks. With few words and spare gestures, Kate Glass, the Greek chorus style narrator, moved the onlookers from the grounds in front of the rectory toward the entrance of the Basilica itself. At the front steps the shepherds encountered the magi coming from the east. There both groups listened as an angel appeared announcing the birth of the Savior. The great doors of the Basilica's main entrance were then opened by the littlest angels with halos of tinsel all askew, revealing the figures of Joseph and Mary cradling the Christ child in the straw-strewn vestibule.

Onlookers were given a moment to savor the scene, then invited to follow behind the teen-age biblical cast who processed down the main aisle to the chapel of adoration where the Blessed Sacrament is venerated daily. There the magi placed their gifts upon the altar and the entire group knelt in silent prayer before adjourning to the Lauretine Crypt below the Basilica for music and refreshments.

Matthew Rowland, a cast member making his second appearance as the Announcing Angel, said the whole experience helped him to pray more than he normally does. He termed the event "good for his soul," and added that spirits were high among the teens who put in long hours in order to make this a special Christmas present to the parish from the youth group.

Parishioner Elizabeth Gorton, director of the performance, was pleased it had been "a prayerful experience not only for the youth but for everyone involved." Helen Gordon, moderator of the Youth Group, said she appreciated the unique aspect of this enactment in contrast to the traditional Nativity scene, as "affording the opportunity to be aware of Christ's presence to us sacramentally." She also indicated that response to the presentation had been so positive that next year the group will attempt to get Haywood Street closed to do more dramatic staging and to better accommodate the larger crowds.

Scenes from the Live Nativity at St. Lawrence Basilica included the wise men's visit (above) and Joseph with Mary, holding the newborn Christ child (below).

Elizabeth Seton

Mother Seton, a widow and convert to Catholicism, is a keystone of the U.S. Catholic Church. She was born in New York in 1774. Following her husband's death, she opened a school for girls in Baltimore. In 1809 she founded a religious community of women dedicated to education and care of the sick. Mother Seton also wrote hymns and spiritual discourses. She was the first native-born North American to be canonized. Her feast is Jan. 4.

Prisoners' Children Touched By Parish Angels

Parishes participate in Angel Tree Project to bring holiday cheer to children who are often the forgotten victims of crime.

By KIM CAMPLISSON

SAN DIEGO (CNS) — Christmas was a little bit brighter for more than 11,000 children of prison inmates in the San Diego area, thanks to Project Angel Tree, an outreach of Prison Fellowship, a nationwide network of prison fellowship programs.

The Angel Tree project provides Christmas presents to children on behalf of their incarcerated parent. Approximately 200 San Diego churches participated in the program in 1996, four of them Catholic parishes.

"The children know they are loved and not forgotten," said Victor Lopez, San Diego area director of Prison Fellowship. "Love flows back to the incarcerated parent — a love that can start a chain of events leading to a deeper rehabilitation."

Carol and Edna Thiel have coordinated the Angel Tree project for Corpus Christi parish in Bonita, Calif., for three years. "There is no better way to share the joy of the birth of the Child Jesus," said Edna. The Thiels see Project Angel Tree as a natural offspring of their parish's social justice committee, which they head.

"Our mission and goals come straight from the Gospel," said Edna. "Jesus said he came to reach out; to free people from bondage. With Angel Tree, we reach out to those who have nothing."

Prison chaplains contact inmates to see if they would like to have presents delivered to their children. Prison Fellowship forwards this information to parish coordinators, who then contact the caregivers for information about the gifts the children would like. Each child receives two gifts: one item of clothing and one fun gift.

"We call the caregivers, usually the moms, to find out what is suitable," said Carol. Once that information is gathered, the coordinator hangs the gift request, on a paper cut in the shape of an angel, on a parish Christmas tree. Parishioners choose an angel, and purchase and wrap the gift. Corpus Christi parishioners provided 150 gifts for 75 children this Christmas.

Colette Penders, who has organized Project Angel Tree at Most Precious Blood parish in Chula Vista for four years, said it is never a problem getting parishioners to provide gifts. The parish made Christmas brighter for 50 children this year.

"The parish is eager to help. I ran out of angels by the 9 a.m. Mass," she said. "People from the later Masses were asking where the angels were. They looked forward to participating."

At St. Thomas More Parish in Carlsbad, Project Angel Tree is truly a family affair. Last year Tom and Patt Goeltz coordinated the program; this year their daughter, Kathy, is taking the lead. Tom says the parish has had a good response from volunteers who are needed to contact caregivers, to keep track of gifts requested and purchased, and to deliver presents.

Recalling a gift he delivered last year, he says "One of the greatest feelings in the world is hearing little tykes (aged 4 and 5) yelling 'Thanks for bringing the gifts!'"

The Immaculata parish also participated in Project Angel Tree for the fourth year. Barbara Kearns, director of catechetical ministry, said children are often the forgotten victims of crime.

"The children don't need to be punished," she says. "They deserve a little bit of Christmas. They need to know they're cared for and loved."

Diocesan Jubilee

eral priests he knew during his youth: the expansion of the Church in the United States.

Today, the number of registered parishioners in the diocese exceeds 104,000. Also, Bishop Curlin points out that figure could more than double when considering the unregistered population of Catholics in the area.

The very site of the Jubilee Mass is a testimonial to the growth of Catholicism in western Carolina: St. Matthew Church is home to one of the largest parishes in the state. Though established just 10 years ago, it counts 2,440 families as registered parishioners, with between 15 and 20 more families joining each month.

Bishop Begley noted that with the evangelical spirit of expansion comes great responsibility — the need to ensure the preservation of the Church's mission not only through priests and other religious, but through all the faithful.

Indeed, Bishop Begley has encountered many examples of what he calls "God's grace at work." For instance, he recalled the kindness of Bishop William Joseph Hafey, who in 1926 invited high-school graduate Michael Begley to prepare for the priesthood for the Raleigh Diocese.

"How wonderful it is to enjoy what has happened," Bishop Begley said with a smile.

Bishop Curlin agreed, adding that the Jubilee's two-fold purpose is a special one.

"We look forward to celebrating the anniversary as a diocese and family under the guidance and zealous care of Bishop Begley," he said. "He established a very pastoral foundation to continue the work of the Church in western North Carolina. He is the focus of our celebration, because he is the spiritual father of the Diocese of Charlotte."

A celebration specifically for Bishop Begley's jubilee with priests, religious and clergy will be celebrated privately on Jan. 13 at St. Patrick Cathedral.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Greeted Pilgrims In Cold On Feast Of The Holy Family

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (CNS) — Pope John Paul II tried to warm up shivering pilgrims at his country villa with a few jests about a European cold wave.

Wrapped in a red cape against a Siberian wind, the pontiff watched Dec. 29 as hundreds of visitors twirled their scarves and mittens, cheering him in a courtyard in Castel Gandolfo outside Rome.

After giving a brief talk and a blessing, the pope took off his white skull cap as a gust of wind threatened to blow it into the Alban Hills nearby.

"Today you can hear the wind better than you can hear the pope," he remarked.

"I wish you the courage to face this cold and get warm," he added. The cold snap, which left more than 20 dead in Europe, brought below-freezing temperatures to most of Italy.

The pope, speaking on the feast of the Holy Family, underlined the importance of marriage as an "alliance between a man and a woman that brings with it mutual fidelity."

He prayed for peace and harmony in all families, especially those with problems. The pope plans to preside over an international meeting of families in Brazil next Oct. 4-5.

The pope also noted that this year marked the 400th anniversary of the establishment of the papal villa at Castel Gandolfo, a hill town that was once the summer retreat of Roman emperors. The first residence there was obtained by the Vatican in 1596, when a local land-owning family could not honor a debt to the church. Popes began summering there in the early 1600s.

Pope John Paul expressed his appreciation for the warmth and hospitality shown him by the town of about 8,000 residents.

Guest Commentary

Landmark Cases Need Reason And Rhetoric

As two assisted suicide cases wind their way to the Supreme Court, life and death hangs in the balance. These cases, while in need of strong doses of constitutional law, are also crying out for an eloquent Supreme Court justice with the moral compass to reason and write a definitive statement defending the most obvious of all rights — the right to life.

Both cases before the court are about state laws — one from New York and the other from Washington — which were struck down by appellate courts for two different reasons. The justices have received many legal briefs promoting physician-assisted suicide and opposing it. That two states have passed such laws should encourage those who stand for the sanctity of life. Their arguments are logical. Yet, it is an astounding development that the 2nd and 9th appeals courts, ruling on two separate cases for two different reasons, were able to strike down state laws prohibiting assisted suicide.

We live in an age where "rights" are easily manufactured, and physician-assisted suicide advocates have been successful — both in the court of appeals and in the court of public opinion — in claiming a right to die. These cases are now in the hands of the same court that invented a right to abortion. There is no certainty that the forces of life will win.

In fact, there is a symmetrical logic that those who have no respect for life at its beginning will have no respect for life at its ending. However, overwhelming logic and tradition is on the side of protecting life. While the Supreme Court justices will wade through the legal briefs, in the final analysis this case likely will not be resolved so much on legal reasoning but on the individual moral compass of the justices. While we believe that members of the Supreme Court are learned men and women, what we need is one with the rhetoric as well as the legal reasoning to defend life at its later stages. Pope John Paul II has spoken articulately and persuasively about the "Gospel of Life" and the culture of death. Nowhere is the conflict between these two ideas more clearly evident than in the cases that the Supreme Court will begin to hear on Jan. 8.

Further, to decide in favor of assisted suicide will create a tangled web of ramifications that is nearly mind-boggling. Will doctors suspend their Hippocratic oath? Will insurance carriers be arbiters of death? Will there be any legal safeguards for vulnerable persons — because of sickness or age — from duress or undue influence to accept assisted suicide? These issues cannot be answered by the Supreme Court, but approval of assisted suicide will forever change the relationship between doctors and patients, insurers and the insured, members of families and others.

These Supreme Court cases also illustrate one more point. We are the first Christians in 1,700 years to live in a post-Christian era. Since the Roman emperor Constantine, the major influence in law and society was Christian ethics. Now the moral compass has been reduced and we are scrambling to come up with reasons for what was never challenged before. We are also looking for someone with the wisdom and rhetorical ability to proclaim words that both enlighten and inspire like those that spoke of the self-evident truth that all people have a right to life. Pray to God that the majority of the Supreme Court will be ready to live up to the finest tradition of the highest court in our land.

Epiphany: The Journey Of Faith

The journey of faith is part of our human condition. The Magi's search for the new King illustrates this truth: The appearance of the star of Bethlehem is a sign that from the very beginning Jesus was intended to be the "way, the truth and the life" for everyone.

Blaise Pascal, the French scientist and philosopher, once said, "In the soul of every person there is a God-shaped vacuum." And each of us, no matter what our circumstances, eventually comes to terms with this aching void by traveling this inevitable road.

In my 26 years of priesthood, I have never met a person who was not in some way seeking to find their spiritual bearings, some kind of inner compass, by which to navigate life's uncertainties and risks. Always there is the longing to live one's life with purpose and conviction. For many, it is simply seeking something missing, something more. For others, it is expressed in their search for the answer to the ultimate question, "What is life's purpose?" These are yearnings and questions that can only be answered by faith.

It is often a lonely journey, one that no one else may be willing to take with you. Some people just don't understand. But it still hurts.

Like all travel, this journey can be expensive. In addition to the cost of the trip itself, the Magi gave gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh. No one forced them to give, of course. But they were so overwhelmed in the presence of the Child that they responded in worship. And genuine worship almost always triggers generosity.

When you are serious about your journey of Faith, you find yourself giving away time and energy and even money which you might otherwise have spent for yourself. And that's just the beginning of it. For when you answer the call of Christ, you follow the One who said, "The Son of Man came not to be served but to serve." (Matthew 20:28)

Recognizing that the journey of faith may be lonely and costly, it is also, happily, an enlightened one. You and I have the help of a guide book. The Magi were directed by the star, but the Christian disciple is directed by something far more explicit — the Word of God.

The Magi were motivated by their personal enthusiasm, but the Christian disciple is motivated by something far more reliable — the love of Jesus Christ.

The Magi were strengthened by their own energy, but the Christian disciple is given the inexhaustible power of the Holy Spirit.

"I am," Jesus said, "the Resurrection and the Life. Those who believe in Me, even though they die, will live." (John 11:25)

Thus the journey to Bethlehem leads beyond Bethlehem. It leads to Heaven. The star of the Magi will eventually come to rest over the New Jerusalem, and its light will illuminate the journey which we make by Faith. It will surely take us Home.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Response To Members Of A Sect

Q. My question is how to deal with a very active local religious sect whose members visit homes trying to push their religious views.

Because I've chosen not to slam my door, to take their literature and talk with them, I get routine visits that are becoming endless.

I believe turning them away angrily is not what Jesus would want. But their doctrine and practices are un-Christian.

They will never engage in a dialogue that requires them to defend their beliefs. It's just a one-sided "argument." Even the Bible they use is strange, and they refuse to take or examine Catholic literature.

Maybe I need some basic training. Do you have any suggestions?

A. Just two. Before anything else, however, it is your home. You obviously have no obligation whatsoever to let anyone in the house or even answer the door if you'd rather not. That avenue could solve all of your problems at once.

First, a common mistake of people like yourself, who want to be kind and open to discussion with these visiting sects and cults, is the assumption that words mean the same to them as they do to you.

Even those who pursue this way of proselytizing and call themselves Christians of some sort are operating on an entirely different track of religious identity and understanding from that of Catholics or most other Christians for that matter.

Holding a discussion that involves terms like salvation, sacraments, conversion, biblical truth, church, holiness, sin, even the word "God," will prove frustrating if we presume some common awareness of what those realities mean.

Making the encounter yet more frustrating and futile is the fact that most such groups do not share the traditional Christian belief in the holy Trinity.

Jehovah's Witnesses, for example, reject the teaching of three persons in one God as a pagan superstition. This immediately rules out any agreement, or even meaningful conversation, on the divinity of Christ, honor of Mary as the mother of God, the real presence of our Lord in the Eucharist, the church as a community of believers with Christ as its head and countless other beliefs which flow directly or indirectly from the central Christian dogma.

Attempting a serious religious discussion under these circumstances is hopeless, something like arguing with one who is using a different dictionary or defining words in ways you never heard before.

Second, there is nothing un-Christianlike about telling people who want to force you into a religious confrontation, very plainly and firmly, that you already have a faith that you sincerely hold and you have no desire or intention to discuss your faith under these circumstances.

Say it again, if necessary. Don't get drawn into anything more. Those with a minimum of respect for other people's feelings and conscience will accept what you say graciously.

When that approach does not work, which as you have learned often happens, it is not at all wrong to calmly and peacefully end the visit in whatever way is necessary.

Baptized Catholics Feeling Distant From God

Did you know that there are well over 100 million unchurched people in America, and most of them are baptized Christians? Some have lost their way, others never had any faith in the first place.

All of them, however, are looking for the key to happiness, asking the same basic questions: Who am I? What is my origin and destiny? Why am I here? What am I supposed to do to fulfill my purpose?

Only divine revelation holds the key to these mysteries.

I use the word "key" deliberately because the Book of Isaiah speaks about Jesus in these words: "I will place the key of the House of David on His shoulder." It adds: "When He opens, no one shall shut, when He shuts no one shall open.... On Him shall hang all the glory of His family."

The key of the House of David is the symbol of authority given to Jesus, who points us in the direction of the kingdom. He gives us clarity about the meaning and destiny of human existence. He feeds our hunger with His infinite love and mercy.

There are many baptized Christians who feel distant from God, but these feelings are not facts.

I remember back in 1954 when I was on guard duty at Fort Sam Houston. It was at the end of the Korean War, and I was a draftee serving out my time in San Antonio, Texas.

That cold night I heard the sounds of celebration as service men and woman ushered in the new year. I was on duty, alone and feeling sorry for myself. I prayed that night, but I felt a million miles away from God.

What I still needed to learn was this: Intimacy with God does not depend on my feelings at any given moment, but rather on the Lord's constant desire to be intimate with me. The same is true for you.

If you are feeling lonely or distant from God, don't be discouraged. Feelings are not facts in these matters.

The sacrament of baptism has introduced you to the inner life of the Trinity, a supernatural life of silence and happiness. At your baptism, God took you to his heart. From that moment on your union with God has depended more on his love for you than on your love for Him.

So even if you drop the ball spiritually, He clutches you to His breast out of love.

Accept your distant feelings just as they are. Laugh at them, knowing that the Lord is with you always, especially in times of loneliness and pain.

Don't let anything undermine your confidence in the truth that God is unchanging love. Cling to Him in faith without regard to the feelings of the moment, and be at peace. One day you will be with God in paradise, and you will rejoice forever, experiencing the warm embrace of His love in a new way, beyond your wildest dreams.

Diocese Urges Skepticism Over Marian Image

RAINBOW LIKENESS — People peer out at a rainbow-like image on the glass windows of a building in Clearwater, Fla., Dec. 18. The image is being described as a likeness of the Virgin Mary by many of the hundreds of people who have gone to see the strange pattern. Some were calling it miraculous, others said it was a play of light and reflection from water left by a nearby sprinkling system.

CLEARWATER, Fla. (CNS) — The Diocese of St. Petersburg is advising Catholics to maintain skepticism about what many people believe is an apparition of Mary in the glass panels of a finance company office building in Clearwater.

So many people have flocked to the Seminole Finance building off U.S. Highway 19 since a customer noticed the unusual discoloration of the windows Dec. 17, that the city formed a Miracle Management Task Force to help maintain order around the building. Police set up a lockbox to hold contributions people have left, which totaled more than $14,000 just 10 days after the crowds began arriving.

By Dec. 29, more than a quarter million people had gone to see the image on the gray mirrored glass panels that cover the two-story building. It looks like the outline of the image of Our Lady of Guadalupe, without facial or other details. It is about 20 feet tall and includes shades of blue, red, green and orange.

"There is no reason to believe that this appearance of an image has occurred outside the natural order," said Joseph Mannion, communications director for the St. Petersburg Diocese. "Because of that, our advice to people is to approach it with a sense of skepticism."

"On the other hand, it's given a greater awareness of God's presence and of our connection to each other in this season of hope," Mannion told the Florida Catholic, the St. Petersburg diocesan newspaper.

Glass experts who inspected it said the discoloration is probably caused by water from lawn sprinklers that seeped between the glass panes and their plastic film tint coating. Similar patches of discoloration appear around the building, but they are blotchy and don't have the distinctive shape of the "Marian image." Employees of the building say it has been visible for at least two years.

Father Robert Gibbons, chancellor of the diocese, said that while the image arouses curiosity, it should not distract Catholics from "the essentials" of faith.

"We always have to keep in mind that the essentials of our faith are the word of God, the sacraments and charity toward one another," Father Gibbons said.

Ronald Novotny, director of the Cenacle of Our Lady of Divine Providence School of Spirituality in Clearwater, said he has visited the site and plans to return. Novotny holds doctorates in psychology and Mariology, the study of Mary.

"Whether it's natural or supernatural, God can use anything to draw people to Himself," he said. "Especially an image of His mother, because just as she brought Him into the world, she brings so many people back to Him."

Novotny finds it interesting that the image is in panes of glass.

"Some of the saints said they wanted to be as panes of glass, so God could shine through them," he explained. "On this window God's light can shine through her as one without blemish."

At times, the crowds have grown so large that up to 25 Clearwater police officers were on the site to help keep traffic flowing. The city also set up portable toilets and a police mobile command center on the parking lot.

Candles, prayer requests, photos, flowers and other items have been left at the makeshift shrine that runs the length of a 50-foot wall, and as wide as 9 feet deep in places. Contributions have been divided among St. Petersburg's All Children's Hospital, Metropolitan Ministries of Florida and the Hospice of the Florida Suncoast.

Mike Krizmanich, president of Seminole Finance, said he has signed a letter of intent to sell the building, but has no plans to alter or remove the image.

A member of St. Mary Parish in Tampa, Krizmanich said whether the image is a real apparition or not, he feels inspired and lucky "to be the host for guests of the Blessed Mother."

Local newspaper reports said Clearwater City Manager Betty Deptula, a former nun, had contacted Krizmanich about possibly removing the panels to a more accessible location.

In the meantime, the Miracle Management Task Force maintains order around the site and has a telephone number with traffic and parking information — (813) 562-4400.

Elmo Spends Pre-Holidays At St. Patrick Cathedral

CHARLOTTE — He's red as a beet, his eyes bug out and he giggles incessantly when you press his belly. He's Elmo, the lovable little creation from Sesame Street, and this little muppet caused quite a stir this holiday season. It's safe to say he was the hottest item not found in toy stores coast to coast.

Just when there didn't seem to be a single Elmo on the planet, one little muppet made his way into the safe confines of the rectory of St. Patrick Cathedral through the generosity of an anonymous donor. And Elmo was up for grabs, sort of.

Once donated to the Cathedral, Father Paul Gary, rector of the Cathedral, turned the red-furry muppet into greenbacks. Elmo, the grail of Christmas, became Elmo, the best raffle item ever. During weekend Masses just days before Christmas, Father Gary placed the muppet on the auction block.

For two fast and furious days, ticket sales flourished. And on Dec. 23, while Santa loaded his sleigh, the winning ticket was pulled. Elmo found a new home, and Catholic Social Services charities, raffle recipient, took home over $700 for charitable ventures.

Michael

Meandering Road Movie Ends Up Going Nowhere

NEW YORK (CNS) — John Travolta portrays a smoking, drinking, skirt-chasing angel in the charmless fantasy, "Michael" (New Line).

Director Nora Ephron's fuzzy tale is ill-conceived from the start as a trio of tabloid reporters is sent out by their blustery boss (Bob Hoskins) to fetch and return an alleged angel named Michael (Travolta) from the wilds of Iowa to the paper's Chicago headquarters, where they can milk the story for all it's worth.

Hitting the road to round up Michael are Huey (Robert Pastorelli), his pooch Sparky, ex-boozer Frank (William Hurt) and a newly hired, supposed angel expert, Dorothy (Andie MacDowell).

A dotty old lady (Jean Stapleton) has been harboring Michael for months at her Milk Bottle Motel, but conveniently heads heavenward herself just after introducing the threesome to, as she claims, Michael the Archangel, who is seen in boxer shorts and stubble, swilling beer and scratching himself. Covering his back almost down to his ankles are grayish feathered wings.

For no known reason, the jaded journalists accept his angelic identity as legitimate, and Michael immediately agrees to go to Chicago with them if they keep his celestial status a secret until then. A long raincoat covers his wings and now they are a quartet in the car.

Everywhere Michael is a magnet to the ladies (except Dorothy, on whom he has put a "block") and since this is his last mission on Earth he apparently takes full advantage of his sex appeal with a willing waitress.

Romance must be in the air because Dorothy and Frank also find themselves in each other's arms, but miscommunication parts them just before they arrive in Chicago and Michael departs — literally, as in DOA, which is a good description for this fantasy misfire.

Nothing makes much sense in this meandering road movie which ends up going nowhere. Michael's slovenly ways are apparently meant to be a comically whimsical twist on the usual image of angels, but Travolta just makes him vague and smug, a boring combination.

Sparky the dog predictably steals the show from his bland owner Huey, and Frank and Dorothy are an unremarkable romantic couple.

She is the more interesting; a thrice married, would-be country singer who swears off men after being burned far too often but whom you know will be saying "I do" once feckless Frank is frank with her.

Clearly falling into the fantasy genre, "Michael" is hardly worth getting upset over because of its goofy depiction of an angel who seems more like a bloated truck driver just happy to belt one back with the boys. But it is precisely the blank nature of this angel that makes the movie a shapeless muddle that doesn't work as fantasy — or comedy, for that matter.

For example, Michael is hung up on visiting such oddities along the way as the world's largest ball of twine and the world's largest frying pan; why, we don't know — or care.

And viewers will wonder if Michael isn't more like a fallen angel when the waitress in question leaves his motel room early one morning humming a happy tune.

Even the angel's miracle — reviving Sparky, who has been hit by a truck — falls flat, as the deceased Sparky doesn't even look like he's been hit by a marble.

With its one-dimensional characters and lackluster situations, "Michael" is more likely to bedevil than bemuse audiences.

Because of implied sex, comically intended violence and a mild profanity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"8 1/2" (1963)

With both career and marriage in chaos, an Italian movie director (Marcello Mastroianni) protects his overgrown ego by retreating into surreal memories of the past and wild fantasies about the present. Director Federico Fellini has some self-indulgent fun with his profession, semibiographical events from his youth and themes from his movies while taking viewers on a journey through the rich, at times bizarre, imagination of an artist whose attempts to cope with the demands of the real world are resolved in a final flood of optimism. Subtitles. Ambiguous treatment of mature themes. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Everybody's Fine" (1991)

Poignant family drama follows an elderly Sicilian patriarch (Marcello Mastroianni) as he travels across Italy to visit his five grown children on a journey that proves full of bittersweet surprises and revelations. Director Giuseppe Tornatore blends Mastroianni's superlative performance into a wryly observed depiction of modern Italian life and personal predicaments. Subtitles. References to premarital pregnancy, promiscuity, suicide and a flash of nudity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"A Fine Romance" (1992)

Middle-aged engineer (Marcello Mastroianni) and a doctor's wife (Julie Andrews) meet in Paris to discuss the fact that their mates are having an affair and end up becoming romantically involved with each other. Director Gene Saks' slight comedy depends upon a frail sense of humor about marital infidelity and human weakness. Uncritical attitude toward extramarital affairs. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Ginger & Fred" (1986)

Ginger (Giulietta Masina) and Fred (Marcello Mastroianni), a former vaudeville team who imitated Hollywood's Rogers and Astaire, are invited to perform in a Christmas television special. In this Italian production about the disappointments of old age and the commercialization of contemporary life, director Federico Fellini pays homage to performers important in his career, while at the same time indulging his penchant for visual cascades of quirky images. Some earthy proverbs about sex and several ambiguous references to religion. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"La Dolce Vita" (1960)

Lengthy episodic Italian drama about a troubled journalist (Marcello Mastroianni) who mingles in the circles of Rome's high society (including Anita Ekberg, Anouk Aimee and Alain Cuny), alternately fascinated, bemused and repelled by what he observes. Director Federico Fellini's crowded picture of the moral ills as well as the human foibles and positive values of various segments of Italian society mixes realism with satire and a tragic sense of wasted lives. Subtitles. Critical treatment of immoral situations. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations.

"Marriage Italian Style" (1965)

Dark comedy about an amoral man (Marcello Mastroianni) tricked into marrying the woman (Sophia Loren) with whom he has lived for 20 years. Directed by Vittorio de Sica, the movie sparkles with biting satire and sophisticated humor. Subtitles. Centers on sexual innuendo. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations.

Why do we still take Jesus seriously?

FAITH alive!

All contents copyright ©1996 by CNS

By Father Richard Rice, SJ
Catholic News Service

"Why do you think the people followed Jesus?"

A friend of mine posed this question to her first-grade students at the end of a four-week unit on Jesus.

For most of the children it had been their first walk through the Gospels, a trip that stretched from the Annunciation to the Ascension.

"Because everybody got well."

"Because he was so wise."

"Because everybody had enough to eat."

Finally, one little girl could not stand it any longer. She stood in the back of the classroom. "They hung around Jesus because they knew, if they hung around him, they'd be good to people like he was good to people."

Then the hands that were still raised dropped because everyone knew she had said it all.

We are who we hang around with, as that youngster said so well. And we continue to hang around Jesus nearly 2,000 years after he walked among us because in a world hell-bent on creating "disconnections," his spirit continues to offer connection to God, to each other, to ourselves and to the earth.

As we approach the year 2000 and experience the disconnectedness witnessed in divorce, abortion, child abuse, violence, war, greed, starvation, pollution and euthanasia, we at the same time experience the connectedness of Jesus, praying for us always and empowering us to be one, as the Father is in Jesus and Jesus is in the Father.

At the time my friend told me of her class, I was struggling with a group of seminarians attempting to understand why people persevere in their faith, why people continue to follow Jesus. The reasons we came up with were similar to those of the perceptive first-graders, though perhaps a bit more sophisticated in language.

We thought that the first reason people still take Jesus seriously is that he continues to answer overcome the obstacles we create.

The second reason people follow Jesus, the seminarians' group concluded, is that he genuinely wants to alleviate the wounds of suffering people.

Suddenly, with the end of the Cold War, bitter ethnic rivalries are heating up from Bosnia to Rwanda, from Mexico to Vietnam.

nurse the person through the night until we have to continue our journey the next day.

Third, people follow Jesus because he genuinely offers peace. His peace, in contrast to the world's peace, is not the absence of war but a positive, active harmony, a desire that the other be all that she or he can be and the willingness to be an instrument of that peace.

From the traditional Franciscan prayer, "Lord, make me an instrument of your peace," to the Serenity Prayer's "Lord, grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, the courage to change the things I can and the wisdom to know the difference," peace is one of the deepest desires of the human psyche.

In fact, the Serenity Prayer, as Reinhold Niebuhr composed it in its entirety, is probably the most significant prayer of the 20th century. Certainly, people recovering from addictions would say so.

Finally, people continue to respond to Jesus because he asks so the most searching questions and face the most telling problems of our world.

Our basic human question is always the same: Why do we exist? Then we ask, What prevents us from existing in fuller accord with our reason for existing, and how do we overcome the obstacles?

Why do we exist?

Jesus always reminds us that we are alive to "love the Lord our God with all our heart, with all our soul, with all our mind, and with all our strength and to love our neighbor as ourself" (Mark 12:30,31).

What stands in our way? Jesus also reminds us that it is our lack of awareness of God's presence and activity, our failure to see others as our sisters or brothers and our abuse of ourselves that prevent us from being the loving creatures that God intends.

But he stretches out his arms to

Some of these hatreds were held in check by the grappling and groping of the old Soviet Union and the United States. Now, it seems, those hatreds are unleashed. And everywhere Jesus is moved to compassion at the sight of people bleeding in the ditches of life.

For me the church is most the church of Jesus when we, like him, get off our horses and attend to the suffering of others — when we lift the wounded onto our horse, when we much of his disciples. We are a community called to more prayer, more justice, more fasting, more tithing, more chastity.

Jesus still is saying, "Take up your cross daily and follow me." This may be the area in which the gap seems greatest between Jesus and his people as we approach the start of a new millennium. Do we ask enough of ourselves or each other?

Yet it is fascinating to notice that people want to respond to Jesus' request for their total commitment. For in asking this, Jesus also gives us himself.

(Father Rice is a retreat leader and spiritual director in St. Paul, Minn.)

THIS EDITION IN A NUTSHELL

*The Gospel writers connected Jesus Christ and his teachings with their people's real-life situations. And today Jesus continues to connect with people's most searching questions and their world's most urgent problems. Pope John Paul II asked people of the church everywhere to make reflection on Jesus Christ a theme in 1997 — part of preparations for the Jubilee of the Year 2000. Was Jesus into good health?

By Brother Cyprian L. Rowe, FMS
Catholic News Service

"The Beatitudes express the ultimate blessings of health in body, mind and spirit."

Jesus gives us the keys to ultimate health. That's good news because, based on my practice as a psychotherapist, people are definitely searching for good health. The problem is that they don't always know what good health is or how to move toward it.

People get confused when they try to look upon their life in terms of divided parts — body, mind and spirit — and to give good care to only one part. I have little doubt that Jesus would encourage them to honor the whole of themselves: body, mind and spirit.

Neglect of the spirit within us can drag us down physically, leading us into a sense of exhaustion or even depression, and neglect of the body's health can be involved in feelings of spiritual fatigue and malaise.

I do not define my patients by a mental illness they may have. That is not their humanity. I deal with them by trying to help them develop and coordinate all the parts of their humanity. That's what health is about.

St. Bernadette lying on a bed of pain was in better health, I believe, than the person who has a beautiful body but is broken inside.

Jesus addresses that interior brokenness too. It is an important message for our times because it allows us to see that Jesus has a lot to say about what makes a fuller life on this earth possible. Many would say that faith has an impact on us as psycho-emotional and physical persons.

One of the first statements we hear Jesus make in Scripture is, "Did you not know that I must be about my Father's business?" This response to his parents' inquiry about why he stayed in the temple after they had left is the cardinal rule of all health: that the command of the Lord is paramount.

We need to clarify our priorities, to realize that the quest of health and happiness won't go far in an imaginary universe that locks God out.

Locking God out is a way of violating God's creation of us as whole persons — people whose full development isn't meant to come from a perfect body only, a perfect job or a perfect house.

Jesus continues to address care for health when he is accosted by Satan in the desert. Rolling out Scripture as a plan of life, he tells the Tempter that:

—We cannot live by bread alone.
—We need not be fearful, for the Lord will give angels to watch over us.

—God alone is worthy of all homage and adoration.

Again, we see the importance of priorities — knowing what matters and refusing to "worship" possessions or oneself. And if we're not fearful, we're situations varied widely, and if the writers were going to make the Gospel message meaningful for each one, they had to take different approaches, with different emphases.

Mark wrote to correct a view among his people. Actually, these people reveled in being "Easter people," but they were cool to any mention of suffering or of the cross.

But suffering was going to enter their lives whether they wanted it or not. They risked becoming disillusioned and discouraged when that happened.

Mark didn't deny that, by baptism, the people were one with the risen Christ. But Mark insisted that they would get to resurrection the same way Christ did: through suffering.

No wonder Mark emphasizes Jesus' vulnerability and how he was misunderstood, even by his family, and rejected. Mark's depiction of the disciples, too, is unflattering. They are obstinate, self-seeking, stonily resistant to the message of the cross. Of course, this portrait is intended to be a mirror-image of those in the community who resented any mention of the cross.

Mark wrote in a way that would connect with the situation of his readers and make Christ realistically meaningful for them.

Matthew wrote for staunchly Jewish Christians who had been uprooted from Jerusalem when the city fell to the Romans. These Jewish Christians were frantic. Their homeland had been made inhospitable. James, their leader, had been martyred.

The people fled north to Antioch in Syria and sought refuge in Christian communities there. But they were shocked to find gentiles in those communities. How could Jewish Christians and gentile Christians possibly live together?!

Matthew faced the delicate pastoral task of persuading the Jewish Christians that gentiles were there because God had called them. This Matthew did in a variety of ways, and it gave his Gospel a distinctive flavor, an atmosphere of tension.

Luke wrote for a thoroughly gentile church (or churches). This Gospel draws Jesus into focus as a healing, convivial Savior who reached out to embrace, forgive and enjoy table fellowship with foreigners, sinners or women. Since many of the people Luke wrote for were well-to-do, he stressed the need for compassionate generosity to the poor.

All three evangelists obviously wanted to connect with their people.

able to hope. Do you doubt that hope fosters health?

Jesus' agenda does not stop there. The Beatitudes express the ultimate blessings of health in body, mind and spirit. The Beatitudes call us to a sense of the here and the hereafter.

To hunger and thirst for righteousness, act mercifully, live as peacemakers, be clean of heart or poor in spirit: Who would think of these as steps toward full health? Yet, aren't they just that?

If you wish, call them principles for spiritual health that play a strong role in binding us together into one integrated "whole" of body, mind and spirit. Anything else is wrapped in sickness like the sickness that had Nero fiddling giddily while Rome burned.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

What great concern of yours would you like Jesus to address?

The other day a friend told me that things hadn't gone well in a conversation with one of his teen-agers earlier that day, and he was feeling very bad — wishing he had handled the situation differently.

Can you identify with his feelings? Most of us not only wish we could consistently make things work out better, but suffer when it doesn't happen.

In this context, there is a helpful phrase in Pope John Paul II's 1994 letter calling the church to begin preparing for the year 2000. He wrote, "Jesus Christ is the new beginning of everything."

I think the pope had a profound theological aim in saying that. But I have no qualms in applying his phrase to the situation of my friend, who felt at a loss over an exchange with a child. What my friend wished for was the chance to restart the conversation — to make a new beginning.

A new beginning of some kind always is needed everywhere, whether the topic is life at home or among the nations. And the possibility of a new beginning always restores our hope.

Which is a way Jesus addresses our real-life situations: He gives hope back to us.

Religious Of Christian Education Sisters Bid St. Genevieve-Of-The-Pines Farewell

Father C. Morris Boyd celebrated a final liturgy at St. Genevieve-of-the-Pines with the four remaining Religious of Christian Education Sisters the day before they left.

By PAUL FREDETTE
Correspondent

ASHEVILLE — Madonna Hall at St. Genevieve-of-the-Pines is all but empty now. The three remaining Religious of Christian Education Sisters boarded the 8:30 a.m. shuttle to the airport on Dec. 18, closing doors that had first opened 89 years ago. Sisters Patricia Dolan, Yvonne Hache, and Kathleen Winters were accompanied to their new senior residence in Milton, Mass., by their provincial, Sister Martha Brigham, and Nancy Sams, an LPN who has attended to the nursing care of the sisters for the past 13 years.

Two days prior to their departure, another distinguished member of this senior group, Sister Ethel Lunsford, a native of North Carolina, left Madonna Hall to take up residence with relatives in the Asheville area. She will be the only Religious of Christian Education Sister remaining in the state. Sister Martha was pleased that such an arrangement was workable in view of Sister Ethel's deep affection for her home state.

One might say that Sister Yvonne Hache, a native of Waltham, Mass., is going home too, but that's not how she feels. "I'm really going to miss this place. I chose to come back, to be in the mountains, close to all the students I've taught," she says. Although those students are now adults, and many have grown children of their own, she still recognizes many of them. She enjoys seeing the results of efforts she began here almost 50 years ago.

Sister (then "Mother") Yvonne came to St. Genevieve-of-the-Pines in 1947. For seven years she taught kindergarten and then the boys at Gibbons Hall for 10 years before leaving in 1964 for St. Jean d'Arc Academy in Massachusetts. Given her choice as a senior sister, she decided to return in 1986, in order to "do some tutoring, take up ceramics, and help around." Last year Sister Yvonne celebrated her 60th anniversary as a Religious of Christian Education.

It's been 63 years since Sister Kathleen Winters left Galway, Ireland, but her brogue is as fresh as the gleam in her eyes. Sister Kathleen came to St. Genevieve-of-the-Pines in 1933. After doing some college work at their secretarial school, she enrolled at the University of North Carolina.

"I was the first nun to graduate from Chapel Hill," she says with little attempt to conceal her pride. "In those days we were still in full habit," she adds merrily, "and they didn't know what I was. Some of them ran after me with cameras." Sister Kathleen taught at St. Genevieve's for 18 years, then at Asheville Catholic High for 12 years, finally at St. Eugene Catholic School for nine years before "retiring of my own free choice" to Madonna Hall.

The fidelity of the students over the years is one of the most precious memories Sister Kathleen has of her years at St. Genevieve. "I had a very satisfying and fruitful life here and I don't regret a minute of it," she says. Emotionally, she recalls the recent dinner invitation of a former student. She arrived to find the entire high school Class of 1964 reassembled to express their appreciation. She describes how "they were all there from Kentucky, Tennessee, South Carolina and West Virginia, recounting all these wonderful things I had done. Eventually I had to ask if they were sure they were talking about the right person."

Asked what they hoped the legacy of the Religious of Christian Education would be in the Asheville region, the sisters agreed it was their unequivocal respect for the religious convictions of everyone they taught. "We did not proselytize, nor interfere with the religious beliefs of those who were not Catholic, but we always evangelized," said Sister Yvonne. The sisters believe that, in turn, the parents of their students respected them enormously for this.

"Asheville was our first foundation in the American province," says Sister Martha Brigham, for six years the superior of the Asheville community, now serving as provincial in Arlington, Mass. "We'll always have memories of our life and our ministry here. The people of western North Carolina have been wonderful to minister to."

Asked to offer a last word to the Catholic community in which they labored for nearly a century, Sister Kathleen expressed this hope: "Remember that Catholic education is a gift — everyone involved in it in any way is a tremendous help to the Church."

Guatemala Celebrates Historic Treaty Ending 36-Year Civil War

GUATEMALA CITY (CNS) — One of Latin America's longest-running wars officially ended Dec. 29 with the signing of a historic treaty by the Guatemalan government and leaders of a Marxist rebellion.

President Alvaro Arzu and the leaders of the four main factions of the rebels' Guatemalan National Revolutionary Unit signed the agreement in a glittering ceremony in the courtyard of the National Palace. The treaty marks the end of a 36-year conflict in which 140,000 people died.

Many Guatemalans doubt the treaty will quickly transform the impoverished country, but a crowd of 35,000 people crowded the plaza outside the palace to hear Arzu declare "the war is over."

Standing shoulder to shoulder with rebel commander Ricardo Ramirez de Leon, Arzu admonished the exuberant crowd to be silent for a moment to honor the dead. The audience erupted in applause when Arzu and Ramirez lit an eternal flame, aided by a girl in a wheelchair whose entire family was killed in the war.

"This day of justifiable and genuine national celebration is the most transcendent and significant in the history of our country in the last 50 years," said Ramirez in a speech during the signing ceremony.

Since peace negotiations first began to look like they might succeed after Arzu took office last January, the Catholic Church in Guatemala has been working to ease the transition to peacetime. It has developed projects ranging from redevelopment of battered communities to reconciliation training.

Under the terms of the treaty, the 43,000-member army will be cut by a third. The military ruled the country for 30 years until 1986 and was responsible for atrocities including the massacre of entire villages of indigenous Mayan people and the disappearance of thousands of people believed to support the rebellion.

The treaty also requires the rebel fighters to give up their arms.

While the military is blamed for the worst of the war's human rights abuses, the rebels' hands were not exactly clean. Among damages attributed to the revolutionaries were the blowing up of oil lines and other disruptions to commercial ventures.

Many of the revolutionary leaders have said they intend to form a political party.

And for the first time, the treaty strengthens the rights of the country's majority population of Mayans. The Mayans have centuries-old roots in the country, but have historically held almost no power. The Indians constitute about 60 percent of the country's population and were the target of racist campaigns of murder, torture and disappearances during the 36-year war.

But many in the enthusiastic crowd at the plaza that included students, unionists, Mayan peasants and urban squatters were skeptical about the chances of the treaty's success.

"Let's see if they comply with what they sign, if peace is more than just a piece of paper," said Ermelinda Ramos. "I doubt it."

for their children — accustomed to being part of a well-established majority — and saw the same needs reflected in the youth at St. Barnabas.

"They tell me they don't always know how to defend their faith," explained Stout. "The kids are amazed that peers from evangelical backgrounds ask them whether they even believe in Jesus."

"Exploring Other Faith Traditions," a program Stout has offered for senior high youth, is one way she has tried to help young people better understand their faith and be comfortable with it in a variety of social and religious settings. She sees her ministry as a calling "to work with young people on their spiritual journey. This involves helping them identify their gifts and talents so that they can find their place in the world and establish a relationship with Jesus that will be a source of strength in times of trouble."

In the years that she has worked to develop a program encompassing total youth ministry for middle school through senior high, Stout believes she herself has grown and developed a more mature faith. "When I first started I wanted to be at every event and do everything perfectly," she said. "I have learned over the years that if I want to survive I have to pick and choose certain events and get qualified volunteers to attend others." She has also learned the importance "of letting the Spirit do some of the work too, and of not letting your sense of humor run out." Stout finds it easy to work at St. Barnabas because she receives such great support from the pastor, Father John Schneider, as well as the staff and church community. For his part, Father Schneider admires Stout's "amazing knack for getting people involved."

Today, more than 80 adult volunteers are involved on a regular basis in ministry to the youth of St. Barnabas. They include catechists, youth advisors, members of the Confirmation Preparation Team, drivers and moderators. The volunteers do scores of jobs that have no official designation.

It is deeply satisfying to Stout to realize that the program does not revolve around her alone, or any single individual, but around the conviction that we are all called to serve.

Sisters Of Mercy Announce First Foundation Grants

CHARLOTTE — The Sisters Of Mercy of North Carolina Foundation has announced grant awards totaling nearly $221,000 to four Mecklenburg and Gaston County organizations. The monies will assist in an expansion of the Charlotte Emergency Shelter for Women and Children, support efforts by A Child's Place to ensure education for children of homeless families, provide health screening in low income communities and assist needy families in Gaston County.

The Sisters of Mercy Foundation was established in 1995 and now operates from a mission to support non-profit healthcare, educational and social service organizations in the Charlotte metropolitan area and in North and South Carolina.

"There is a great deal of excitement among our Sisters," said Mercy Sister May Jerome Spradley, president of the Foundation. "The grants are a way for us to fulfill our mission."

While the Foundation's first grant application cycle is underway with grant decisions expected in February, a representative group of organizations in the Charlotte metropolitan region which serve the Foundation's targeted populations, were invited to submit early applications.

Of this group, the following four have been notified they will receive grant awards.

- A Child's Place, in Charlotte, which receives $117,949 over three years. A Child's Place works with Charlotte-Mecklenburg Schools to provide education for children who are homeless or at risk of being homeless;

- Community Health Services, in Charlotte, receives $18,000. Community Health Services promotes wellness by providing health screenings and health education to individuals and families in low income communities;

- The Salvation Army, in Charlotte, receives $75,000. This specific grant will be used for the addition of 56 beds to the Emergency Shelter for Women and Children.

- Belmont Community Organization, in Belmont, receives $10,000. The Belmont Community Organization provides emergency aid for needy families and individuals in the greater Belmont and New Hope areas.

Nearly 30 organizations from throughout the region have responded to the Foundation's first call for grant applications, which had a deadline of Dec. 2. The Foundation's second grant application deadline in April 1, 1997.

For information concerning the Foundation, call (704) 366-0087.

Vatican Condemns Desecration Of Jewish Tombs At Roman Cemetery

By CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican condemned the desecration of Jewish tombs at a Rome cemetery as "an offense against history."

"One cannot but condemn the profanation of the Jewish tombs in the Roman cemetery at Prima Porta," on the northern edge of the city, said Joaquin Navarro-Valls, the Vatican spokesman.

"This offense against the memory of the dead is also an offense against history," he said in a Dec. 30 statement.

Roman civic leaders and members of Rome's Jewish community, who met at the cemetery Dec. 29 to assess the damage and pray for their dead, believe the vandalism was carried out by a group of neo-Nazis.

Sometime during the night of Dec. 28 or early on Dec. 29, 14 tombstones marked with the Star of David were torn from graves, broken apart and thrown in a trash container. Nazi swastikas mounted on long sticks were planted into the ground among the desecrated graves.

A nearby family tomb was surrounded with barbed wire and the vandals erected a wooden plaque with German words painted in gold saying, "Work shall set you free," the same slogan hung by the Nazis over the entrance to the Auschwitz death camp.

East Timorese Bishop Apologizes For Death Of Soldier In Dili

DILI, East Timor (CNS) — Bishop Carlos Filipe Ximenes Belo of Dili apologized for the murder of a soldier that occurred as crowds welcomed him home from his trip to Europe to receive the 1996 Nobel Peace Prize.

Cpl. Alfredo Siga was beaten to death by youths outside the Dili cathedral Dec. 24 as tens of thousands of people cheered the arrival of Bishop Belo.

Bishop Belo apologized for the soldier's death at a public function Dec. 27 held to honor civil servants and military in Dili. He called for the people of troubled East Timor to continue working for peace.

East Timorese police said seven people had been arrested in connection with the soldier's murder.

Residents said Siga was found carrying a pistol and was dressed in civilian clothes. He was targeted, they said, because of rumors that an attempt would be made on the bishop's life. The soldier was among nine soldiers and police attacked that day.

Bishop Belo has been apostolic administrator of Dili since 1983 and has been an outspoken champion of human rights for the East Timorese. Indonesia annexed East Timor, a former Portuguese colony, as the country's 27th province in 1976.

urban renewal projects for the Eternal City. The plan was hailed as a breakthrough by experts in Rome and at the Vatican, who are expecting up to 45 million pilgrims in the jubilee year. But it took the Italian Parliament another eight months to pass a special law confirming the allocations. The vote in late December means the actual money will become available in early 1997. "We're three years away from the opening of the Holy Door, and the state has yet to make a single lira available," complained Rome Mayor Francesco Rutelli.

Netanyahu Says He Will Meet Pope In Late January

ROME (CNS) — Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said he will hold his first meeting with Pope John Paul II at the end of January. In an interview with the Italian Catholic television station Telepace, Netanyahu said, "I will be in Rome at the end of January and on that occasion, naturally, I will meet the pope and visit the Vatican."

Cardinal Asks Detroit News To Negotiate With Striking Unions

DETROIT (CNS) — Cardinal Adam J. Maida of Detroit has called upon management of the Detroit News to be more conciliatory to striking unions and resolve the "polarizing situation" of a lengthy strike. "I feel very strongly that management should take some initiatives and settle this thing, and I think that the unions have to come to the bargaining table, too," Cardinal Maida said in a December interview with the Detroit Sunday Journal, an alternative newspaper published by the striking workers. "After 17 months, you have to look at the reality of what's happened. People have lost their jobs, families have been destroyed, careers are on the line. It's very serious when people are put in that position," he said. "And to keep rigid in your position, I think that's wrong."

Archbishop Urges Men Over 50 To Take Prostate Tests

ST. FRANCIS, Wis. (CNS) — Although planned treatment for prostate cancer may reduce his activities, Archbishop Rembert G. Weakland of Milwaukee said he would maintain contact with Catholics in the archdiocese through radio broadcast of his Sunday Mass and his biweekly column in the local Catholic newspaper. At a pre-Christmas press conference in St. Francis, the 69-year-old archbishop urged all men over 50 to get tested for prostate cancer so that the disease can be detected and treated early. Optimistic for a full recovery, he said he expected to begin seven five-day weeks of radiation treatment early in January.

Refugee Flow From Tanzania Lighter Than From Zaire

KIGALI, Rwanda (CNS) — The flow of Rwandan refugees out of Tanzania is more gradual than the mass influx of refugees from eastern Zaire in November, said Tom Garofalo, spokesman for Catholic Relief Services. Garofalo, who visited Kigali, Rwanda, in mid-December, said the effect is the same, however: the road from the Kibungo, Rwanda, transit camp is jammed with people slowly walking farther north into Rwanda, carrying their sparse belongings on their heads or in their arms. The refugees fled Rwanda in 1994 following the slaughter of 800,000 Rwandan Tutsis and moderate Hutus by Hutu militiamen and troops.

EDEN — The little church dedicated in 1939 to St. Joseph of the Hills has seen its surroundings transform over the years. In a town established as Leaksville, renamed Spray and finally adopting the name Eden, the Catholic Church's roots began to grow in the late 1910s.

The Mansfield family, originally from Illinois, relocated to Leaksville in 1917 when Joe Mansfield's textile mill company expanded to the western North Carolina Piedmont. The Mansfields were devout Catholics who for nearly 20 years traveled to Greensboro or Danville, Va., to attend Mass. But beginning in the fall of 1935, priests from Greensboro and Burlington began celebrating Mass in Leaksville area homes.

In 1938, Father William Kuder, pastor of St. Benedict Church in Greensboro, directed the building of a church in Leaksville, first by gaining assistance from parishes in the North and later by supervising the construction.

St. Joseph of the Hills Church was dedicated on New Year's Day, 1939. The church's stained-glass windows were donated by several American cardinals, archbishops and bishops. The congregation illustrated the true universal spirit of the Catholic Church, in that many Catholic families there represented a variety in ethnic and geographical backgrounds.

A rectory was built in 1940, and in June of that year, St. Joseph of the Hills was designated a parish, with Father James Noonan becoming the first resident Catholic pastor in Rockingham County.

The textile mill industry brought out-of-state Catholics to the area over the years, although church membership — numbering 51 in 1943 — grew slowly. Catholics from nearby Reidsville, as well as several converts, boosted the growth of the faith in the area as well.

By the end of the 1950s, parish growth had resulted in an expansion: A parish hall was built in honor of former pastor Msgr. Arthur Freeman. Also, in 1962, the Catholic population in Reidsville had grown to such a number that a church being built there was warranted.

Industrial expansion during the 1960s, '70s and '80s continued to bring Catholics from elsewhere into the region. Over time, the St. Joseph congregation developed a number of parish programs to assist in pastoral and administrative functioning.

In 1985, a larger parish hall was built to provide an assembly area and classrooms.

In addition to the parish pastoral council, finance council, faith formation program, family life commission, Knights of Columbus, Ladies Guild and Altar Society, parishioners also devote time to community projects as well. The Cancer Society, Hospice, The Council on Aging, The Salvation Army, Migrant Ministry, and Cooperative Christian Ministries all receive assistance from parishioners of St. Joseph of the Hills.

While the Reidsville church, Holy Infant, was built in 1962 to serve the influx of Rockingham County Catholics, St. Joseph of the Hills continues to reach out to the faithful in Eden, Madison and Mayodan, as well as those in Stokesdale in Guilford County and all of Stokes County. Catholics in Henry County, Virginia, worship in Eden, too.

Mercy Sister Bernadette McNamara has served the parish as pastoral administrator since July 1996, while Father Joseph Valentine, pastoral administrator of Holy Infant Church in Reidsville, serves as sacramental minister for the St. Joseph congregation.

Diocese Plans March For Life Participation, Statewide Activities

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — For the 24th consecutive year, tens of thousands of Americans are expected to gather in the nation's capital to prayerfully make a stand in the annual March for Life. Of those making the pilgrimage, several hundred will be from the Diocese of Charlotte.

The March for Life is one of the largest pro-life events scheduled for January, the month in which a key abortion-related Supreme Court decision — Roe vs. Wade — was handed down in 1973. And with 1996 headlines often shouting about physician-assisted suicide and the veto of the partial-birth abortion ban, pro-life leaders say that now is more important a time than ever to realize and respect the sacredness of human life.

The Respect Life office of the Diocese of Charlotte is sponsoring a Jan. 21-22 bus trip to Washington, D.C., giving western North Carolinians an opportunity, at the plea of Pope John Paul II, to preach and to celebrate the Gospel of life.

Maggi Nadol, Respect Life coordinator for the diocese, says that while the cause of the march is most unfortunate — some 35 million legal abortions have been performed since 1973 — there is still a necessity for people to make their voices heard.

"It is imperative that legislators see a visible presence of people willing to stand for those who cannot speak for themselves," she says.

The bus is scheduled to leave the Catholic Center in Charlotte at 7 a.m. on Jan. 21. From there, the pilgrims will stop in Statesville and Winston-Salem to pick up additional passengers.

After checking into their hotel, participants will depart for the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, one of the largest religious buildings in the world and site of the National Prayer Vigil for Life. That evening Cardinal Bernard Law, archbishop of Boston and chairman of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops Committee for Pro-Life Activities, will preside at a Mass at which all clergy in attendance are invited to participate.

The evening will also include a concert of sacred music, rosary, Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament, and holy hours through the night.

Bishop William G. Curlin plans to attend March for Life events in Washington, including concelebrating with Cardinal Law at the Jan. 21 Mass and offering a Mass for the North Carolina pilgrims as well.

Following the morning Eucharist celebration on Jan. 22, the Charlotte group will proceed to the Rally for Life at the Ellipse, a large park just south of the White House. The central activity of the event, the march, begins thereafter and will take pilgrims along Constitution Avenue to the Capitol and Supreme Court. The march will close with participants lobbying with their legislators in congressional offices. Members of the diocesan group are expected to return late Wednesday evening.

Elsewhere in the diocese, pro-life coordinators are also planning to participate in the March for Life. Among them will be parishioners from the Asheville area, where two busses will depart for Washington. The Knights of Columbus council of the Basilica of St. Lawrence is again sponsoring the trip, and organizers Jack and Helen Gordon expect 75 or more people to join them.

Carolínians in the Denver area are joining a group from Holy Spirit Church, and Jack Sweeney, parishioner and Respect Life team member at St. Vincent Church de Paul Church in Charlotte, says several dozen people have signed up for the parish-sponsored voyage to the capital as well.

Coordinators are making a special point of inviting teens — a population Sweeney says is most important to the pro-life movement's success. He called events such as the March for Life "a wonderful experience" for teen agers to realize their responsibility of promoting respect for life.

"This trip is not an excursion," he adds. "It's a spiritual retreat."

Coordinators like Sweeney are planning events with more of a local slant, too. In Raleigh, North Carolina Right to Life, Inc., will present a Rally for Life on Jan. 18 at 1 p.m. at the corner of Lane and Wilmington Streets. Brenda Pratt Shafer, R.N., and Senator Dan Page will be guest speakers, and Representative Connie Wilson will serve as master of ceremonies.

Locally, Bishop Curlin will celebrate two Masses for the unborn — one at Charlotte's St. Gabriel Church on Jan. 19, the other in Greensboro at St. Pius X Church on Jan. 29.

Throughout the diocese, the state and the nation, the January events will serve as powerful reminders of what Nellie Gray, president of the National March for Life, told a Charlotte audience in November 1996: "It's time where we recognize the principles according to the law of God ... and that our actions match those principles. We want to stop abortion. We are not here to reduce it. We are not here to regulate it. We are here

Peruvian Archbishop Key Figure During Hostage Crisis

Through several visits inside the embassy, the archbishop celebrated Mass, heard confessions, helped draft communiques and even bargained for the release of more hostages.

His work continued amid Vatican calls for a resolution to the crisis, which began when the embassy was taken over by more than 20 members of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement the night of Dec. 17 during a reception hosted by Japanese Ambassador Morihisha Aoki.

The rebels held up to 484 high-ranking businessmen, ambassadors and others as hostages. By Jan. 6 they had released about 430 of the original hostages.

In an interview with Catholic News Service, Ronald Bigler, spokesman for the International Committee of the Red Cross, highlighted the importance of Archbishop Cipriani's role during the crisis.

"The channel opened by Archbishop Cipriani is very important. ... He is Peruvian ... the solution needs to be found among Peruvians, not through foreigners who tell them what to do," Bigler said.

Rumors about the role of Archbishop Cipriani, a member of Opus Dei who is said to be a close friend of Peruvian President Alberto Fujimori, were sparked Dec. 25 when he unexpectedly entered the embassy to celebrate Christmas Mass.

The archbishop of Ayacucho, a city in which the Maoist guerrilla group Shining Path was born, entered the embassy again the morning of Dec. 26.

"The official mediator is (Minister of Education) Domingo Palermo Cabrejos and I have no intention to re-

Jubilee Celebration January 12

CHARLOTTE — A Silver Jubilee Celebration recognizing the Episcopal Ordination of Bishop Emeritus Michael J. Begley and the founding of the Diocese of Charlotte will be held Jan. 12 at 3 p.m. at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte.

Bishop William G. Curlin will be joined by Archbishop John F. Donoghue, archbishop of Atlanta and Charlotte's second bishop, Bishop F. Joseph Gossman of the Diocese of Raleigh, and other clergy to concelebrate the Jubilee Mass. The celebration will kickoff the 25th anniversary year of the Charlotte Diocese.

Since Bishop Begley's ordination as diocesan shepherd in 1972, the diocese has grown from 34,200 Catholics in the 46-county area to more than 104,000.

Archbishop Plays Important Role In Hostage Crisis, from page 1

place him," he told CNS late in the afternoon of Dec. 26.

On Dec. 28 Archbishop Cipriani was the only witness at the first face-to-face meeting between Tupac Amaru leader Nestor Cerpa Cartolini and the government's representative, Palermo, which ended with the reading of a new rebel statement and the release of 20 hostages.

According to government sources, Archbishop Cipriani played a key role in the Dec. 28 meeting. He helped to draft a less aggressive version of the rebels' communique and also helped raise the number of freed hostages to 20, up from the three originally proposed by Cerpa Cartolini.

Archbishop Cipriani entered the embassy several other times, often leaving with more freed hostages.

At the Vatican, in a message thought to be directed to the hostage-takers, Pope John Paul II urged those who have held captives during the holiday season to release them as "a gesture of humanity."

After his Angelus Jan. 6, Pope John Paul asked that in the spirit of Christian mercy, hostage-takers perform "a gesture of humanity: liberate these people," adding that this would above all give the captors peace.

Traditionally at the start of a new year the pope delivers a message concerning missing persons and captives, often referring to people who have disappeared in Italy.

But with international attention focused on the fate of diplomats and government officials still held hostage in Lima, the pope's appeal this year was taken by Italian newspapers to be meant for those captors in particular.

At a Sunday blessing Dec. 22, Pope John Paul II called the taking of hundreds of hostages by the rebels "cruel and immoral." He pleaded for the hostages' release so they could spend Christmas in freedom with their families.

On Dec. 19 the Vatican said it was not engaged in mediation but was "following with deep apprehension the development of the dramatic situation."

"The apostolic nuncio, Archbishop Fortunato Baldelli ... dean of the diplomatic corps, is in permanent contact with the other heads of missions and with the foreign minister," a Vatican statement said.

Spokesmen for the terrorists said the embassy was attacked to protest "the constant meddling of the Japanese government in Peru" and Tokyo's support of Fujimori's leadership.

The rebels demanded that 400 to 500 of their jailed comrades be freed from prison and that Fujimori, the son of Japanese immigrants, personally negotiate with them.

According to Peruvian authorities, 417 MRTA members are jailed in different state prisons.

Cardinal Augusto Vargas Alzamora of Lima rejected the rebels' actions, and called on Lima residents to attend an outdoor Mass Dec. 21 in Lima's central square in front of the cathedral.

Jesuit Father Juan Julio Witch of Pacific University and Father Luis Martinez, chaplain of the Catholic university, were among the hostages.

Father Martinez was among a group of hostages released Dec. 20.

Rebels offered to release Father Witch at least two times, but he remained to minister to the hostages, Father Martinez said.

While he did not want to discuss the political implications of the crisis, Father Martinez said that "the only thing to do is negotiate."

A senior Polish diplomat who was held hostage has thanked Catholics for their prayers in a letter to his bishop.

"I wish to give thanks with all my heart for your help and spiritual support in these dramatic days of my life," said Wojciech Tomaszewski, who was released Dec. 22, in a letter to Bishop Jozef Mirosław Zycinski of Tarnów.

"I was, thank God, released. But in spirit I am still with those who remain in captivity."

Paul the Hermit

Much that is known of this early hermit may be legend. The story describes a figure in the movement of religious hermits from the third and fourth centuries. Many took to heart Christ's directive to "leave everything and follow me." Paul was said to have been orphaned at 15. He was a devout Christian who fled persecution under Deius. He reportedly lived a solitary life until he died at age 112. His feast is Jan. 15.

Clinton Asks Churches For Help In Hiring, Reconciliation

By PATRICIA ZAPOR

WASHINGTON (CNS) — At an interfaith prayer breakfast on the feast of the Epiphany, President Clinton urged every church in the country to hire one family currently on welfare and to encourage church members who own businesses to do the same.

He also encouraged religious leaders to help the country find a common ground of mutual respect as a way of solving other problems.

"My objective here is, once and for all, to take the politics out of poverty and to treat all able-bodied people the same at the community level," Clinton said in remarks that touched briefly on welfare, immigration and the need for respect in the United States and in the world.

"If every church in America just hired one family, the welfare problem would go way down," Clinton said. "If every church in America challenged every member of that church who had 25 or more employees to hire another family, the problem would go away ... but we would always have a community-based commitment that crossed party lines and religious lines."

Among Catholics attending the Jan. 6 breakfast were Archbishop Theodore E. McCarrick of Newark, N.J., and Cardinal James A. Hickey of Washington.

Cardinal Hickey has been particularly critical of Clinton's support for legal abortion, taking him to task in strongly worded letters during last year's legislative battle over the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act, which the president vetoed. Cardinal Hickey, who was seated at President Clinton's table in the State Dining Room, left for a retreat in Florida immediately after the event and could not be reached for comment.

The prayer breakfasts have become almost an annual event for Clinton, who typically invites guests from a cross-section of American churches.

Clinton noted that some of the participants in the breakfast had criticized his support for last year's welfare bill. Many religious leaders, including several Catholic bishops, called the bill unfairly harsh on the poor and legal immigrants.

Clinton encouraged his breakfast guests to work on community-based support systems to take the place of welfare, like encouraging church members to hire former welfare recipients. And he said the "single most significant decision" facing the United States is how to "prove in America that we can all get along — without giving up our basic beliefs but in finding a ground of mutual respect."

Thirteen U.S. Bishops Could Retire For Age Reasons This Year

By JERRY FILTEAU

WASHINGTON (CNS) — As the new year began, there were 13 active U.S. bishops who could retire for reasons of age in 1997.

Seven — including two cardinals — have already turned 75, but as the new year opened Pope John Paul II had not yet accepted their resignations.

Six active U.S. bishops will turn 75 within the next 12 months.

The most prominent of the U.S. prelates who are already past their 75th birthday are Cardinals John J. O'Connor of New York and James A. Hickey of Washington. Both turned 75 in 1995, but the pope asked them to stay on past the usual retirement age.

Cardinal Hickey has been a priest since 1946, a bishop since 1967, archbishop of Washington since 1980 and a cardinal since 1988. He was born Oct. 11, 1920.

Cardinal O'Connor has been a priest since 1945, a bishop since 1979, archbishop of New York since 1984 and a cardinal since 1985. He was born Jan. 15, 1920.

Among others over 75 is the last remaining active bishop in the United States to have participated as a bishop in the biggest church event of the 20th century, the Second Vatican Council.

He is Cuban-born Maronite Archbishop Francis M. Zayek of the Diocese of St. Maron in Brooklyn. A priest since 1946, he was made a bishop in charge of Maronites in Brazil in 1962, the year Vatican II opened.

In 1966 he became the first exarch of U.S. Maronites. When the U.S. exarchate was made a diocese in 1971 he became its first bishop. In 1982 he was given the personal title of archbishop. He celebrated his 76th birthday Oct. 18.

Also 76 but still active at the start of the new year were:

• Bishop Edward T. Hughes, a priest since 1947, a bishop since 1976 and head of the Diocese of Metuchen, N.J., since 1986. He turned 75 Nov. 13, 1995.

• Bishop Michael F. McAuliffe, a priest since 1945 and bishop of Jefferson City, Mo., since 1969. He turned 75 Nov. 22, 1995.

Still-active bishops who are currently 75 are:

• Bishop Leroy T. Matthiesen, who turned 75 June 11. A priest since 1946, he has been bishop of Amarillo, Texas, since 1980.

• Bishop Thomas J. Welsh, who turned 75 Dec. 20. A priest since 1946, he has been a bishop since 1970 and bishop of Allentown, Pa., since 1983.

The six bishops who will turn 75 within the next 12 months are:

• Feb. 21: Bishop Norman F. McFarland of Orange, Calif., a priest since 1946, bishop since 1970 and head of the Orange Diocese since 1986.

• Also Feb. 21: Auxiliary Bishop Louis A. De Simone of Philadelphia, a priest since 1952 and bishop since 1981.

• March 10: Auxiliary Bishop Patrick J. Sheridan of New York, a priest since 1947 and bishop since 1990.

• May 13: Bishop John C. Reiss of Trenton, N.J., a priest since 1947, bishop since 1967 and head of the Trenton Diocese since 1980.

• July 18: Bishop Thomas J. Connolly of Baker, Ore., a priest since 1947 and bishop of Baker since 1971.

• Sept. 21: Bishop John R. Sheets, a priest of the Society of Jesus since 1953 and auxiliary bishop of Fort Wayne-South Bend, Ind., since 1991.

Church law calls for bishops to submit their resignations to the pope when they reach 75.

Pope Paul VI, who first established the retirement rules, generally accepted resignations promptly with the exception of important bishops in troubled areas, such as under communist rule in Eastern Europe.

Pope John Paul frequently delays retirement if the bishop has an important anniversary coming up soon, such as the 50th anniversary of his priesthood or the 25th or 30th since he became a bishop.

'No One Can Serve Two Masters' Theme Of '97 March For Life

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The annual March for Life will take as its theme "No One Can Serve Two Masters" when thousands of pro-lifers from across the United States stream into Washington Jan. 22, the 24th anniversary of the Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion virtually on demand.

"No one can serve two masters, not even a little bit," said Katherine McEntee, a member of the March for Life's board of directors, in a Jan. 3 telephone interview with Catholic News Service.

"When we start talking about exceptions, we're serving the world, or political correctness, or whatever the word of the day is," McEntee said. "The right to life is paramount. If it is, there can be no exceptions."

At the start of January, the only guest speaker who was confirmed for the pre-march rally was Rep. Christopher Smith, R-N.J., chairman of the House Pro-Life Caucus and an ardent supporter of life issues in Congress.

McEntee said it was not known whether Robert Dornan, the California Republican who has been a fixture at past rallies but was defeated in his House reelection bid in November, would attend.

While Dornan's appearance was in question, so too was just how many thousands would be in Washington for the march to Capitol Hill to lobby for pro-life issues.

McEntee declined to give an estimate. "It's always impossible to guess because there are so many variables," she said.

The fact that the National Park Service will no longer give crowd estimates did not seem to faze McEntee. "I don't think it ever bothered us. They had a job to do," she said of the Park Service. "There were people on the march who were somewhat disappointed because the estimates were somewhat low."

The Park Service regularly gave estimates in the five figures, while March for Life founder Nellie Gray just as regularly has given estimates in the six figures to the crowds at the rallies.

"This is just a peaceful and orderly rally and meeting to explain our firm conviction that the right to life is invested in every human being at conception," McEntee said, "and no one has the right to choose who will live and who will die."

Separate poster, essay and poetry contests for junior and senior high school students on the march theme continue to be a staple of March for Life activities, as does the annual Rose Dinner after the march, at which Smith will speak.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Closes 1996 With Prayer Service Of Thanksgiving

ROME (CNS) — Pope John Paul II rang out 1996 with a "Te Deum" of thanksgiving and an appeal to Catholics in Rome to make moral preparations for the year 2000.

"I truly hope for everyone's commitment in giving this city an image more in keeping with the values of faith, culture and civility that stem from its vocation and its ancient history, especially in view of the Great Jubilee of the Year 2000," he said Dec. 31 in the Rome church of St. Ignatius.

The pope launched what he called a "great urban mission" last spring in Rome, aimed at renewing Romans' ties with their faith and their local churches. He said it was one of the most important events of the year.

He recalled that for nearly 2,000 years Rome has had a special place at the center of the universal church. It's a situation that has produced countless fruits, he said.

Today, the church wants to remain at the service of the city, but at the same time remind it of its moral responsibilities, he said.

The pope also noted that he had visited 10 Rome parishes during 1996 — fewer than previous years because of health problems. He indicated he would keep up the Sunday tradition, saying that since his election in 1978 he had visited 251 of the parishes in the city and "there are 77 left."

Attending the annual service was Rome Mayor Francesco Rutelli, who presented the pope with a chalice as a sign of the city's appreciation.

Pope Prays That Forgiveness, Peace Fill Individuals' Hearts

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Another year closer to the end of the millennium, Pope John Paul II prayed that forgiveness and peace would fill the heart of every individual so that peace would reign in the world.

"We are here ... to implore the gift of peace for the nations of the whole world," the pope said during a Jan. 1 Mass in St. Peter's Basilica.

"Approaching the end of this century in which the world, and especially Europe, has experienced much war and suffering, how we wish that all people could cross the threshold of the year 2000 under the sign of peace," he said in his homily.

"We place our hope for this on Jesus, the name of salvation given to people of every language and race," the pope said at the morning Mass, marking the feast of Mary Mother of God and World Peace Day.

The pope's message for World Peace Day, published in mid-December and sent to heads of state around the globe, focused on the need for forgiveness in order to achieve peace.

"Forgiveness is necessary to make peace blossom in the heart of every believer and of every person of good will," Pope John Paul said. "Peace and pardon constitute an inseparable pair."

The pope said the Church prays and works for peace in every dimension — in individual consciences, within families, within nations and among nations — because only with peace can the human family develop to its full potential.

"I know well that it is difficult to forgive. Sometimes it even seems impossible, but it is the only way because every vendetta and every act of violence calls forth other vendettas and more violence," the pope said during his midday Angelus address.

A Serving of 1996 Leftovers

This year I've decided to forget the resolutions.

Instead, I took a look back over the old year and picked out a few items that I thought were worth looking at again.

Some made me shake my head in disbelief, some impressed me and some made me laugh.

At the top of the list of bizarre stories was the 6-year-old boy suspended from school because he kissed a 6-year-old girl on the cheek. Little Jonathan Prevette was suspended on the grounds of sexual harassment.

This story prompted reports that school districts nationwide are facing lawsuits claiming sexual harassment from peers. Granted, any sexual harassment from peers in school is ugly and must be stopped. But a 6-year-old? Sexual harassment? Seems like overreaction to me.

Then there was a New York Times editorial crediting government-financed contraceptive programs with reducing the number of out-of-wedlock births.

I'm sure that these programs do deserve much of the credit, but from what I've been hearing from teens, more and more are saying no to sex outside marriage, not only because they fear AIDS, but also because some are starting to consider the value of purity.

I simply wish the editorial had mentioned these reasons, too, and given some credit to the Church and school programs dedicated to teaching teens the importance of abstaining from sexual activity.

Items that impressed me also included a survey of 269 family physicians, which found that 99 percent of the respondents agreed that spiritual beliefs can be helpful in medical treatment.

"I've seen miracles after prayer," said one physician responding to the survey. "If nothing more, it eases the mindset of patients who know that prayer is a healing art."

This affirmation of the power of prayer should come as no surprise to Christians, who have always believed this.

Another impressive report told of a survey of more than 1,000 registered voters showing that Americans still value such traditional values as optimism, determination, resiliency, learning and self-reliance.

Survey respondents said people need to care for and help one another. That report warmed the heart.

As for smiles, I read a line by the late Erma Bombeck that any woman could enjoy. She wrote: "A true friend is one who tells you she saw your old boyfriend — and he's a priest!"

And then I had a funny personal experience as I was driving through the interior of the Catskill Mountains in New York. I had to stop for gas in a small town and noticed a tow truck with a sign, "Towing, 23 and 1/2 hours a day." Curious, I asked the driver, "Which half hour of the day is it that you don't tow?" Without missing a beat, he answered, "Whenever anybody calls and says they need to be towed right away, that's the half hour."

Best memory of the past year is the happiness I felt from the many letters I received from readers. Thank you, from my heart and a happy new year to all!

King And The 'Balm Of Gilead'

While watching a television interview recently, I saw the ever-eloquent Pulitzer Prize winning poet Maya Angelou struggle to describe the lasting significance of Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. She finally observed, "For me, my people, indeed all American people, he was the 'balm of Gilead.'"

Angelou's biblical comparison stayed with me. It comes from the book of Jeremiah: "The harvest is past, summer is ended, and we are not saved. For the hurt of my poor people I am hurt, I mourn....Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then has the health of my poor people not been restored?"

To the prophet's poignant question, "Is there no balm in Gilead?" — a region famous in ancient times for its healing ointments — came the answer that God's judgment was the beginning of a return to health.

Like a surgeon's knife, Martin Luther King's preaching and civil disobedience touched the deep wounds of racial hatred and discrimination, exposing the malignant cancer, a first and necessary step to restoring any hope for a deep, effective inward healing of this nation.

The social bond insured by the Constitution has been fractured even as it was being written and not enough white Americans showed an active concern for the injustices of racial discrimination. Dr. King realized that the problem lay within the human heart. Knowing that the heart can cover up and justify, he probed for the truth, an inner integrity based on a true relationship with God and neighbor.

He came to believe that a change of heart had to be accomplished through shock treatment: an experience that could pierce the national hardness of heart and bring people to their senses. Dr. King hoped that once aroused, the public would look beyond the injustice and hatred and division to see what America could become, if and when it came to terms with past and present evil and indifference.

Dr. King wanted everyone to see the world and hear the Christian message from the viewpoint of sons and daughters of former slaves who knew the indignities of bigotry and fear. A people striving to embody the charity taught by Christ while seeking the rights proclaimed by the founders of our nation.

Even all these years later, I can recall the visceral impact of those televised pictures of men, women and children being pummeled by fire hoses and ravaged by attack dogs as they claimed their civil rights. The contrast between brutality and nonviolence was stunning. I can think of no more vivid images of the power of meeting hatred with love, injury with forgiveness.

In time some learned a new sense of shame and of justice. And there were changes. Not enough, not yet. It's humbling to find that it is harder to change ingrained attitudes than it is to change unjust laws. Suspicions and stereotypes still plague people of every color and background. And freedom from these chains of intolerance does not come easily. They scar the soul of anyone who diminishes another.

"The balm of Gilead." We need that healing salve. But I believe we can offer it as well. I think that is what God has always intended — and Dr. King recognized. We ease our own pain only by healing another's.

After a Divorce

Q. Nearly two years ago, I fled from my home with our 1-year-old daughter. My husband and I were married six years ago, after dating three years. I knew he tended to be jealous, but thought he would change after we married since he was good in every other way.

Several months after our daughter was born he was laid off with hundreds of others. He took it as a personal insult. Eventually he got another job, but he resented the time I gave to our infant daughter.

He began beating me. Once he nearly broke my arm. My sister, and eventually my parents and his parents, told me to leave.

A counselor (he agreed to go twice) was sure he had a chemical imbalance, but he would have no therapy.

For our child's safety and my sanity I filed for a divorce, which was final last August.

I asked for help. One priest simply said to let him know if I wanted to seek an annulment. I was sick with guilt until my mother sent me your columns, with a detailed response about abuse. It comforted me very much but I have some questions.

An annulment means a marriage did not exist. Isn't that thoughtless toward our child?

I attend Mass regularly and receive Communion. Is that allowed?

Can I ever be remarried in the Catholic Church? If a new marriage were not recognized, would that mean no future children would be baptized and raised Catholic?

How can I become more comfortable talking to a priest about this?

A. I'm happy you were able to resolve this tragic dilemma with a good conscience. As I said more at length in the columns to which you refer, fidelity to one's marriage vows does not require tolerating serious emotional or physical abuse.

Victims are understandably the first and most immediate concern. But it also is not an expression of love to one's spouse to persevere in a situation that is destroying him and everyone else.

When one's spouse is brutally abusive, part of keeping the marriage

Kwanzaa's Lesson In Hospitality

The seventh annual Kwanzaa celebration at our parish was a lesson in hospitality. Over the past six programs we have striven to make it open to all parishioners. However, in spite of noble efforts of many who coordinated the program, it was perceived by most parishioners as a program for African Americans.

In recent years other parishes were invited to celebrate with us and the program had great success in numbers. We took great pride in hosting a Kwanzaa celebration that others found enriching. However, the very purpose we introduced Kwanzaa to our parish had not been realized.

The cultural diversity of our community invites our recognition of the various cultural components that comprise us. Our diversity as a parish makes us a microcosm of the American Church. We are presented with the same challenges, on a smaller scale, that the Catholic Church in America faces regarding cultural diversity. Our support and encouragement of such cultural celebration are our embracing diversity with love and acceptance.

Though the Seven Principles of Kwanzaa (The Nguzo Saba) were designed for African Americans in particular and are not religious by design, they have great universal appeal and are consistent with Christian ethics. These principles, if put in practice, will contribute to the spiritual sustenance and growth of our parish. Therefore, our Kwanzaa celebration is our gift, as African Americans, to our parish family.

From the beginning our strategy was to get the word out as much as possible. The parish bulletin, the local newspaper, the community access channel on cable TV, flyers, communiqués from the parish school to parents, and announcements from the pulpit garnered marginal success. Though the numbers measured success, visitors outnumbered parishioners consistently.

However, this year it was different. Parishioners showed up in droves. After six successive Kwanzaa celebrations, our gift to our parish has reached those for whom it had been originally intended. What made the difference was simple hospitality.

All the mass media announcements of previous years had not done what this year's strategy did so well. The coordinators of the Kwanzaa program used a personal touch. We personally invited our friends of the parish. We asked our children to do the same.

So many parishioners came to this year's celebration because they were personally invited. Their presence was based on relationships with those who asked them to come. The most effective technological tool we used was the telephone.

This was a lesson in how effective we are when we focus on relationships, the basis of community. The lesson for us is that though Kwanzaa is a wonderful gift from our African American culture, it is only the wrapping; the real gift is ourselves.

Oxford Study Shows Tomb Of Christ Layered Like An Onion

By DANA DREZEK

WEST HARTFORD, Conn. (CNS) — The tomb of Christ in Jerusalem is like an onion, with layer upon layer of construction surrounding the original rock-cut burial site, said British archeologist Martin Biddle.

Biddle, a senior research fellow in medieval archeology at Oxford University, discussed his recent studies of the tomb of Christ, housed in the Basilica of the Holy Sepulcher, in a December lecture at the University of Hartford.

He was part of a team of experts who used special cameras and computer imaging to develop three-dimensional isometric photos of the tomb in preparation for its long-awaited reconstruction.

The tomb is in desperate need of rebuilding, Biddle said, because the structure was damaged by an earthquake in the 1920s and is in danger of falling down.

One sign of hope for progress on rebuilding the tomb was the unveiling Jan. 2 of the restored dome of the basilica, directly over the tomb.

The restored dome features a clear center through which the sun streams. Exploding from it are 12 sunlit rays of gold for the 12 Apostles, each ray with three streams of light for the Trinity, against an off-white background studded with stars.

For decades the dome had been covered by scaffolding as representatives of the three churches with custody of the basilica — Roman Catholic, Greek Orthodox and Armenian Orthodox — could not agree on a common project or how to fund it.

The breakthrough came two years ago after an American Catholic couple, George and Marie Doty, gave the basilica custodians a $5 million gift to help with the restoration.

The Dotys have long been engaged in a wide range of Catholic charitable endeavors. Mr. Doty, a retired investment banker, is a former treasurer of FADICA, Foundations and Donors Interested in Catholic Activities.

The present basilica was completed in the middle of the 12th century, with the Holy Sepulcher as the focal point under the rotunda on its eastern end.

But the latest shrine of the tomb itself is an early 19th-century Turco-Baroque structure, Biddle said.

Within it, he said, is a complex system of earlier edicules, or small shrine buildings.

"It is like the skin of an onion, one within another," he said.

"When the reconstruction takes place, it seems quite clear that a wealth of evidence will emerge in the form of these earlier edicules," he said. "We may then be able to address the question, 'Of what evidence that we see here, can we say that this was the original tomb in which Christ was buried?'"

He said he and his colleagues believe they have discovered what the previous edicule, built in the 16th century, looked like. They think they can also say what earlier edicules, from the 11th century and the fourth century, looked like.

The key to reconstruction, he said, is getting the Christian communities responsible for the basilica to resolve differences over various design plans.

A Fresh Start For The New Year

By JIM KELLEY

A number of people review their comprehensive estate plan when a new year arrives. Family members and loved ones fill our hearts and thoughts, and you may be relieved to begin 1997 with a "clean slate."

As you reflect upon God's everlasting goodness and give thanks, you may also wish to consider a gift to Catholic causes, your parish, the Foundation or the Diocese of Charlotte.

Keep in mind that your will, revocable living trust, life insurance, retirement plans, and other planning tools may provide you with opportunities for meaningful gifts that offer you significant tax savings, both now and in the future.

Non-cash Gifts Bring Savings

A gift of certain assets, such as stocks, bonds, and mutual funds can yield additional tax savings if they've grown in value and been owned at least one year and a day ("long-term").

You may have considered selling the asset but hesitated because of the high capital gains tax that would otherwise be payable on the increase in value. Making this type of gift can provide an especially good solution if you currently receive a very small (2 percent, for example) dividend from the property.

Contact your investment advisor as early as possible. He or she can help assure that your transfer is completed in a timely manner.

Before making a gift of real estate and certain other types of personal property, however, it's best to check with us and your advisors for special rules that may apply.

The Choice Is Yours

Give

ing through effective, long-range planning vehicles can be convenient and economical. Discussing your charitable wishes and goals with professional advisors generally enables them to recommend and coordinate a gift that fits your needs.

Selecting the right amount of the right asset at the right time can play an important part in meeting your overall financial objectives.

Your gift allows Catholic causes, your parish, the Foundation or this diocese to continue Christ's vital work. Additional information about giving opportunities is available in confidence, without obligation or cost.

You may reach me at the Development Office, Diocese of Charlotte, 1524 East Morehead St., Charlotte, NC 28207, phone (704) 331-1709 or 377-6871.

Misión del Sagrado Corazón celebra la fiesta de Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe

Por Paul Fredette

BURNSVILLE – En el crepúsculo del 8 de diciembre, transeúntes fueron testigos del comienzo de la primera celebración pública en el condado de Yancey para honrar a Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe.

Según la temperatura bajaba y los vientos se hacían más fuertes, hombres, mujeres y niños no perdían tiempo y seguían en procesión, a lo largo de la Calle Main, un colorido estandarte de la Virgen de Guadalupe. La procesión caminó la media milla hasta la Misión del Sagrado Corazón donde el recién nombrado pastor, el padre jesuita Edward Ifkovits se unió al padre capuchino Alphonso Pagliara, de Hendersonville, para celebrar la liturgia en español con una asistencia de cerca de 100 hispanos.

El padre Ifkovits atribuye el éxito de la fiesta a los esfuerzos de un pequeño grupo de residentes dedicados, muy conscientes del crecimiento de la comunidad hispana en los condados de Yancey y Mitchell desde hace varios años. "Este ministerio existe debido al esfuerzo de 8 a 10 personas muy activas en las iglesias del Sagrado Corazón y San Andrés y la generosidad del Padre Alphonso", el Padre Ifkovits dijo específicamente del componente católico en un amplio esfuerzo ecuménico.

Participó en las festividades el Reverendo Robert Moore de la Iglesia Presbiteriana USA quien, con el Reverendo David Lee, pastor de la Iglesia Metodista Unida, estableció Nueva Esperanza, un ministerio ecuménico dirigido al crecimiento de la comunidad de trabajadores migratorios, la mayoría hispanos, que hablan muy poco o nada de inglés.

Según aumenta el número de trabajadores latinoamericanos que son empleados por los cosecheros y otros que se dedican a la construcción, trabajadores religiosos y sociales de la región han expresado una gran preocupación por la seguridad y el bienestar de estas personas. Ayudar a los trabajadores agrícolas a enfrentarse a una nueva cultura ha sido el foco de las actividades del Reverendo Moore por más de cuatro años. El señala la experiencia de aislamiento social que encuentra la población hispana. "Los hispanos aquí no tienen una comunidad real", él explica. "De una finca a otra ellos no se conocen siquiera".

Cuando la cosecha está en su punto máximo hay hasta 200 trabajadores agrícolas en el área, pero muchos en la comunidad anglo muy raramente los ven y mucho menos los conocen. Los trabajadores agrícolas son "trabajadores sin personalidad", dice el Reverendo Moore. "No podemos invitarlos a trabajar aquí sin también ayudarlos a viajar y mantener un standard de vida mínimo (vivienda con instalación sanitaria y plomería interior y electricidad)".

El Reverendo Moore enfatiza que Nueva Esperanza es un proyecto para proveer a la mayoría de los hispanos, según sea posible, con "un medio para formar comunidad uno con otro y con Cristo". Para todos los que están sirviendo a los hispanos el deseo de hacerlos sentirse bienvenidos y en su casa es evidente. "Pensar que todas estas personas están aquí por tanto tiempo sin acceso a los sacramentos, ¿como no vamos servirles?", dijo Elizabeth Turner.

Como otros que están convencidos de las necesidades de este ministerio, el Padre Ifkovits cree que el elemento esencial es la disponibilidad en la Diócesis de Charlotte de sacerdotes y otro personal para el ministerio que hablen español.

Multitud se reúne en Newton para honrar a la "Estrella de la Evangelización"

Por KATHY SCHMUGGE

NEWTON – La comunidad hispana de las faldas de las montañas de Carolina del Norte se reunió el 9 de diciembre para celebrar no solamente la fiesta de la Inmaculada Concepción sino también otro evento importantísimo que ocurrió en 1521: la aparición de Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe. Esta aparición resultó en la inmediata conversión de ocho millones de nativos.

Mas de 400 personas se congregaron en la iglesia de San José para esta Misa especial. Debido a que la iglesia sienta solamente a 250 personas, muchos hispanos estuvieron de pie en los pasillos y afuera del edificio para oír una palabra inspiradora en su lengua nativa. "Hemos tenido este servicio por varios años", dijo Francisco Brenes, coordinador de la comunidad hispana del área. "Cada año vemos mayor participación".

Eduardo Acosta, tesoro de la comunidad hispana del área, dio una breve historia de la aparición de la Virgen en español y en inglés. Explicó como la Santísima Virgen le dijo a Juan Diego, un campesino muy trabajador, que se construyera una iglesia en las afueras de la Ciudad de México. Ella podía haberse aparecido a miembros del clero español o a individuos de gran poder político, pero ella escogió en su lugar a un hombre simple, de gran fe y humildad, dijo Acosta.

Juan Diego convenció al obispo de la aparición de Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe, cuando en su tilma apareció su milagrosa imagen. "Ella ha sido pintada con pinceles que no son de este mundo", describió el Papa Pío XII en 1945.

Durante la Misa, celebrada por el Padre Richard Hokanson, párroco de la parroquia de San José, un grupo de jóvenes hispanos representó la aparición. Juan Diego y Nuestra Señora fueron representados por Luis Del Cid y María Gómez. Los padres levantaron a sus hijos sobre las cabezas de la multitud para que pudieran ver. La juventud observaba fascinada y atentamente como si fuera testigo de la aparición verdadera.

En su homilía el Rev. Sr. Edwin Rodríguez, diácono del Centro Católico de Charlotte, dijo que cada uno está llamado a construir una iglesia, igual que el humilde campesino, no de materiales físicos, sino del corazón y el espíritu. "La Iglesia debe tener vida – un lugar donde todos compartan – donde haya un gran amor y cada uno vea las necesidades de otros", él dijo. El Rev. Sr. Rodríguez dijo a los que extrañan sus tierras nativas y sus familias que encontraran consuelo en María, la Madre de Cristo – y también madre de todos.

Algunos ven a Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe como el puente entre Cristo y toda la humanidad. Su patronazgo ha sido extendido a través de los años por varios papas, empezando con México (1737); "Nueva España" (1754); Puerto Rico (1757); América Latina (1910); las Filipinas (1935); las Américas (1946) y por todos los que no han nacido.

El entusiasmo de esta tradición hispana que trajo a tantos a la iglesia da crédito a la "Estrella de la Evangelización", título que le dio el Papa Juan Pablo II a Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe.

El Padre Alphonso Pagliara, de Hendersonville, celebra la Misa durante la fiesta de la Virgen de Guadalupe.

Festejo de la Virgen de Guadalupe en Charlotte

CHARLOTTE — Con motivo de la fiesta de la Virgen de Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe, la comunidad hispana de Charlotte celebró la ocasión, el pasado domingo 15 de diciembre, con unas "mañanitas" al amanecer, una Misa y una "kermesse" que duró hasta las 5 de la tarde.

El Padre Vicente Finnerty, C.M. y el canciller de la Diócesis, el muy Reverendo Mauricio West oficiaron la Misa.

La Misa comenzó con un desfile de banderas de todas las naciones hispanoamericanas y terminó con música de mariachis.

La "kermesse" estuvo muy animada con música, comidas, juegos, y muchas otras actividades que para deleite de los asistentes.

El Señor José Luis Villa, ganador de la camioneta, cuando el padre Vicente Finnerty y el diácono Edwin Rodríguez lo felicitaban.

Mensaje del Padre

Rev. Vicente H. Finnerty, C.M.

Querido Dios Padre:

Nuevamente me acerco con la confianza de un hijo en su padre. Tú sabes que me es fácil hablarte. También sabes que cuando me acerco es porque hay un momento especial en mi vida y vibra en mi interior la necesidad de ti. Por eso, te busco, me acerco. ¿Cuál es el momento especial esta vez? Es el fin de año. Es cuando tu pueblo ordinariamente busca tu perdón y a la vez te agradece todo lo que ha recibido en este año que acaba.

Me parece a mí, Dios Padre, que no es sólo un momento de perdón y agradecimiento. Es también un momento para evaluar. Primero, evaluar tu actuación entre nosotros en los grandes acontecimientos de este año que termina. Segundo, evaluar nuestra respuesta, la de cada miembro de tu pueblo, para ver la generosidad o la mezquindad de esa respuesta. El fin de año es también para recordar lo que es la vocación. Es una época, sobre todo, para mirar hacia adelante. Es una época de ilusiones y sueños.

Dios Padre, sé que tú has estado cercano a lo largo de este año que termina. Nos has acompañado en todos los momentos grandes de la Comunidad. Has estado presente en el joven de 16 años que vive en la calle, que no tiene dónde vivir ni donde trabajar. Has estado en todos los hombres que han venido a este país buscando luchar por algo mejor para sus familias. Has estado en el padre de familia que perdió a su hijo de 19 años en un accidente de tránsito. Has estado en los jóvenes que quieren saber más de ti. Has estado en el alcohólico que dijo "ya basta".

Dios Padre, ¿qué significan, qué inspiran estos acontecimientos para ti? ¿Qué quieres de nosotros en este año que comienza?

Al preguntarte, qué significan estos acontecimientos para ti, me acuerdo de la inspiración fundamental de tu corazón. Tanto amaste al mundo que nos diste a tu propio Hijo. Y Él se encarnó para manifestarnos el gran amor, la ternura, la compasión y la misericordia de tu corazón. Ese amor, ese anhelo de un mundo de fraternidad, de paz, de justicia y de solidaridad fue tu inspiración.

Nos enseñaste que tu Hijo, Jesús es el más pequeño de nuestros hermanos y que tiene necesidad de ser alimentado, vestido, cuidado, visitado. Nos invitas en este año que comienza a que imitemos el ejemplo de Cristo, de vivir una forma de vida que nos permita llegar al pobre para prestarle un servicio.

Dios Padre, al examinarnos en este fin de año, nos encontramos viviendo mucha tibieza, nos encontramos con la tentación de establecernos en la mediocridad. Ayúdanos en este año a ir madurando la humildad y confianza en ti para que pueda nacer en nosotros un corazón más generoso, un corazón más como el tuyo.

Cubanos sufren economía pobre en Navidad y esperan visita papal

LA HABANA, Cuba (CNS) — La Navidad de este año en Cuba fue un acontecimiento miserable por las normas estadounidenses.

Al mirar a través de las ventanas de las casas, los visitantes veían de costumbre árboles de Navidad pequeños, de sólo dos o tres pies de alto, o plantas de cactus derrengadas por las guirnaldas de metal blanco y ornamentos pequeños.

Pero nadie tuvo el día libre. Y la mayoría de las familias tenían poco dinero para regalos, ya que la mayor parte del mismo se gastó en la cena del día festivo.

Los cubanos comen tradicionalmente lechón asado, arroz con frijoles y ensalada mixta para la cena de Navidad, y el reunir dinero suficiente para esa cena era difícil en este año. Debido al racionamiento impuesto por el gobierno, se garantiza oficialmente a los cubanos una cantidad suficiente de alimentos, pero las tiendas miserables y oscuras que venden los alimentos racionados quedan vacías a menudo.

Esta Navidad en Cuba fue distinta que la última de varios modos importantes. Primero, las relaciones que se entibian lentamente entre el presidente Fidel Castro y la Iglesia dieron un gran paso adelante en noviembre, cuando el Papa Juan Pablo II, después de una reunión con Castro en el Vaticano, dijo que él visitaría a Cuba. Ambas partes hablaron de una visita en 1997, pero ahora las fuentes del Vaticano están diciendo que es posible que la visita no ocurra sino a principios de 1998.

Segundo, la economía de Cuba — aunque exprimida por un embargo estadounidense apretado — se recupera lentamente del derrumbe de la Unión Soviética.

"Las cosas están mejorando. Este año es mejor que el anterior y espero que el próximo sea aún mejor", dijo Marco, conductor de taxi de 32 años de edad, que espera tener suficientes dólares para comprar pequeños regalos a sus hijas, de 9 y 11 años de edad.

A diferencia de la mayor parte de la América Latina, Cuba no es abrumadoramente católica romana. La revolución de 1959 confiscó las escuelas católicas, expulsó a sacerdotes y monjas y confiscó también otras propiedades de la Iglesia.

Durante más de 30 años, fue ilegal el que los católicos se afiliaran al Partido Comunista, la organización más poderosa en esta isla de 11 millones de habitantes, que cuenta solamente con 200 sacerdotes, según las cifras del Vaticano. En 1992, se enmendó la Constitución para descartar al ateísmo decretado por el estado, y la Iglesia ha aumentado su visibilidad desde entonces. La cantidad de bautizos se cuadruplicó con exceso, desde 7,500 en 1979 hasta 34,800 en 1994.

A pesar del aflojamiento de las limitaciones, las relaciones con el gobierno son tan frágiles que los sacerdotes y los trabajadores de socorro no atienden a las solicitudes de entrevistas.

En verdad, todos los cubanos que criticaron al gobierno en español lo hicieron únicamente después de comprobar para ver quién podría estar escuchando y bajaron la voz para evitar que se les oyera. Aunque los cubanos son rápidos para bromear acerca de la policía, también están indispuestos a permitir que se usen sus nombres si critican al gobierno o se quejan de sus cursos de acción.

Día de la Raza en Winston Salem

WINSTON SALEM — Para conmemorar la fecha en que Cristóbal Colón pisó por primera vez tierra americana, el 12 de octubre de 1492, la comunidad de Nuestra Señora de la Merced celebró con alegría y colorido esta fiesta, conocida como el Día de la Raza el pasado 12 de octubre.

Participaron en las actividades representantes de varios países, entre los que se encontraban Ecuador, Colombia, Venezuela, México y Puerto Rico. Un grupo de jóvenes mexicanos vinieron desde Yadkinville para colaborar con sus bailes típicos.

La señora Consuelo Herrán, esposa del diácono Pedro Herrán, con la colaboración de varias damas de la comunidad, dirigió esta fiesta cívica con mucho entusiasmo.

Santa María, Madre de Dios

Iniciamos el Nuevo Año celebrando la fiesta de Santa María, Madre de Dios. Es el más grande e importante de los misterios de María. Este misterio nos recuerda la obra maravillosa que Dios, en su omnipotente sabiduría, realizó en la humilde Virgen de Nazaret, llamada María. Ella había consagrado su virginidad y toda su persona al Señor para cumplir únicamente su voluntad. El Señor aceptó su decisión y le ofreció algo infinitamente más grande: Ser la Madre de su Divino Hijo, sin perder su virginidad.

en mi según tu palabra.... Este prodigio es para la gloria de Dios y para bendición de María y de todas las generaciones. Así lo cantó ella en el Magníficat: "En adelante todos me llamarán bienaventurada, porque el Todopoderoso ha hecho en mí grandes cosas y su nombre es santo... y a los humildes y pobres los llenó de bienes...".

Que María sería la Madre de Dios fue anunciado por Isaías: "La Virgen concebirá y dará a la luz a un niño y le pondrán por nombre Emmanuel...". Los Evangelistas nombran a María "la Madre de Jesús" e Isabel la llama "la Madre de mi Señor". El Catecismo de la Iglesia Católica enseña: "María es verdaderamente la 'Madre de Dios' porque es la Madre del Hijo eterno de Dios hecho hombre, que es Dios mismo". Para María ser la Madre de Dios fue tan importante que lo aceptó con profundo amor y lo vivió hasta las últimas consecuencias: desde la Anunciación hasta el Calvario. Esto es para nosotros un formidable ejemplo, para que vivamos con generosidad nuestra propia vocación, que ciertamente no será mas difícil que la de la virgen María nuestra Madre.

El gran misterio de María Madre de Dios fue proyectado por Dios para realizar el plan de la salvación de la humanidad y fue efectuado en el tiempo establecido por El. Dios elige a una humilde mujer, pura, inmaculada, sin pecado, para una misión increíble: ser Madre de Dios. Y ella aceptó libremente. Para María, ser la Madre de Jesús, verdadero Dios y verdadero hombre, es un privilegio increíble; y, aunque ella no lo entiende en toda su dimensión y en sus consecuencias, no discute ni se opone, sino que con alegría lo acepta con gran humildad y responde: "Hágase

Papa ora para que paz y gozo se extiendan por el mundo en Navidad

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (CNS) — El Papa Juan Pablo II oró para que la paz y el gozo invocados en los villancicos navideños de todos los idiomas inspiraran una verdadera armonía en África, el Medio Oriente y otros lugares de conflicto.

“El resignarnos a tal violencia e injusticia sería un rechazo demasiado grave del gozo y la esperanza que trae la Navidad”, dijo el Papa el 25 de diciembre en su mensaje anual “urbi et orbi” (a la ciudad y al mundo).

Los versos de los villancicos navideños, especialmente las canciones de Navidad polacas, puntuaron tanto el mensaje al mediodía de la Navidad como la Misa de media noche que él celebró en la Basílica de San Pedro.

En su homilía, el Papa oró por todos, “cristianos y no cristianos, creyentes y no creyentes por igual”.

Su oración, dijo él, reflejaba el don verdadero que se celebra en la Navidad, que es la salvación que Dios ofrece a toda la humanidad en Cristo.

Con millares de personas — incluyendo a un regimiento de la Guardia Suiza, soldados italianos y la banda de la policía para-militar italiana — reunidas alrededor de una escena de la Navidad de tamaño natural en la Plaza de San Pedro el Día de Navidad, el Papa deseó paz y gozo a la ciudad de Roma y al mundo.

En un mensaje transmitido por estaciones de televisión en 70 naciones, el Papa deseó al mundo una Navidad Feliz en 55 idiomas.

El Papa oró también para que las melodías de Navidad llevaran serenidad a las naciones que se recuperan de la guerra, incluyendo a Guatemala y Bosnia-Herzegovina, donde “las armas han quedado en silencio por fin y los hombres recorren de nuevo el camino de la comprensión y la fraternidad”.

El gobierno de Guatemala y los dirigentes rebeldes tenían fijada la formalización de un tratado de paz el 29 de diciembre, que pusiera fin a 36 años de conflicto armado.

Pero “el eco de las canciones de Navidad” debe propagarse a otros lugares también, dijo el Papa. Las tonadas deben llevar a lugares “en donde se escucha aún el choque de las armas, desbaratando el ambiente de paz que trae este día santo”.

El Papa oró por la paz en el Medio Oriente, especialmente en “Belén y toda la Tierra Santa, donde Jesús nació y vivió: La tierra que El amaba, la tierra donde la esperanza no debe morir, a pesar de las provocaciones y de las diferencias profundas”.

Sacerdote retenido en Lima dijo que evitó oír confesiones

LIMA, Perú (CNS) — Un sacerdote retenido como rehén por los guerrilleros peruanos dijo que él trató de ayudar pastoralmente a los demás rehenes, pero evitó escuchar confesiones.

El Padre Luis Martínez S.J. dijo también que tuvo una sensación curiosa cuando el taxi en que viajaba se rompió en la noche del 17 de diciembre.

Contra su mejor juicio, el Padre Martínez hizo señas a otro taxi y por último llegó a la residencia del Embajador del Japón, Morihisa Aoki — cinco minutos antes de que fuera asaltada por 15 rebeldes miembros del Movimiento Revolucionario Tupac Amaru.

“Fue sólo una de esas cosas. Uno piensa: ‘Voy a llegar tarde, ¿para qué molestarme?’ Cuando llegué, ni siquiera quedaban ya alimentos. Estaba hablando con la esposa del embajador, preguntándole si había más alimentos en la cocina, cuando oímos las explosiones”, dijo el Padre Martínez en una entrevista con el Catholic News Service poco después de ser puesto en libertad.

El Padre Martínez, un jesuita español que ha vivido en el Perú durante 31 años y es el vicario general de la comunidad peruano-japonesa, estaba entre los 38 rehenes puestos en libertad el 20 de diciembre por los rebeldes Tupac Amaru. Para el 23 de diciembre, 140 de los casi 500 rehenes permanecían aún en cautividad.

Los rebeldes le permitieron visitar a los demás prisioneros retenidos en el piso donde él estaba — los rehenes estaban siendo retenidos en los pisos primero y segundo de la residencia de Aoki — para hablar con otros prisioneros, porque él es un sacerdote.

El dijo que los rehenes le pidieron que orara con ellos y que escuchara sus confesiones, algo que él dijo que trató de evitar.

“Todos pedían confesarse. En vez de escuchar sus peticiones, les di una bendición. No quería empezar a escuchar confesiones, porque la gente comenzaría a pensar que sus vidas estaban llegando a su fin. No quería que la gente pensara que iban a morir”, agregó él.

Some Mother's Son

Director George Again Strikes A Universal Chord

NEW YORK (CNS) — A mother struggles between respecting her son's wishes and saving his life in "Some Mother's Son."

The story is based on the 1981 hunger strike in Northern Ireland's Maze Prison led by jailed IRA leader Bobby Sands (John Lynch) in which he and nine prisoners died of starvation as a protest against the inhumane conditions imposed on them to break their spirit.

Blending fact with fictionalized characters, the movie stars Helen Mirren as Catholic schoolteacher Kathleen Quigley, a widowed mother of three and avowed pacifist as far as "the troubles" in her homeland are concerned.

She is horrified when her older son, Gerard (Aidan Gillen), is summarily arrested and jailed for an IRA bombing and shootout, along with his fugitive IRA buddy, Frank Higgins (David O'Hara).

The Thatcher government's get-tough policy reclassifies them as common criminals, not political prisoners, and the 300-plus incarcerated IRA members protest in blankets, refusing to wear prison garb. When the prisoners are punished by not being allowed to use the toilets, they smear excrement on the cell walls in protest.

An unlikely friendship, meanwhile, develops on the outside between Kathleen and Frank's mom, Annie (Fionnula Flanagan), a passionate IRA supporter who convinces Kathleen she must become politically active to get the British to improve living conditions for their sons.

The stakes are raised immeasurably when Bobby Sands calls a hunger strike to the death in hopes of provoking the British into recognizing their status as political prisoners.

The two mothers go to London to meet with government officials for a compromise, but are merely told the ball is in their court; as their sons go into coma from the effects of starvation they can sign a document to have them force fed — or watch them die.

Sands, elected to Parliament on his deathbed, dies on the 66th day of his strike, generating worldwide publicity as the British realize their strategy has created a martyr.

As Gerard and Frank weaken, their mothers are torn by the decision each must make even as a tantalizing compromise seems near — but may not be solidified in time to save their boys.

Director Terry George, who co-wrote 1993's "In the Name of the Father" again strikes a universal chord by putting individual faces on the conflict in Northern Ireland. Here he weds the factual account of the hunger strike to the agonizing attempts of the two fictional women to save their children without disrespecting their expressed wishes.

Using personal perspective of the distraught mothers would seem likely to produce overwrought melodrama, but George successfully reins in the drama to the issues at hand and elicits finely restrained performances from the four lead characters.

Mirren could hardly improve on her portrayal, creating a strong, persevering mother with no time for self-pity and much to learn about political activism despite her aversion to violence. Flanagan is just as credible as the rough-and-tumble widow who has already buried one son in the cause and now faces the prospect of watching another die.

Early on, Kathleen's character makes the point to her boy that killing is wrong, no matter if it be a British soldier, and throughout the narrative Catholic priests stress the value of life over violence and self-destruction, even for a patriotic cause. But the role of the clergy in attempting to mediate a compromise is seen as mostly ineffectual and the British bureaucracy is spared no pity for the brutish strategies they were eventually forced to abandon.

The film sensitively focuses on genuine maternal anguish, and the British, not surprisingly, come off as vicious occupiers. Less successful is the rigid angel-or-devil depiction of two polar opposites: prisoner Sands is seen as a Christlike figure and Jesus look-alike while the British bureaucrat (Tom Hollander) overseeing the prison crisis is depicted as a soulless monster.

The audience is most likely to be moved by the plight of the mothers, 21 in actuality, who had to confront such a life-and-death decision about their sons. Although the prisoners' demands were eventually met, viewers are likely to leave saddened in the realization that a lasting peace in Northern Ireland has not yet been achieved.

Due to some violence and intermittent profanity as well as rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Bogus" (1996)

Fantasy misfire in which a 7-year-old orphan (Haley Joel Osment), reluctantly cared for by his foster-aunt (Whoopi Goldberg), finds comfort in talking with an invisible grown-up pal (Gerard Depardieu). Director Norman Jewison's soggy salute to the power of a child's imagination is an awkward, unconvincing blend of comedy, drama and fantasy. A fatal car crash and fleeting violence. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"The Island of Dr. Moreau" (1996)

This is a murky updating of H.G. Wells' 1896 horror tale of an airplane crash survivor (David Thewlis) held prisoner on a remote island where the experiments of a mad scientist (Marlon Brando) in turning animals into humans have resulted in grotesque mutants who come to rebel against their demented creator. Directed by John Frankenheimer, the menacing visuals aren't enough to involve the viewer in the fate of the picture's ill-defined characters. Intermittent violence and mindless mayhem. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Kingpin" (1996)

Dopey comedy in which a boozy, has-been bowling champ (Woody Harrelson) persuades a naive, Amish bowling prodigy (Randy Quaid) to compete in a million-dollar tournament whose frontrunner (Bill Murray) had ruined the drunk's promising career years earlier. Directed by Peter and Bobby Farrelly, there is something to turn off nearly everyone in this occasionally funny hodgepodge of politically incorrect and scatological humor. Much tasteless humor, some stylized violence, brief sexual innuendo and minimal profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

Prayers Offered To Protect Those Who Protect Us

By STEPHEN KENT

OMAHA, Neb. (CNS) — A police officer moves cautiously into a pitch-black alley as the alarm of a warehouse sounding into the dark night raises the possibility of an armed felon lurking around the corner.

A firefighter straps on an air pack and advances into a blazing building, hoping no one remains inside, while wondering if a flame-weakened ceiling will collapse upon him.

As they place their own lives in peril, firefighters and law enforcement officers often pray for themselves. They are not alone when at risk. In Omaha, there are thousands of people praying daily for the personnel of their police and fire departments.

It's called Shield-A-Badge. Its purpose: "Protecting our protectors through prayer."

The program began in Holy Cross Parish whose pastor, Father Charles F. Swanson, is chaplain to the Omaha Fire Department and one of eight police division chaplains.

"The Shield-A-Badge program is going like gangbusters," said Father Swanson. There are 30 Catholic parishes and other denominations already involved, with 10 more expressing interest, he said.

The center of the program is a prayer card. One has "A Firefighter's Prayer" on the back with the fire department insignia and an individual name on the front. The other is "A Police Officer's Prayer" with the police shield and name on the reverse.

People taking cards are asked to pray at least daily for "their" firefighter or police officer.

"One firefighter told me, 'Father, I can depend on my wife and children to pray for me, but it's wonderful when a total stranger prays for me,'" said Father Swanson.

"Another person — an older lady — said she would pray the rosary — one per shift — for firefighters," said Father Swanson.

The program began earlier this fall after a member of the Holy Cross Altar Society told Father Swanson about a similar program in one church in Texas.

Father Swanson revised the prayer, then formed a committee of his parish's stewardship committee, members of the Omaha police and fire division and the Millard fire department. The three departments total about 1,300 personnel.

An initial printing of 5,000 cards was ordered. These have been distributed and a second printing of 5,000 is being rapidly distributed, he said. The funding comes through police and fire unions.

"We contacted each police officer and firefighter individually, told them what was happening, and said to let us know if they didn't want their name used," said Father Swanson.

Only two of the 1,300 declined, he said.

"We give the name and service only," he said, "no rank, nor address or phone number."

The program has particular appeal in Holy Cross Parish, where Omaha Fire Capt. John Dessling, who died in an ar-

Father Charles F. Swanson, chaplain to the Omaha, Neb., fire department, holds cards used in the Shield-A-Badge program to pray for firefighters and law enforcement officers.

son fire, was a member.

The significance of the parish involvement starting with the stewardship committee should not be overlooked, the pastor said.

"Stewardship is not just sharing money, not just sharing talents, but also sharing spiritual treasures," he said. "This is a spiritual gift."

Pro-Lifers Continue Protests At Planned Parenthood Clinic

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (CNS) — More than 200 pro-life activists gathered quietly Dec. 28 near the clinic of Planned Parenthood of Rochester, the site of earlier demonstrations where 11 activists were arrested for resisting arrest and criminal trespass. Police in several squad cars observed the latest demonstration but made no arrests as the protesters marched from a nearby park to the clinic, held a peaceful prayer vigil, recited the rosary and returned to the park. Among those arrested Dec. 7 was Father Norman Weslin, a priest of the Diocese of Ponce, Puerto Rico, and spiritual leader of the national pro-life group Lambs of Christ. Father Weslin and the others pleaded not guilty to the charges and were scheduled to appear in court again Jan. 10.

Marriott Fires Employee For Wearing Crucifix

HARTFORD, Conn. (CNS) — A cafeteria worker at Trinity College in Hartford, who was fired for insisting on wearing a crucifix necklace on the job, was considering filing suit against his employer, Marriott Food Service. "By management trying to make me put my cross inside of my shirt is trying to make me deny Christ, which I will never do," the fired worker, Kevin Mullen, told Trinity Tripod, the college's student newspaper. Mullen, a shift supervisor at the Bistro, a college cafeteria run by Marriott, was fired for insubordination on Dec. 5. Trinity College, established in 1823, is a private liberal arts institution which has an enrollment of around 2,000 men and women.

Vietnamese Girls Discover Joy Of Giving At Catholic Parish

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam (CNS) — A dozen disadvantaged girls discovered the joy of giving when they celebrated Christmas with the disabled and elderly at St. Anthony Parish in Ho Chi Minh City. "I am poor, but there are people who are poorer than me," said one of the girls, aged 8-17. "When I heard of the visit to the parish on Christmas, I was eager to participate because I had a chance to give from what I have, no matter how little it is," she added. The girls are under the care of the "Warm Shelter," a rehabilitation center in Ho Chi Minh City. All had formerly been sexually abused or lured into prostitution, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

Archbishop Murphy's Health Improved

SEATTLE (CNS) — Archbishop Thomas J. Murphy's health has improved and there are signs his leukemia may be in remission, the Seattle Archdiocese said Jan. 2.

The 64-year-old archbishop has been hospitalized at Providence Seattle Medical Center since Dec. 1 for acute myelogenous leukemia and reduced kidney function.

His hematologist, Dr. David White, said a blood and bone marrow biopsy taken Dec. 24 showed no evidence of leukemic cells.

He said this indicates that the archbishop has responded positively to chemotherapy and that remission — while not assured — is within the realm of possibility.

White said Archbishop Murphy's health was improved enough for him to begin taking brief furloughs from the hospital. If it continues to progress, he said, the archbishop could soon be allowed to leave the hospital and continue his convalescence at home.

He said the archbishop's bone marrow needs to continue its process of building healthy blood cells over a sustained period of weeks before his leukemia can be classified as in remission.

A Chicago native, Archbishop Murphy was ordained a priest there in 1958. In 1978 he became bishop of Great Falls-Billings, Mont.

He moved to Seattle as coadjutor archbishop in 1987 and has headed the archdiocese since 1991.

Catholics Are Still In Early Stages Of Bible Scholarship, Expert Says

By ROBERT O'STEEN

MIAMI (CNS) — Recent popular attention to biblical interpretation underscores how little Catholic Bible scholarship is understood, according to a Scripture scholar.

Sulpician Father Raymond Brown told an audience at St. John Vianney Seminary in December that until the era of Pope Pius XII in the 1940s, the centrist Catholic approach to interpreting Scripture wasn't widely taught.

In a 1943 encyclical, "Divino afflante Spiritu," promoting biblical studies, Pope Pius clearly laid a Catholic path between scriptural fundamentalists and liberals, who staked out dramatically different positions on the age, origins and validity of the Scriptures, Father Brown explained.

The pope found reading the Bible to be enriching and he wanted it translated from original languages into modern ones, Father Brown said. Pope Pius also instructed seminaries to teach and train priests in Bible studies and encouraged Catholics to read Scripture.

"He was convinced that an intelligent use of scientific methods could help build up theology, put it on a sounder basis," Father Brown said.

A member of the Pontifical Biblical Commission, Father Brown has been featured recently in Time and Newsweek articles about trends in Scripture study. Among the reasons for recent popular interest in the Bible are publicity about controversial interpretations like that of the Jesus Seminar, which concluded that the Resurrection didn't actually happen.

But Father Brown said while the Jesus Seminar's views grab headlines, the group doesn't represent the more centrist views of most scholars.

"They meet and decide Jesus didn't speak a single word recorded in the Gospel of John," he said. "Big headlines! Jesus didn't say the Lord's Prayer. He didn't resurrect, dogs ate his body. Big headlines. And the media love it. They are presented as scholars."

Father Brown said he encourages reporters who ask him about the Jesus Seminar to consult mainstream seminaries like those at Yale, Union, Princeton and Duke and ask about the Jesus Seminar theories.

"These places just ignore it because it is regarded as bizarre," he said.

Pope Pius' views about the Bible shaped the Church's approach of treating the Gospels as "not literal history of Jesus" but instead as "based on memories of Jesus by eyewitnesses" shaped by preaching, theological development and re-thinking.

"And what you had was written records of the living teaching of the church stemming from Jesus," he said. "Each Gospel writer shaped the material in a different way with a different goal, organized it differently, chose different things, rearranged them not in chronological order, but in logical order."

Translations from the original biblical languages resulted in Catholic and Protestant Bibles being nearly the same, Father Brown explained, leading to the modern ecumenical movement and scholarly cooperation.

But new emphasis on Scripture study also brought new problems, he noted.

Pope Pius didn't foresee the growth of the media and population shifts like that in the United States which brought Catholics who had lived in ethnic pockets in big cities to the Protestant-dominated Bible belt.

Hearing fundamentalist preachers on the radio prophesying disasters and the end of the world had to be a shock for Catholics who grew up with little understanding of the Bible, particularly of the Old Testament, he said.

Contemporary media, such as the increasingly dominant Internet, create new pressures for those who want to ensure the Bible is understood in the appropriate contexts.

For instance, he said, people often look at a contemporary problem and want to know what Jesus said about it, when the issue obviously would never have come up in his time.

"People haven't come to grips with that," he said. "Scriptures are enormously powerful and have enormous ramifications for what we are living through today. But they often require translation — not linguistic, but trying to understand how they face issues and how we need to face them today."

But Father Brown was optimistic about the future of Scripture studies, despite such hurdles, citing St. Paul's admonitions to Timothy to not be timid, but bold in facing challenges.

"Paul is wearing chains," Father Brown explained. "But he says the word of God is not chained. You cannot chain the Gospel. Thanks to Pius XII we have unleashed the power of the Gospel in the Church and I don't think it can be chained ever again."

promises is to end the circumstances that make that abuse possible.

An annulment, in church or civil law, does not affect the status of children. A marriage which is later annulled is called a putative marriage.

This means that everyone, including very likely the couple themselves, thought it was a real marriage at the time. The children do not become illegitimate.

For a new marriage to take place in the Catholic Church, action by the tribunal of some diocese would be necessary regarding your first marriage. You would pursue this normally through your parish priest.

If you enter a new marriage outside the Church, that will not automatically exclude the baptism of future children. Church policies, spelled out in the baptism ritual and in canon law, require some solid reason to expect the child will be raised as a practicing Catholic.

If a couple not married in the church still go to Mass and otherwise still practice their faith as much as possible, and continue their efforts to return to the sacraments, that usually would provide good basis for hoping the children will be helped to grow up in the Catholic faith.

As for your concern about discussing the subject with a priest, serious differences in personalities and outlook inevitably affect one's ability to deal with such sensitive issues successfully with someone else.

Fortunately, several priests live not too far from your home. Ask around, go to one you feel will be helpful, and let him guide you through what needs to be done. I wish you luck.

Parish Catechetical Kit Offered For Millennium Preparation

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A resource kit on the first year of preparations for the year 2000 is available for sale to help parish staffs plan at the local level.

The kit, called "Preparing for the Jubilee: Year One, 1997," was developed by the U.S. Catholic Conference Department of Education and published by the USCC Office for Publishing and Promotion Services.

It includes reflection pieces for catechists and religion teachers, family materials, small-group resources, and retreat suggestions for various groups, from elementary school students to families.

"This kit is based on the premise that adults should be the primary audience addressed," said Bishop Robert J. Banks of Green Bay, Wis., who completed a term as chairman of the U.S. bishops' Committee on Education in November, in a preface to the kit.

"Adults who are faith-filled will carry the message of the Gospel into every sphere of their lives and thus serve as evangelizers as we approach the third millennium," he added.

The parish resource kit, Publication No. 5-129, is available for $13.95 plus $3 shipping and handling and may be ordered by calling (800) 235-8722.

Bonuses To Cut Medical Costs Not Necessarily Wrong

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (CNS) — Giving financial bonuses to physicians who control medical costs is not intrinsically wrong, as long as it doesn't limit proper care, said a moral theologian who advises the Diocese of Providence. Father Robert J. McManus, vicar for education and chairman of the diocese's Biomedical Ethics Commission, said questions on the morality of giving bonuses for limiting care must be balanced with the need to keep costs low enough to be able to provide fundamental care to the greatest number of people. New federal policies were to take effect Jan. 1, restricting bonuses that reward physicians for cost-cutting. Health maintenance organizations, known as HMOs, will be prohibited from making specific payments to encourage physicians to reduce or limit services.

31 Catholic Missionaries Flee Homes Await Airlift Out Of Zaire

ROME (CNS) — Thirty-one Catholic missionaries who fled their homes when Zairian government troops began sacking them on Christmas were awaiting an airlift to safety one week later. "They are together and in fairly good condition," Father David K. Glenday, superior general of the Comboni Missionaries, told Catholic News Service Dec. 31. Retreating Zairian government troops systematically looted the north-eastern town of Isiro Dec. 25, forcing missionaries based there to flee into the forests with many townspeople, according to a press release from the Comboni's Rome headquarters.

Group Defies Iraq Embargo To Deliver Medical Supplies

CHICAGO (CNS) — As their families and friends shopped for Christmas presents in early December, members of a group called Voices in the Wilderness prepared a gift delivery of a different sort. The group formed to challenge U.S. and U.N. economic sanctions against Iraq defied a federal ban on travel to Iraq to deliver a load of medical supplies. In the five years since the end of the Persian Gulf War, the organization has sponsored several trips to Iraq to deliver supplies they say are severely needed. "The Persian Gulf War never ended," said Chicagoan Kathy Kelly. "It just turned into another type of war where the children of Iraq are the casualties." The former Catholic school teacher quoted U.N. statistics showing 567,000 children have died in Iraq since 1990.

A joint December meeting of the government-sanctioned Bishops' Conference of the Catholic Church in China and the Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association's standing committee set some congressional guidelines and the tentative time frame, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

MOORESVILLE — When Redemptorist Father Francis Funk celebrated Mass in a Mooresville home for the first time in January 1946, about a dozen Catholics joined together to worship in the south Iredell County town.

The pastor of St. Joseph Church in Kannapolis, along with his successors, celebrated Masses in homes and the local Veterans of Foreign Wars hut until 1949. Then, with help from the Catholic Extension Society, a pre-World War II chapel was purchased from Camp Lejeune in Jacksonville and was relocated to Mooresville piece by piece. The town had its first Catholic church.

By that time, the church family had adopted the name St. Therese, in honor of the late-1800s French Carmelite nun from Lisieux. Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh dedicated the building in June 1950.

Redemptorist clergy continued to serve the Mooresville church until August 1954, when diocesan priests assumed pastoral care. During the pastorate of Father Edward Beatty, from 1956-59, St. Therese became a parish. Right away the parish took on St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton as a mission, and the church received its first expansion: an extension serving as the pastor's quarters and, later, as office space.

With the arrival of the 1960s came further growth. Membership had grown to more than 120 people, and additional property — complete with a home for use as a rectory — was acquired in September 1961. St. Therese parish added another mission, in Cherryville, to its pastorate as well. The parish's responsibility for the missions continued into the late 1960s.

By the time the parish had added another building to its church grounds — a duplex providing classroom space — in 1967, the pastorate of diocesan priests in Mooresville was nearing its end. Father Vincent Erb, pastor from 1966-70, was the last diocesan priest to serve St. Therese parish before Father John Radaelli, a member of the Consolata Society for Foreign Missions, tended to parish operations for several months in 1970.

Jesuit priests arrived at St. Therese later that year, beginning their pastorate that continues today. Parish-level activities were developed and refined, and a Knights of Columbus council was founded with help from Jesuit Father Paul Gilvary in September 1979. The church was renovated to include pews obtained from St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte. The remodeling allowed room for 168 parishioners.

Ministry to the community continued to broaden during the 1980s. Responsibility for campus ministry — first at Davidson College, later diocesan-wide — was assumed by St. Therese pastors beginning in 1981.

Several church beautification projects highlighted 1982, including the addition of stained glass windows. The congregation also began to realize the need for additional room to better accommodate parish life.

By April 1983, plans for constructing new facilities had reached a milestone: The parish bought 25 acres of land on Brawley Road on which to build. The church property was placed on the market in September 1986, and the final liturgy was celebrated in October of the following year. During the interim period between the closing of one church and the completion of another, the St. Therese congregation was welcomed to celebrate Masses in Central United Methodist Church in town.

The new church facility was dedicated by Bishop John F. Donoghue of Charlotte and Father Frank O'Rourke, then-director of the office of parish life and worship, in January 1988. By the close of the 1980s, parish membership numbered almost 400 families.

With the advent of the 1990s came rapid and continued parish growth. The present pastor of St. Therese, Jesuit Father Robert Wiesenbaugh, arrived in Mooresville in June 1994. He has seen a tremendous increase in the number of parishioners, and when he joined in celebrating the 50th anniversary of the founding of St. Therese Church — and the 25th anniversary of his priestly ordination — in 1996, more than 1,110 families made up the church family.

With plans for additional expansion and a host of active parish and community programs, including a vibrant evangelization commission, St. Therese Church continues to reach out to the faithful in western North Carolina.

Maryvale Sisters Mary Francis and Mary Clare share a moment with Bishop Emeritus Michael J. Begley during Sunday's Jubilee Celebration at St. Matthew Church.

Diocese Celebrates Jubilee, Anniversary Of First Bishop

By MIKE KROKOS And JIMMY ROSTAR

CHARLOTTE — Hailing its first leader and the people who have shaped the Catholic Church in western North Carolina, Bishop William G. Curlin and other dignitaries gathered at St. Matthew Church Jan. 12 to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Diocese of Charlotte and the jubilee of the Episcopal Ordination of its founding shepherd, Bishop Michael J. Begley.

"On this day, 25 years ago, Bishop Begley was ordained a bishop and the pilgrim people of the Diocese of Charlotte began their journey of faith," Bishop Curlin told the more than 500 people who attended the Jubilee Mass.

Building a parish is no easy task, Bishop Curlin said, but the task of establishing a diocese is monumental. "It takes great faith, love, much patience, and many gifts. And these gifts were richly evident when Bishop Begley established this diocese."

From a 46-county area of 34,200 Catholics in 1972, the diocese has grown through the leadership of Bishop Begley, Archbishop John F. Donoghue of Atlanta (who was Charlotte's second bishop, from 1984-1993) and Bishop Curlin. It serves more than 104,000 registered parishioners today.

The diocese's history includes new churches, schools and ministries, but most important for the future, Bishop Curlin said, is a continued growth in spirituality. "Our diocese will only be successful if it is built on Jesus Christ."

"I hope in the future," he added, "our diocese will continue to witness Christ through service, love, and action."

Also present for the Jubilee was Archbishop Donoghue, who still recalls

Bishop Begley Honored At St. Patrick Cathedral

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — The diocesan Jubilee commemoration continued with a Jan. 13 Mass honoring the life's work of the founding shepherd of the Church in western North Carolina.

In the ceremony, Bishop William G. Curlin several times referred to Bishop Emeritus Michael J. Begley's episcopal motto, "Diligimus Fratres," or "We Have Loved the Brethren." It epitomizes Bishop Begley, said Bishop Curlin during the Mass at St. Patrick Cathedral. "In the name of the diocese," he added, "I say the feeling is mutual: Bishop Begley, we all love you."

During a Mass the day before at Charlotte's St. Matthew Church, Bishop Curlin presided over a celebration for the diocese — its history, its future, and the people who have made it a reality.

But the Jan. 13 gathering at the cathedral focused on Bishop Begley. With Bishop David B. Thompson of Charleston, Bishop Kevin Boland of Savannah and Abbot

Oscar Burnett of Belmont Abbey — as well as priests and clergy from both North Carolina dioceses — Bishop Curlin concelebrated a liturgy recognizing the most humble example of faith.

"If anybody were to ask me to describe Bishop Begley, I would say two things," said Bishop Curlin during his homily. "He is man of the Church, and a man of great love."

Bishop Curlin urged priests, clergy, religious and everyone present to center their existence around the Eucharist. "How can any of us live our lives if we do not believe that the Eucharist is the heartbeat of the Church?" he asked. "It is what keeps us going and what makes us mindful to find Christ in our life. Certainly this is evident in the life of Bishop Begley."

Paying tribute to Bishop Begley as the heart of the celebration, Bishop Curlin also addressed the importance of vocations and ministries in this diocese and in the world today. "You are wonderful people," he told the priests, religious and lay ministers in the congregation. He continued with an anecdote praising his brother clergy. "On a retreat last week, the bishops were talking about the things that make them the happiest. I said, 'My priests are the joy of my life.'"

Calling the founding shepherd a selfless man of the people, Bishop Curlin referred to Bishop Begley as a "blessed comfort" and "constant encouragement" not only for himself, but for all those who dedicate their lives to priestly or religious ministry.

Bishop David Thompson, shepherd of the Charleston Diocese since February 1990, agreed, saying Bishop Begley "was always very kind to me, especially when I was a new bishop."

"I take it very seriously to be an active member of our province," Bishop Thompson added. "Certainly within the province, there is a bonding here. And Bishop Begley is responsible for a bonding of love with us."

The admiration for Bishop Begley extends to the ecumenical community as well. Lutheran Bishop Michael McDaniel, former bishop of the North Carolina Lutheran Synod, thanked the Catholic community of western North Carolina, and its retired bishop in particular, for being "so gracious and hospitable" over the years.

"It's been a great opportunity for my wife Marjorie and me to take part in these celebrations," said Bishop McDaniel. "We love your diocese and your bishops. We've had wonderful experiences over the years, experiences of unity, love, mutual service and witness to Christ."

Serving as a witness to Christ is a gift that Bishop Begley counts as a blessing. He expressed his appreciation for all those persons making his life as a priest and bishop joyful. "This has been a great moment, a time for reflection, a time to reminisce," Bishop Begley said. "With God's help, His glory and His gifts, it's been 60 years in the priesthood for me. And I thank God for the privilege of sharing this with His people."

Pope John Paul II receives diplomats at the Vatican Jan. 13 following his yearly state of the world address to envoys accredited to the Vatican. The pope said the Vatican will be watching closely how religious rights in Hong Kong are treated after the British colony is handed over to China this year.

St. Vincent de Paul Society Founder To Be Beatified

PARIS (CNS) — The Society of St. Vincent de Paul has announced that its founder, Antoine Frederic Ozanam, will be beatified by Pope John Paul II this August in Paris.

The ceremony is to coincide with a planned papal visit to Paris for World Youth Day 1997, the society said. It listed Aug. 21-24 as the dates of the papal trip. It said Ozanam's beatification will be the first such ceremony held in Paris.

Last June the Vatican approved a miracle attributed to Ozanam's intercession, paving the way for his beatification.

A 19th-century French scholar, Ozanam founded the Conference of Charity with fellow university students in Paris in 1833 to provide practical assistance to the poor. Two years later it was renamed the Society of St. Vincent de Paul.

The society today has about 850,000 members in 130 countries, including 64,000 members in the United States. In the United States, where it is represented in every diocese in the country, it reported that it provided more than $100 million in aid to those in need last year.

Ozanam, who had three doctorates and taught law, literature and history, was a significant force in Catholic intellectual life in mid 19th-century France as well as a widely admired model of the Catholic lay apostolate. He died in 1853 at the age of 40.

In a letter shortly before Christmas the society's International General Council informed member councils around the world that 60 percent of those who responded to an international consultation on the beatification site asked that it be held in Paris.

Bishop Begley's one piece of advice for him after Archbishop Donoghue was named his successor. "He told me, 'Remember the Holy Spirit runs this church, not you. So stay out of His way.'"

"I always tried to follow that advice," the archbishop added. "As a result, some people think I didn't do any work while I was here — it was all the Holy Spirit."

Bishop F. Joseph Gossman, who has served the Diocese of Raleigh since 1975, has maintained close friendships with all three Charlotte bishops. "When I received the invitation, I knew I needed to be here for this special celebration," he said.

Charlotte Rutherford Taylor, a parishioner at Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury, claims she is one of the few who can reminisce with Bishop Begley about his early days as a priest. "I bet I'm the only other one here who also remembers Bishop Hafey. I grew up in Raleigh and Bishop Hafey was my first bishop," she said. "Bishop Begley was my pastor when I was a girl."

Taylor, who attended Bishop Begley's ordination in 1972, called the Diocese of Charlotte's first shepherd "a very kind, down-to-earth, saintly man."

Dr. William Rabil and his wife, Rosalie, have known Bishop Begley for nearly all their adult lives. "He was our first pastor at St. Leo Church when we moved to Winston-Salem in 1946," Dr. Rabil said. "We also traveled with the bishop on his first 'ad limina' visit to Rome to meet with Pope Paul VI in 1974." Heads of dioceses are required to make "ad limina" visits every five years to the Vatican to report on the status of their dioceses.

Always very humble, Bishop Begley pointed to his flock when discussing the diocese and its accomplishments. "To all of you, my brothers and sisters in Christ, I must say what has been achieved has been achieved through your help," he said.

After thanking God for his health during his 60 years as a priest, Bishop Begley also thanked the congregation, who he said made his work all the more possible.

"I appreciate your prayers, and I ask God to continue to help and bless us all," he said. "God love and bless you all."

Archbishop Decries Atlanta Abortion Clinic Bombing

ATLANTA (CNS) — "We are appalled and saddened at this affront to life," Archbishop John F. Donoghue of Atlanta said Jan. 16 after two explosions rocked an abortion clinic in an Atlanta suburb, injuring several people.

"We deplore and condemn the cowardly and pointless act of violence at the clinic in Sandy Springs, regardless of who bears responsibility," he said.

Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston, chairman of the U.S. bishops' Committee for Pro-Life Activities, said, "Our bishops' conference and all its members have repeatedly, exhaustively and publicly denounced violence as a growing cancer in our society."

"On behalf of all the Catholic bishops in the United States, I strongly denounce today's senseless violence," he added. "Such violence is the opposite of everything we stand for.... We pray for those who were injured."

The first explosion at the clinic, the Atlanta Northside Family Planning Services Center, occurred at 9:30 a.m. It shattered one side of the five-story building, which also houses offices of lawyers, dentists and other professionals on upper floors. No injuries were reported from that blast.

An hour later, however, when police and fire officials and news crews were gathered at the site, a second explosion destroyed a trash container in a parking lot next to the building. Several people were injured.

"The evil is compounded by the application of a second blast designed to injure officials who selflessly place their lives on the line in these kinds of incidents," Archbishop Donoghue said.

He said no such violence can be condoned by those committed to "the sanctity of human life" and urged that all people of good will "dedicate themselves anew to the dignity and sanctity of the gift of life."

The Associated Press reported that about a half-hour after the second explosion, another abortion clinic half a mile away received a bomb threat and was evacuated.

Mary Boyert, executive director of Georgia Right to Life, said, "We are deeply saddened and concerned about the terrorism this morning. None of these — violence, bombing, terrorism — are ever pro-life, and they are never the solution to social problems."

Other pro-life leaders around the country joined in condemning the Atlanta bombings, for which no individual or group immediately claimed responsibility.

"Murder, or attempted murder, is never acceptable," said Carmen Pate, vice president of Concerned Women for America, a pro-family group that claims a half-million members.

"The majority of American women believe that abortion should not be legal and mourn the deaths of the 36 million babies who have died since the legalization of abortion in America," Pate added. "But those same women would never justify the killing of a human being responsible for those deaths."

David N. O'Steen, executive director of the National Right to Life Committee, said, "NRLC strongly opposes any use of violence as a means of stopping the violence that has killed more than 35 million unborn children since 1973."

"The goal of National Right to Life is to break the cycle of violence which includes abortion, not perpetuate it."

Brian Johnston, an NRLC board member and executive director of a state affiliate, the California ProLife Council, said, "Just as the Unabomber is not representative of environmentalists, the perpetrator of this act in no way represents the sentiments of pro-life citizens or the purposes of the pro-life movement."

Dear Friends in Christ:

Building solidarity with those who live in other parts of the world and who are in need is an essential expression of our faith. Millions of Catholics across the United States are choosing to practice their faith by participating in the annual Collection for the Church in Latin America. Together, we stand in solidarity with our brothers and sisters throughout this hemisphere, an act that reflects the understanding and compassion of Christ's love for us. This collection gives us an opportunity to stand in solidarity with Catholics in Latin America by supporting thousands of programs that build strong communities of faith.

The weekend of January 25-26, 1997, has been designated for the Collection for the Church in Latin America. You may wonder how your contribution might create significant change anywhere, but when many small contributions are combined nationwide, they add up to sums that can make a real difference to hundreds of thousands of people in Latin America. Even modest grants can provide things that we might take for granted, such as paper, books, etc. Collection funds are also used to support leadership training for seminarians, men and women religious, permanent deacons, catechists and lay leaders in Latin America, where there is an average of only one priest for every 7,000 Catholics. For the Church to continue as a source of hope in this region, formation of laity in community leadership is essential.

The act of reaching out to another, whether to ask for or to offer help, is an act of solidarity; it is a way of saying, "You and I are part of the same Body of Christ. Let us work together to find solutions to this suffering."

Thanking you for your generosity and wishing you and yours the blessings of this New Year, I am

Sincerely in Christ,

Very Rev. Mauricio W. West, V.G.

Super Bowl Decision Is No Contest For Green Bay Bishop From Boston

GREEN BAY, Wis. (CNS) — Even though he's a native of Boston, Green Bay Bishop Robert J. Banks says his choice to win Super Bowl is no contest.

"To put my sentiments as simply as possible — Go, Pack, Go!" the bishop wrote in a column for The Compass, Green Bay diocesan newspaper.

The 1997 Super Bowl Jan. 26 pits the Green Bay Packers against the New England Patriots.

Responding to those who have asked which team he will root for, Bishop Banks used a familiar line from the Gospel: "Have I been with you all this time and still you do not know me?"

"As soon as I opened my letter appointing me to Green Bay, I became a Packer-backer," he wrote. "It was easy because I had been a Packer fan years before as a youngster."

Bishop Banks, who has headed the Green Bay Diocese since October 1990, said he has bet Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston 12 pounds of Wisconsin cheese against a dozen live lobsters that the Packers will beat the Patriots.

"I really should have given him some points too, but why rub it in," he wrote.

Bishop Banks said his biggest Super Bowl-related problem is that he will be flying to a meeting with bishops from Latin America on the day of the game.

"That means I shall be in the air while the game is going on, and then I shall miss all the celebrating when the victorious Pack returns," he said.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Women Key In Spreading Christ's Message, Pope Says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Here is the Vatican text of Pope John Paul II's remarks in English at his weekly general audience Jan. 8.

Dear brothers and sisters,

In our catechesis on the Presentation of Jesus in the temple, we have considered Mary's role in the saving mission of her son. The words of Simeon also shed light on the role of women in Christ's work of redemption. Like Mary, all women are called by Christ to share in his mission and his suffering for the salvation of the world. The unique role of women in the economy of salvation is reflected in the prophetess Anna. Anna represents all those women who, by their holiness of life and vigilant prayer, rejoice in the coming of Christ and share with others (cf. Lk 2:38) the hope of salvation offered by the Gospel.

I am pleased to greet all the English-speaking visitors, especially the pilgrims from Korea and the United States. I also thank the choirs for their praise of God in song. Upon you and your families I cordially invoke the joy and peace of Jesus Christ our Savior.

Pope Urges Scientists To Consider Ethics, Morality Of Their Work

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II urged scientists to consider the moral and ethical implications of their work in order to serve humanity. The pope made the remarks Jan. 11 to about 100 scientific experts attending a Vatican-sponsored International Conference on Space Research. The pontiff said he believed recent advances in outer space research had deepened the appreciation people have for the human being and the Creator. "As never before man's gaze is open to the wonders of the universe. And the marvel of it all is a constant call to ponder ever more seriously the greatness of man's own destiny and his dependence upon the Creator," he said.

Pope Tells Diplomats World Needs A Moral Code To Advance Peace

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II told envoys to the Holy See that the world needs a coherent moral code to keep stronger and bigger nations from dominating others and to further gains in global peace. The pope told 164 diplomats assembled for his annual new year's address in mid-January that perhaps the greatest need of the international community today "is not written conventions or forums for self-expression ... but a moral law and the courage to abide by it."

Pope Welcomes New African Ambassadors To Vatican, Urges Dialogue

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Humanity suffers when peace, justice and respect among peoples are denied in any part of the world, Pope John Paul II told four ambassadors from Africa. "Dialogue is the most effective means of promoting peaceful coexistence in the world and of eliminating the scourge of violence, war and oppression," the pope said Jan. 11.

When Friends Meet Again

I had one of the happiest possible experiences when I met two of my teachers after a separation of nearly 50 years. Both are Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet, the wonderful community of nuns who taught me from elementary school through college in my hometown of Albany, N.Y.

Sister Jerome Joseph, my high school music teacher, gave me a love for classical music that brought joy to my life, a gift I passed on to my children.

Sister Emily Joseph my college Latin teacher, had a charism that made this "dead" subject come alive.

Both of these nuns had a special talent that I long ago knew came from their souls. They were two very alive women who never rationed their smiles. Just being in their classes made me feel like smiling too.

They invited me to dinner at the villa for retired nuns. We were like three school girls, so excited at seeing each other again after nearly a half century.

The stories kept coming back, and I was astounded at how much they could remember. I was only one of thousands of students they had taught in their careers, yet they remembered me.

That's probably the underlying reason they were so special to me. I think they communicated how much they cared for their students in many ways that I could feel.

In the past few years I have had the wonderful surprise of seeing many people from my past who were dear friends. The years had separated us, but when we got back together, even after many decades, it was as if layers simply fell away, and there we were, young and excited again.

Perhaps this means that when someone becomes a true friend in our youth, the bond always remains fresh.

I have asked people how they feel about seeing someone they had known well after a separation of 20 or more years.

The answers vary, usually starting with, "It depends on whether I really liked that person."

One woman said that meeting old friends after long separations excites her. She feels "new" again because seeing them reminds her of those fresh years when life was spread out like a smorgasbord, with so many wonderful choices and experiences ahead. In those fresh years, she hadn't considered the "down times, the dark times." She appreciated the joy of remembering those pre-wounded days.

One man told me that seeing old friends is a reminder that we are anchored, not alone and drifting. Remembering a strong relationship renews the power we feel when we connect with another person.

When we are young it is so much easier to connect to friends. Perhaps that is because life is simpler then, and we trust others more.

My wonderful evening with the two Sisters who had deeply and permanently impressed me in my teen years was a lesson in itself.

It taught me how important each of us is when we encounter another. The impact we leave can range from love to destruction. Every impression we make on another is precisely that — an impression formed for life.

I was fortunate, after so many years, to be able to tell these two beautiful women that the impression they made on me was the best. They gave us love and an excitement for learning. It was not surprising that the memory of this gift made for a great reunion!

“Oh, You Again!”

“The business of loving another human being is the most challenging of all human enterprises because of the demands it makes on us.” That’s what a well-known psychologist believes.

Perhaps because of these demands many have never loved another person deeply. Or, having loved someone, been hurt and so have retreated. Yet one of the greatest needs today is the strength for all of us to be able to love another person at a very deep level. For so many, it doesn’t happen.

In the novel Dearly Beloved by Ann Morrow Lindbergh, there is a moving passage in which Deborah is adjusting the wedding veil for her daughter Sally. They have lived in the same house for twenty-some years but never really enjoyed intimate sharing or communication.

The mother is feeling this very deeply now on the wedding day. Deborah goes to her daughter, kisses her lightly on the forehead and hesitates for a moment, looking urgently, almost pleadingly into her wide eyes. Isn’t there something she could say at this moment, mother to daughter, something real? Sally, too, seems to be pleading, asking for something, some connection.

“Your father will be up in a moment,” Deborah blurts out in a rush. That is all she can say.

The intimate words never came. The real things never got said.

That’s the commentary on life for so many in marriage, in the family and with friends. We go places and do things together, but the real thing never gets said, the real communication never happens.

The Bible tells us over and over again that once we know how much God loves us, we come to a point where we should no longer be afraid to move into deep relationships with other people.

God made us “to be full of love.” And the fullness of love begins with God’s first having loved us. Because of God’s love, incomparable riches are available to us in our loving relationships with those with whom we would draw close.

Alberto Giacometti, the Swiss sculptor, used only four models in his whole lifetime: his wife, his sister, and two other friends. When asked why he didn’t use more models to enrich his art, he said, “Oh, the great joy to me is to look at the same face every day and see something new there.”

Now most of us have just the opposite reaction: “Oh, the same face, day after day! That same old face!” But here is a man with marvelous insight: to see the face of your wife, the face of your husband, the face of your child, the face of a close friend, every day and to see something new there. To delight in what you see and to rejoice in it and to move deeper and deeper into love.

What tragedy it is when year after year you love together, only to discover that the most intimate friends and lovers are strangers. We don’t know who they are. We have never broken through.

But, my friend, because God loves us so much, it is possible to move into unfathomed realms of loving. We can miss this fantastic adventure by thinking that it couldn’t be any better, but whole new worlds of love and sharing and understanding — absolutely unlimited possibilities — grow out of one stunning recognition. As St. John put it, “We love, because He first loved us.”

Father John Dietzen

How to Become a Catholic

Q. I am a lifelong Protestant, with a good bit of background in Sunday school and other Christian education.

After much thought and prayer, I am interested in becoming Catholic. Where do I start?

A. It’s not hard. The first step is to contact a parish or Catholic center near you which regularly conducts programs for people like yourself. Many are located near you in Manhattan. If you get stuck, look in the Yellow Pages under “Churches, Roman Catholic.”

In my view, the best, most readable and scholarly one-volume history covering the church from its beginning all the way to our own generation is “Pilgrim Church,” authored by Father William Bausch, published by Twenty-Third Publications, Mystic, Conn. It is available through bookstores.

People in other parts of the country will not, of course, have the same large numbers of Catholic churches immediately available. But they may approach a priest or other parish minister in any nearby parish for the same assistance.

Q. My 22-year-old grandson and his steady girlfriend are expecting a baby in three months. They are both Catholic, and have received all the necessary sacraments up to now.

The priest they went to for marriage said to them that a couple who has a child out of wedlock cannot get married in the Church.

I’m sorry about the circumstances, but am happy about my new great-grandchild. So is the baby’s father, who has a fine new job to support his family.

Can you give me some information about this rule?

“God is fair, but the world is cruel.”

A. I don’t know what source the priest quoted, but there obviously is no basis for such a statement in Catholic teaching or policy.

At least two possibilities occur to me that could explain what happened. The couple, who are dealing with a number of stressful circumstances, may simply have misunderstood the priest. If so, it’s unfortunate they didn’t get the matter straightened out at the time.

Or the priest may have perceived some serious problems in their relationship, and unfortunately chose simply to tell them they couldn’t (in his view of the situation) get married.

Unwise and confusing as this may be, it seems that some priests, out of desperation and without explanation or advice about further steps, use this route to discourage couples from marrying.

If he has not done so already, please suggest to your grandson that they approach another priest to assist their preparation for marriage.

Spirituality For Today

Limbo

What is the future destiny of all the aborted infants? They number more than 40 million a year worldwide. That’s more than 400 million babies in the last 10 years alone. This is a question of enormous importance, and it deserves our special consideration.

“Since Christ died for all, and since all are in fact called to one and the same destiny, which is divine, we must hold that the Holy Spirit offers to all the possibility of being made partakers of the paschal mystery, in a way known to God.” This quote is taken from the Vatican Council II document “Joy and Hope” (No. 22). Read this quote again, and let it sink in.

Under the heading “The Necessity of Baptism,” in Pope John Paul II’s new Catholic catechism, we read, “As regards children who have died without baptism, the church can only entrust them to the mercy of God, as she does in her funeral rites for them.

“Indeed, the great mercy of God who desires that all ... should be saved, and Jesus’ tenderness toward children which caused him to say: ‘Let the children come to me, do not hinder them,’ (Mk. 10:14) allow us to hope that there is a way of salvation for children who have died without baptism.

“All the more urgent is the church’s call not to prevent little children coming to Christ through the gift of holy baptism” (No. 1261).

“The Lord himself affirms that baptism is necessary for salvation (Jn. 3:5). He also commands his disciples to proclaim the Gospel to all nations and to baptize them” (No. 1257).

“Every man who is ignorant of the Gospel of Christ and of his church, but seeks the truth and does the will of God in accordance with his understanding of it, can be saved. It may be supposed that such persons would have desired baptism explicitly if they had known its necessity” (No. 1260).

In other words, baptism is necessary for salvation, but there are different ways it is accomplished. The Holy Spirit elicits from the preborn a holy desire for God, in other words a baptism of desire. This is a beautiful and consoling thought.

The word “limbo” has disappeared from the more recent theological sources. I didn’t find it in the index of the new Catechism of the Catholic Church, nor was it listed as a category in the Encyclopedia of Catholicism.

The Catholic Almanac defines it this way: “The limbo of the fathers was the state of rest and natural happiness after death enjoyed by the just of pre-Christian times until they were admitted to heaven following the ascension of Christ.... This belief is implied in the Apostles’ Creed” (p. 318).

It always bothered me that innocent babies were in some way ineligible to receive the fullness of God’s love. Now I know better.

Catholics today do not have to believe in limbo. There is one place of eternal rest, and that is heaven. Jesus is in charge, and he says, “Let the little children come to me.”

For The Love Of The Brothers And The Sisters ...

By FATHER FRANK O'ROURKE
Greetings and peace!

As we celebrate the jubilee of the Diocese of Charlotte and Bishop Begley's ordination, I am reminded of how our retired bishop has always invited all of us to be "partners" with him in proclaiming the kingdom of God here in our little corner of the world.

His episcopal motto, "Diligimus Fratres," Latin for "We Have Loved the Brethren," expresses that at the heart of his ministry is a profound devotion to all of us, who are brothers and sisters in the Lord.

He indeed has a special way of making everyone feel invited, and he continues particularly to support vocations in the priesthood and religious life by his eagerness to listen and encourage. Bishop Begley is so fond of sharing his own experiences, and his story of being called to the priesthood as a missionary in North Carolina truly inspires us. He conveys his excitement about the Church's mission when he speaks with our seminarians of his personal history.

One of my fondest recollections of Bishop Begley stems from a simple statement he made years ago: "There I go but for the grace of God." He spoke those words with such honest humility, and he has always understood the dignity of every person. He truly has been a friend to all our seminarians, urging them to keep their faith and live their call to the priesthood.

I am invigorated by the bishop's sincerity, his openness, his acceptance of all people. He has been a great model all of us who have been privileged to share in ministry to the Diocese of Charlotte.

Just as Bishop Begley's own story began — his calling was nurtured in his parish community and through a family connection — so too are there stories to be written in our own lives. Let us all continue to build on his example by finding in our families and parishes those men possessing the gifts for priesthood that will share in keeping the treasure of faith alive in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Father Frank O'Rourke, pastor of Holy Family Church in Clemmons, is the director of vocations for the Diocese of Charlotte. He was ordained to the diocesan priesthood by Bishop Begley in 1975. For information on vocations in western North Carolina, call Father O'Rourke at (910) 766-1822.

Mother Teresa Decides To Step Down As Missionaries Of Charity Head

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa has said she will step down as superior general of the Missionaries of Charity, Archbishop Henry S. D'Souza of Calcutta announced Jan. 13.

"This time Mother Teresa has finally decided to leave the post of superior general, as her health is coming in her way," the archbishop said.

Missionaries of Charity nuns began arriving in Calcutta Jan. 13 to attend the order's chapter and to prepare for Feb. 2 elections for the order's next superior general and four councilors.

Jesuit Father Edward le Joly, spiritual advisor to the order for more than 30 years, said the 120 sisters in the order's electoral college are scheduled to begin a retreat Jan. 20. The Jesuit said the sisters need time to discuss candidates' qualities and to get acquainted before the election.

Reportedly, one of seven nuns — Sisters Frederick Lewis, Andreas Boenke, Priscilla Lewis, Agnes Das, Camellia Pereira, Dorothy Francis and Shanti D'Souza — may be the likely successor if Mother Teresa steps down.

The Missionaries of Charity constitution requires election of a superior general every six years by a representative electoral college of the order's members.

"The archbishop of Calcutta, Henry D'Souza, will direct the retreat and oversee the elections," said Father le Joly.

Mother Teresa was released from Calcutta's B.M. Birla Heart Research Center Dec. 19 after being treated for life-threatening heart problems and bronchitis.

"She is in very bad condition and this week she could not even go to chapel across her room in the Missionaries of Charity headquarters," Father le Joly said Jan. 11.

"There is no other choice. It would be foolish if Mother Teresa is re-elected ... The sisters will have to ask the Vatican for Teresa to continue, and the Vatican will not give permission," Father le Joly said.

Diocesan News Briefs

Bishop of Charleston Diocese to Lead Knights Retreat

FORT MILL, S.C. — Knights of Columbus across the region are being invited to congregate in camaraderie with Bishop David B. Thompson of the Diocese of Charleston, when the bishop will serve as master of a retreat Feb. 7-9 at the Radisson Grand Resort.

Bishop Thompson has served the Charleston Diocese as spiritual leader since February 1990. His fellow shepherd, Bishop William G. Curlin of Charlotte, called the retreat an occasion for Knights to share in their dedicated ministry.

"This retreat provides an excellent opportunity for the Knights of both Carolinas to come together in prayer and fraternity," Bishop Curlin said. The gathering is being sponsored by Fourth Degree George L. Gettier Assembly #780 of Charlotte.

The retreat begins with an 8 p.m. conference led by Bishop Thompson on Feb. 7, followed by the sacrament of reconciliation. Activities on Feb. 8 include the rosary, Mass, workshops led by the bishop, and a social. Participants conclude the retreat on Feb. 9 with Mass.

Participating Knights hope that both current and potential members of the order — and any men seeking spiritual nourishment — will take advantage of this enriching opportunity.

"One of the most beneficial events we have as Catholics is the 'retreat,'" said Ed Childers, past faithful navigator of Council #9560 at St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte. "It is the heritage of our faith which provides us with that time away from the worldly activities so we may reflect upon our God and renew our commitment to Him."

The cost for the retreat itself is $75. Send checks, payable to Knights of Columbus Retreat, to Msgr. Felix Kelaher at 7401 Ashfield Court, Charlotte, N.C. 28236. Please include your parish, council and telephone number with your correspondence. Traveling participants can make reservations for overnight stays at the hotel by calling (800) 374-1234. The Radisson Grand Resort is located at 9700 Regent Parkway, Fort Mill, S.C.

For further details, call Msgr. Kelaher, (704) 541-8679.

Catechists' Work Is The Teaching Work Of Jesus, Says Keynoter

NEW ORLEANS — The catechist's work is the teaching work of Jesus, and Christ will see that it gets done, said Carole Eipers, director of the Chicago Archdiocese's Office of Religious Education, in an address Jan. 10 at the annual Hofinger Conference. The conference drew catechists and religious educators from around the country to New Orleans Jan. 10-11 for workshops on spreading the Good News. "It's a tremendous challenge to you and me that we point always beyond ourselves to the Christ," Eipers said in her keynote address.

Ohio Diocese Prays, Sings To Open Millennium Celebration

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (CNS) — With pageantry, praise and prayerful worship, some 1,200 Catholics from across the Diocese of Youngstown joined in a nearly two-hour prayer service opening the three-year diocesan preparation for the third millennium of Christianity. Youngstown Bishop Thomas J. Tobin began his remarks at St. Columba Cathedral Jan. 5 by noting the large number of young Catholics at the gathering. "In a special way, the third millennium belongs to you," he told them. He pledged that the diocese would "work very hard in these next three years and into the millennium to come, to make the church as good and strong and purified and faithful as it can be because this church is your heritage."

Protestant Leader Joins Catholics In Vigil At Besieged Church

ARMAGH, Northern Ireland (CNS) — The head of Northern Ireland's largest Protestant fraternity took part in a vigil of solidarity Jan. 11 with Catholics whose church had been blockaded for 18 weeks. On the night of Jan. 11, Robert Saulters, grand master of the Orange Order, and other prominent Orangemen carried a banner reading "Orangemen support civil and religious liberty for all" at a vigil of solidarity outside Our Lady's Church in Harryville, County Antrim, while Mass was being celebrated. Our Lady's Church has been picketed by Loyalists, who are predominantly Protestant, in protest against the rerouting of parades by Protestant fraternities like the Orange Order. Parishioners have needed a police escort to make their way to Mass on Saturday nights, petrol bombs have been thrown at police and parishioners have been assaulted making their way to and from the church.

Parish Profile

MURPHY — In a state where today Catholics compose just 3 percent of the population, the faith was thriving even in the western extremes of North Carolina more than 60 years ago.

In 1936, one Father Lane assumed the pastorate of the Waynesville parish of St. John Church. The parish included the seven westernmost counties in the state. Father Lane offered a weekly lecture series at the Cherokee County Courthouse in Murphy for two months in 1937, after which several other Diocese of Raleigh priests periodically offered Masses in Murphy.

A resident's home, a funeral parlor, a theater and a hotel dining room all served as sites for Masses in Murphy over the years. In the early 1950s, local parishioners — with St. John pastor Father Lawrence Newman — began a church building campaign. A call for help was issued to all the families across the nation with the surname Murphy to assist in building a Catholic church in the mountain town. The campaign raised $5,000, which the Catholic Extension Society doubled with a matching contribution.

Construction was underway in 1952, and the new St. William Catholic Church, including a parish hall and priest's living quarters, was dedicated by Bishop Waters in August of that year.

In December 1954, Glenmary Father Joseph Dean became the first Glenmary Home Missioner to serve the parish. Father Dean — the first resident pastor of Cherokee County — and his successors went to the work of evangelizing throughout the western mountain region of North Carolina. They established several missions during the 1950s and '60s, including Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in Hayesville, which today remains in the pastoral care of St. William parish.

Sisters of Providence of Holyoke, Mass., arrived in Murphy at the invitation of Father Dean in January 1956. They managed and staffed Petrie Hospital, which was blessed and dedicated as Providence Hospital by Bishop Waters in November 1956. The Sisters remained in Murphy until 1978.

Glenmary Sisters also served the area starting in 1958. They established a home nursing service — today's Good Shepherd Home Health & Hospice Agency — and assisted in fervent missionary work.

St. William parish and the surrounding Catholic population continued to grow markedly during the 1960s into the late '80s. The Glenmary Missioners offered their spiritual leadership to many people, and were instrumental in evangelizing, educating and ministering to mountain folk across the western extremes of the state. Churches were built or enlarged, a Bible Center was constructed, a parish in Andrews was established, and a pastoral center was opened to instruct Glenmary priests and brothers.

In autumn of 1984, at the earlier direction of the Diocese of Charlotte's founding shepherd, Bishop Michael Be-gley, ground was broken for a new church in Murphy. The new St. William Church, complete with a parish hall and offices, hosted its first Mass on Christmas Eve, 1985. Almost 300 people attended then-Bishop John Donoghue's dedication ceremony in April 1986.

Father Bernard Manley in June 1987 became the first diocesan priest to serve as pastor of St. William parish. He remained until June 1991, when Father Edmund Kirsch, current pastor, succeeded him.

The Catholic population continues to grow in Cherokee County, with dozens of visiting faithful from Florida and elsewhere spending their summer months in the mountains. As a member of the Cherokee County Ministerial Association, Father Kirsch strives to maintain a healthy spirit of ecumenism as well in the western mountains.

BISHOP BEGLEY'S COAT OF ARMS

The coat of arms chosen by Bishop Michael J. Begley expresses his love, service and dedication to the people of the Diocese of Charlotte.

His motto, "Diligimus Fratres," symbolizes his love for others. The New American Bible translation of the phrase is "We have loved the brethren."

The shield itself is divided into quarters: two blue and two green, each containing a silver symbol. The upper left quarter shows a Celtic cross to symbolize the bishop's Irish ancestry.

The upper right quarter holds a bird designed by Mercy Sister Theophane, who constructed the coat of arms. The animal is a composite of three different kinds of birds: the dove to represent the Holy Spirit; the raven, a symbol for St. Benedict; and the eagle for St. John the Evangelist. A red band at the base of the quarter contains a bread basket and rolls to signify Catholic Social Services.

The lower right quarter shows a tower with a parapet, a symbol found in the Begley family's coat of arms and also found on the old orphanage building of Nazareth, where the bishop once served as director. The tower also represents the Virgin Mary's titles "Tower of David" and "Tower of Ivory."

The fourth quarter on the lower left holds a crown that signifies the Queen City of Charlotte, the see city of the diocese. A band of silver below the crown shows eight ermine marks which, according to the Manual of Heraldry, signifies dignity. For Bishop Begley those marks also signify his eight years of involvement in the Cursillo movement.

Across the bottom of the coat of arms is a scroll upon which his motto appears. Bishop Begley retains his seal. A new bishop for the diocese will designate his own seal at the time of his installation.

About the Artist:

John Rosato, a native of New York, developed an interest in portraiture at an early age.

Starting with sketches of his sports heroes, he developed his skills during Catholic elementary and high school. During his senior year at Chaminade High on Long Island, he was admitted into the advanced placement program in fine art at St. John University in Queens.

He proceeded in his studies at State University of New York, Oswego College, where he graduated with a bachelor of fine arts degree. He went on to join Mendola Artists as an illustrator, and his talent also earned him jobs with publishers and a variety of other companies.

Rosato moved to North Carolina in 1991, and maintains a studio in Kernersville where he accepts commissions for commercial and portraiture work.

After meeting with Bishop William G. Curlin in April 1996, Rosato was commissioned to paint a portrait of retired Bishop Michael J. Begley.

His oil portrait of Bishop Begley, as seen on the cover of this section, was completed in the age-old tradition of Da Vinci and Michelangelo. He began with a line drawing on paper, transferred it to linen, and finished the painting with a series of burnt sienna and burnt umber washes followed by layers of dark to light colors.

Rosato is a member of the American Society of Portrait Artists and is a parishioner of Holy Cross Church in Kernersville.

BEFORE THE FORMATION OF THE DIOCESE OF CHARLOTTE IN 1972, THE LATE BISHOP VINCENT S. WATERS WOULD REGULARLY TRAVEL 2,400 MILES THROUGHOUT NORTH CAROLINA TO VISIT the parishes and missions in his far-flung Diocese of Raleigh. Between the two farthest points in the state — Murphy (in the westernmost corner) to Manteo (on the Outer Banks) — the span is 450 miles.

With the exception of the area under the jurisdiction of the Benedictine abbot of Belmont Abbey, North Carolina was one diocese. By the early 1970s, that jurisdiction of the Benedictines — which had once covered much of the state — had diminished to cover only Gaston County.

North and South Carolina originally were part of the Diocese of Charleston, serving about 5,000 Catholics with 17 churches and 16 priests. The Second Council of Baltimore in 1866 proposed to the Holy See the designation of North Carolina as a vicariate. It remained a vicariate for almost 60 years.

It was the consecration of William Joseph Hafey on Dec. 5, 1925, as first bishop of Raleigh that began the journey to the future of the Catholic Church in North Carolina. The youngest bishop in the United States at the time, Bishop Hafey served as bishop for the state until 1937, when he became the bishop of Scranton, Pa.

Bishop Eugene J. McGuinness was appointed as his successor, and served the state from 1937 until his taking over the Oklahoma-Tulsa diocese in 1944.

In 1945, Bishop Waters was installed as third bishop of Raleigh. It was under his direction that the formation of a second North Carolina diocese was accomplished.

Shortly before the bishops met in Rome for the 1971 synod, Pope Paul VI said it was his intention to divide the larger dioceses of the world into smaller units, "on human scale." Pope Paul's desire was to make the office of bishop more pastoral than administrative.

On Nov. 30, 1971, Bishop Waters wrote a letter to Catholics in North Carolina announcing, "Our Holy Father, Pope Paul VI, through the Most Reverend Apostolic Delegate, has made known to us that he has in mind very soon to erect from the territory of the Diocese of Raleigh, a new Diocese of Charlotte. He has chosen the first bishop of the prospective Diocese of Charlotte, our own Reverend Monsignor Michael J. Begley, pastor of Our Lady of Grace parish, Greensboro, North Carolina."

The new diocese would encompass the 46 western counties of North Carolina from Reidsville and Hamlet in the east to the Tennessee state line in the west. It also would include the territory formerly under the jurisdiction of Belmont Abbey.

And so, on Jan. 12, 1972, the Diocese of Charlotte was born. Bishop Michael J. Begley was ordained as the first bishop for the new diocese. By coincidence, Bishop Begley is a cousin of Bishop Hafey, first bishop of Raleigh.

At the formation of the Diocese of Charlotte in 1972, statistics showed a Catholic population of 34,255 with 39 diocesan priests, 27 religious priests and 249 sisters, which included Sacred Heart Motherhouse of the Sisters of Mercy in Belmont. There were 53 parishes and 22 missions.
